Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution, adopted by the Bar Association of Puerto Rico, relative to two citizenship bills pending which I introduced, and also several very short pertinent statements made by Hon. Henry L. Stimson, the late Elihu Root, Dr. Ernest Gruening, and Col. William Cattron Rigby in behalf of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the special order of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], today I may be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman mind putting that over until after the other business. There are two little bills and I do not think they are very controversial and will not take very much time.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is why I thought I would like to follow the gentleman from New Jersey. My remarks parallel with his. I thought it would just take a short time on those matters.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would rather the gentleman would wait until we dispose of these other matters.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will compromise with the gentleman. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that after the disposition of the two matters referred to by the gentleman from Texas, I may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman means after the business of the day?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts modifies his request to ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the business on the calendar today he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE TO SIT DURING THE SESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture may be permitted to sit during the session of the House this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENDING TIME FOR NATURALIZATION TO ALIEN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to file a supplemental report on the bill (H. R. 4291) to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, April 15, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the business on the Speaker's desk I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I made a simple request the other day and the gentleman objected, and it looked as if it was out of pure cussedness. If the gentleman still feels that way about it I will object, but if he wants to play fair with me, very well.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I did not object to anyone on account of pure cussedness, nor would I. The request made by the gentleman from Oklahoma, as I understood it, was to insert in the RECORD a speech made by a college professor. If the gentleman will ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing [Mr. LAMBETH] for whom I have the greatest respect, and ascertains that that is in accordance with the rules of the House, I will not object. I give the gentleman my word on that, and it applies equally to any other Member. I am only trying to carry out the rules of the House as laid down for the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I do not take very much time of the House, and while I have a high opinion of Mr. LAMBETH, I do not think I should see him when I want to put something in the RECORD. A college professor, a man who used to be my teacher, sent me a brief newspaper article that I wanted to put in the RECORD with my own statement. That is all there was to my request. Personally, I do not care what any Member puts in the RECORD. I think a Member should be allowed to put in the RECORD anything he is willing to stand for and defend.

Mr. RICH. I do not make the rules. If the gentleman will present his request to the chairman of the Committee on Printing, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH], and get his consent, I shall not object.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. It would be too late to see Mr. LAMBETH now even if I care to do so, because soon after my request was objected to by you one of the Senators got hold of the article in question and inserted it in the RECORD. So nothing was gained by your objection. The only thing you accomplished was to keep my own remarks out of the RECORD, while you continue with much speech making, but I will overlook that, and Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the gentleman's request.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not think there is any question but what many of the objections of our friend from Pennsylvania are capricious objections. It is not in any way against the rules of the House to put in the speech of a college professor, or of a Chinaman, or of anybody else. Each Member is the judge of what he puts in the RECORD. There is nothing in the rules relating to the printing of the RECORD that would prohibit including such matter. As I say, Mr. Speaker, many of the objections made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania are capricious. The gentleman talks a great deal, and he ought not to object to extensions by those of us who do not take much of the time of the House in making speeches.

Mr. SNELL. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Was my request objected to?

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was objected to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman kindly withhold his point of order until the Chair can recognize two or three Members to submit unanimous-consent requests?

Mr. RICH. I will withhold it for that purpose, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by the Honorable John H. Clarke, the only living ex-Justice of the United States Supreme Court, given on the occasion of a Nation-wide radio broadcast emanating from San Diego, Calif., on March 22, 1937.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on his point of order?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, April 15, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 53, providing for a continuance of the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition in the State of Ohio in 1937, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States continue its participation in the Great Lakes Exposition in the State of Ohio during the year 1937.

SEC. 2. The provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes", approved April 25, 1936, are hereby extended and made applicable to the continuance of the participation of the United States in such exposition in 1937.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this resolution, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $175,000, which shall be in addition to the unexpended balance of the sum heretofore appropriated for carrying out the provisions of such joint resolution of April 25, 1936.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, the matter which I desire to discuss today is of such a controversial nature that I respectfully request I be not interrupted or requested to yield until I have finished my statement, at which time I will be glad to yield if there is any time remaining.

Mr. Speaker, it is now evident that as a result of the action of a majority of the membership of this House, consisting principally of those affiliated with the Democratic Party, H. R. 1507, known as the antilynching bill, will soon be considered and I have asked for this limited time to discuss its provisions and the merits thereof.

According to fictional traditions the ghost of the lamented Banquo will not down and so again in the form of this obnoxious legislation it rears its ugly head to haunt now those who oppose it and to haunt forever hereafter those who support it should it ever become the law of the land.

I represent in part the people of the great State of Tennessee, the sixteenth State of this great Union, and which was a part of the original settlement of colonies before the Union of States came into existence. It is a great State populated by a great people who are law abiding and who strive under the judicial processes laid down in their constitution and code to enforce the laws with even-handed justice and to protect the rich and poor, regardless of color or creed, alike. They abhor lynching, mob violence, and disrespect for law with every moral sentiment that wells within their kindly hearts and I share this feeling with them. I do not sanction lynching and nothing I may say here shall be construed to the contrary. As an evidence of the fact that my State cannot be justly accused of failing to provide to every person due process of law or that degree of protection guaranteed to persons within its jurisdiction by the Constitution of the United States I call your attention to the fact that, under our code of laws, murder is a capital offense, carrying a sentence of death by electrocution. In addition to this, section 11068 of our code provides that it shall be a felony punishable by from 3 to 21 years imprisonment in the penitentiary and by full judgment of infamy and disqualification for two or more persons to enter into any conspiracy to take human life or to engage in any act calculated to cause the loss of life of any individual or to inflict punishment upon any individual. But this is not all. Under section 697 it is provided that—

Any sheriff who, either negligently or willfully, or by want of proper diligence, firmness, and promptness in the use of all the powers with which he is vested by law, allows a prisoner to be taken from the jail of his county or from his custody, and put to death by violence, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor in office, and upon indictment therefor and conviction thereof, shall be fined at the discretion of the court, and shall also, by the judgment of the court, forfeit his office and be declared forever incapable of holding any office of trust or profit in the State.

He has statutory authority to summon the body of his county for aid in preserving peace. Should he fail to discharge his duty in this respect the district attorney may officially file a bill of indictment against him without the formality of a prosecutor.

As a result of the rigid enforcement of these statutes, Tennessee has been remarkably free from lynchings. The record speaks for itself. Of course, there have been some offenses just as there have been in nearly every other State, but the same thing may be said of all other crime. Laws do not stop murder, larceny, kidnaping, arson, or rape. They simply deter would-be offenders, and each State must take care of those who violate local statutes.

You may wonder why reference is made to conditions in my State in a discussion of this proposed law and without going into the motives of those who are pressing this legislation and avoiding any personal criticism of them let me say frankly that it is done because all of us know that this law is directed at the South—the Southern States—and I merely want to point out that, as far as my own State is concerned, it needs no alleged remedial or corrective Federal statute which through unconstitutional provisions seeks to compel it to do something which it is already doing in a creditable manner.

This bill—H. R. 1507—is a reincarnation of the Dyer Act introduced in the Sixty-seventh Congress, with some added embellishments, making it just as impossible. It is entitled "A bill to assure persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching." It proposes to stop mob violence, and I would like to point out and comment briefly on its provisions.

Section 1 defines "mob or riotous assemblage" as an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, to injure or kill any person in the custody of any peace officer, with the purpose or consequence of depriving such person of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws.

Section 2 is the "green light" or "go ahead" section, informing the courts that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution justifies this legislation and provides that if any State fails, neglects, or refuses to protect the life or person of any individual against a mob either by preventing or punishing the acts of such mob such State shall be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and equal protection of the law.

Without the flicking of an intermediate "yellow light" for clearing the way, sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 flash "red", telling you and me to stop and think long and well before acting on this measure.

Section 3 provides first that any officer of a State charged with the duty of protecting the life of any individual who is put to death by a mob or having such individual in his custody fails to make all diligent efforts to protect him shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or both, and secondly, that any State officer having in his custody a prisoner who shall conspire with any person who is a member of a mob to injure or kill said prisoner or to suffer such prisoner to be taken from his custody to be so treated, together with those who conspire with him shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not less than 5 nor more than 25 years.

Section 4 gives the District Court of the United States of the district in which such person is injured or killed jurisdiction to try and punish in accordance with the laws of the State where the offense is committed, provided it appears that State officers whose duty it is to apprehend and punish such offender have failed to do so or that jurors obtainable in the State courts where the case is to be tried are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability the offenders will not be punished in the State courts. If such offender is not apprehended or indicted or prosecuted within 30 days after the crime is committed, such failure shall constitute prima-facie evidence of failure, neglect, or refusal to do so.

Section 5 renders any county in which such crime occurs liable to such injured person or his representative for a sum between two and ten thousand dollars and provides the method of recovering such damages.

Section 6 provides that in the event such injured person is transported from one county to another after seizure and before death both counties shall be jointly and severally liable.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill and its every provision, because it so flagrantly violates the Constitution of the United States, and because, in my judgment, it will defeat the very thing it seeks to accomplish. It proposes to extend the power of the Federal Government to the supervision of the enforcement of the criminal laws of the States. It is a wide departure from the original conception of the character of this Republic, the rights of the sovereign States, and the limitations upon the powers of the Federal Government. When our Constitution was written, no citizen ever dreamed that such a proposal would ever be made in the Congress of the United States. The States created this Union and they reserved some rights to themselves. With their consent, these rights have been limited in some respects; but the rights remaining are still sacred, and as a Representative of a part of a great State I consider it my duty under my oath and pursuant to the great trust reposed in me by the people of my district to preserve the rights which remain to the State insofar as I am able.

Under the Constitution in its original form, no man who has even so much as read it will contend that Congress had any lawful authority to enact into law such a bill as this. It will be argued here that this bill comes within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution and is therefore valid. I think a careful study of that amendment, its history, and the interpretations of it by the courts will convince you, as it has me, that such is not the case.

This amendment reads as follows:

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

This amendment only served to enjoin the States from passing laws discriminating between citizens or denying to any person equal protection of the laws. The Constitution in its original form only limited acts of Congress and was a limitation upon the States. This amendment permits Congress to correct unjust or discriminatory laws of the States and require laws which operate equally and alike upon all citizens. It was never intended nor has it ever been construed to operate as a limitation upon individuals. When the fourteenth amendment was proposed, James G. Blaine, then a Member of Congress, said:

This amendment operates as an inhibition upon the power of the State and does not have reference to those irregular acts of the people which find no authorization in public statutes.

We do not have to depend upon our own views or those of other individuals in order to ascertain what this amendment means. The Supreme Court of the United States has settled the question, and its decisions leave no doubt about the inability of Congress to deal with the question of lynching as is done in the bill before us.

In the case of Keller v. United States (213 U. S. 138) the Supreme Court held that the Federal Government has no police power, that such power is reserved to the States, and it alone could punish a person keeping a house of ill fame within the State. In this case the Court approved against the statement of Cooley that—

The power to establish ordinary police regulations has been left with the individual States and cannot be assumed by the National Government.

In Barbier v. Connolly (113 U. S. 27) the Court said:

But neither the amendment, broad and comprehensive as it is, nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the power of the State, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people * * *.

Let me call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the case of United States v. Harris (106 U. S. 638). Here we find this explanation of the purpose and effect of the "due process of law" and "equal protection of law" clauses of the fourteenth amendment:

The purpose and effect of the two sections of the fourteenth amendment were clearly defined in the case of United States v. Cruikshank (1 Woods 308) as follows: It is a guaranty against the acts of the State government itself. It is a guaranty against the execution of arbitrary and tyrannical power on the part of the Government and legislature of the State, not a guaranty against the commission of individual offenses; and the power of Congress, whether express or implied, to legislate for the enforcement of such a guaranty does not extend to the passage of laws for the suppression of crime within the States. The enforcement of the guaranty does not require or authorize Congress to perform the duty that the guaranty itself supposes it to be the duty of the State to perform and which it requires the State to perform.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GREEVER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to answer questions during this additional time, if granted?

Mr. PEARSON. If I can finish my prepared statement.

Mr. MOTT. How much time does the gentleman need to finish?

Mr. PEARSON. I think I can finish within 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GAVAGAN and Mr. MOTT rose.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he will answer a question of mine?

Mr. PEARSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, there has been a reservation made to object until the gentleman has been interrogated. The gentleman was asked to yield for a question.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEARSON. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman said that the Federal Government would have no right under the fourteenth amendment to do the thing which it is proposed to do in this bill. Is it not a fact that the constitutionality of the proposal is based upon authority given in the fifth amendment instead of the fourteenth amendment, which says nothing about the passage of State law that guarantees to a citizen of the United States the right to life and liberty and declares he may not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law?

Mr. PEARSON. The same construction of the Supreme Court will apply to the language used in that amendment with as equal, if not greater, force as applies to the language in the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. MOTT. The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from passing a law which would deprive a citizen of life or property. The fifth amendment simply guarantees to a citizen that right and declares he shall not be deprived of it without due process of law.

Mr. PEARSON. There is no provision made in there for control of individual offenses. If the gentleman will let me proceed, I think I will cover the point he has raised.

When the Cruikshank case was decided—in Ninety-second United States Reports, page 542—the Court said:

> The fourteenth amendment prohibits a State from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or from denying to any person equal protection of the law, but this provision does not add anything to the rights of one citizen as against another. It simply furnishes an additional guarantee against any encroachment by the State upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society. The duty of protecting all its citizens in the enjoyment of an equality of rights was originally assumed by the States, and it remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, and no more. The power of the National Government is limited to this guarantee.

I urge you to read the opinion of the Court in what is known as the Slaughter House cases. The fourteenth amendment was here fully treated and construed, and the Court's opinion can leave no doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that Congress is without the power to regulate, control, and administer the criminal or civil laws of any State further than to require them to deal with all men alike.

The Court said in part:

> Was it the purpose of the fourteenth amendment by the simple declaration that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States to transfer the security and protection of rights which we have mentioned to the Federal Government? And where it declared that Congress shall have the power to enforce that article, was it intended to bring within the power of Congress the entire domain of civil rights heretofore belonging exclusively to the States?
> All this and more must follow if the proposition of the plaintiff is sound.
> For not only are these rights subject to the control of Congress whenever in its discretion any of them are supposed to be abridged by State legislation but that body may also pass laws in advance limiting and restricting the exercise of power by the States in their most ordinary and usual functions, as in its judgment it may think proper on all such subjects and still further such construction would constitute this Court a perpetual censor upon all legislation of the States on the civil rights of their own citizens, with authority to nullify such as it did not approve, as consistent with those rights as existed at the time of the adoption of this amendment. The argument, we admit, is not always the most conclusive which is drawn from the consequences urged against the adoption of a particular construction of an instrument. But when, as in the case before us, those consequences are so serious, so far reaching and pervading, so great a departure from the structure and spirit of our institutions, when the effect is to fetter and degrade the State governments by subjecting them to the control of Congress in the exercise of powers heretofore universally conceded to them of the most ordinary and fundamental character, when in fact it radically changes the whole theory of the relations of the State and Federal Governments to each other and of both these Governments to the people, the argument has a force that is irresistible in the absence of language which expresses such a purpose too clearly to admit of doubt.
> It would be the vainest show of learning to prove by citation of authority that up to the adoption of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments no claim was set up that those rights depended on the Federal Government for their existence or protection beyond the very express limitations which the Federal Constitution imposed on the States, such, for instance, as the prohibition against ex post facto laws, bills of attainder and laws impairing the obligation of contracts. But with the exception of these and a few other restrictions the entire domain of privileges of citizens of the States, as above defined, lies within the constitutional and legislative powers of the State and without that of the Federal Government.

Finally the Supreme Court, in the Civil Rights cases (109 U. S. 3), cleared away all doubts as to the meaning of the language of the fourteenth amendment and its effect.

In those cases the Court held that it is State action of a particular character that is prohibited. The Court said:

> Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the amendment. It has a deeper and broader scope. It nullifies and makes void all State legislation and State action of every kind which impairs the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States or which injures them in life, liberty, or property without due process of law or which denies to any of them the equal protection of the law. To adopt appropriate legislation for correcting the effects of such prohibited State laws and State acts and thus to render them ineffectually null, void, and innocuous—this is the legislative power conferred upon the Congress, and this is the whole of it.

I have searched all of the authorities, Mr. Speaker, bearing upon this subject, and I find no authority or justification in any of them for this legislation; not even in the case of Ex Parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), which will be relied upon by proponents. It goes far beyond the purpose and intention of any provision of the Constitution and the fourteenth amendment and violates the very essence of our dual form of government which the Constitution created and which must never be destroyed.

So it appears, Mr. Speaker, that it has been convincingly and unmistakably laid down by the highest authority that the provisions of the fourteenth amendment apply to State action and not to individual action. The denial of equal protection of the law means a denial of such right by the State, and acts of citizens which might result in such a denial are not controllable by the Federal Government, and the States cannot be penalized or held responsible for such acts.

I say again I abhor and loathe lynching and mob violence. I will go as far as anyone to protect innocent and helpless people from such unlawful acts, but it must be done in a lawful, effective way. I am not willing to join in this effort to absolutely destroy the Constitution which protects us all, deprive the States of this Union of their right to govern their respective affairs, and place upon the Federal Government the duty and responsibility of enforcing and administering every State statute enacted for the purpose of preventing crime.

Remember, I beg of you, that the Constitution was builded for the ages, and we cannot destroy it for a particular purpose, in this instance, without the effects of our action eventually being brought home to us in the years to come in every section of this Union.

We cannot, for the sake of expediency or for the purpose of paying someone's political debts and obligations, strike down the supports of the basic law of the land and thereby destroy the very fabric of the laws which binds us together in an indissoluble union of States.

Abraham Lincoln once said:

No man who has sworn to support the Constitution can conscientiously vote for what he understands to be an unconstitutional measure, however expedient he may think it.

Today you are confronted with that very responsibility. Remember your oaths, consider this measure and its ruthless disregard for the instrument which you took on oath to support without reservation, and help defeat this measure. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. EATON. The gentleman did not ask me, so I do not believe I will.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by one of my colleagues, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], on the subject of a civil-rights bill which he has pending in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time granted me by courtesy of the House, I wish to explore and expound a text taken from an inspired utterance of St. James Farley. [Laughter.] These inspired words were spoken before a gathering of the faithful at Spring Valley, N. Y., on the 3d day of April, and were reported without revision or contradiction in the metropolitan press on the succeeding day. I now quote my text, beloved brethren:

Before I close—

Said Mr. Farley—

I want to say this about the Supreme Court fuss. We have let the Senate talk all it wants. Then the House will take up the question and there will be considerable talk there. After they have all finished talking, we will call the roll. We have plenty of votes to put this over.

I have no doubt the august assemblage at the other end of this building will find suitable terms in which to express its gratitude for the privilege accorded it by the distinguished Postmaster General to talk, an unusual privilege for them. We in this House, being in the opinion of Mr. Farley but poor worms of the dust, are not granted that privilege in exact terms. But it is implied in the legislation that we may ally ourselves with the "Supreme Court fuss" and talk a little until St. James concludes that the psychological moment has arrived; then "we will call the roll."

I know how inadequate on my part any attempt to preview this last roll call of Congress would be, but I am going to try to do it for your delectation this morning. I want to see and I want my colleagues to see the precipice toward which we are headed.

It will, because of the snail's pace at which we have been discharging our duties to the public here for the last 3 months, probably occur on a sweaty day in August or September. The distinguished House leader will move a call of the House, or, in his absence, probably our distinguished friend, Mr. MAVERICK, of Texas, the happy stepfather of the bill [laughter], will make the motion, and then our beloved and honored friend, Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania, field marshal of the "battalions of death" [laughter], will march his disciplined and trained troops onto the floor and place them where they can be reached.

Of course, our distinguished and able Speaker, whom I love as a dear friend, will not be there, because, symbolizing, as he does, the dignity, authority, and power of this assemblage, it will be necessary for him, if Mr. Farley takes charge, to absent himself voluntarily or otherwise.

So now I enter the very holy of holies of my text, beloved brethren. Who are or who is "we"? Of course, Mr. Farley will be there. But "we" is plural. I cannot conceive of a gentleman of the known modesty of Mr. Farley using "we" either in the editorial, the pontifical, or the magisterial, or regal sense. For instance, Queen Victoria, when she heard somebody say something she did not like, was wont to squelch the speaker with this phrase, "We are not amused." Mr. Farley cannot mean that. He must have company.

At this point I would like to call your attention to an appropriate song we could sing. It was announced by an old preacher who had just two gestures, one up and one down. He always announced his hymns by lines. His hand went up with the first line and down with the second. One day he said, "Brethren, we will sing Hymn No. 29, 'When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder [raising his hand], I'll Be There'" [lowering his hand]. That is where we will be. [Laughter.]

Of course, Mr. Farley could be pardoned for using the pronoun "we" in reference to his own triple personality and functions. It might connote the Postmaster General, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and the chairman of the New York State committee. That is, indeed, a trinity of power. But there will be others present, and I am going to picture them to you:

Here stands Mr. Farley. Next to him, of course, will stand Mr. Hopkins, who has millions of the taxpayers' money in his jeans to distribute where they will do the most good. Next to him will stand Mr. Ickes, that stalwart and lifelong Republican, and Democrat, and New Dealer, and Progressive, and Conservative. [Laughter.] He has just lately returned from a missionary journey in the South, where he has been advising southern Democrats as to the proper principles of Jeffersonian Democracy. Then next to him I think we can discern the genial and seductive figure of the Under Secretary of the Interior, Mr. West, whose duty it is to explore, mollify, modify, and conserve the "interior" of Congressmen.

Then back of this front line, of course, will appear very modestly the heavenly twins of the New Deal, Messrs. Corcoran and Cohen, who wrote this bill 15 months ago, I understand, but were told to keep it dark until after election. Then lingering in the offing will, of course, be Judge Rosenman, the trusted legal advisor of the President, and our own dear Attorney General, to see that this historic roll call is put through in a legal and constitutional manner.

Now, "we will call the roll." As this glorious diapason of "we" voices rolls out, and the names of the Members are called, there will come to each of us a psychic whisper, like some strange astral ventriloquism, "Vote the way you are commanded, you poor worm, or else."

After it is all over and the death sentence of representative government in this country has been duly signed, sealed, and delivered, it will be out of place to close an event of such dignity and honor without some vocal expression of the noble feelings engendered thereby. In the gallery over the clock sits old John Citizen and his wife. I hear him in a loud, far-carrying whisper express the unbiased opinion of the citizens of this country of a performance of this kind, "Mary, ain't statesmanship grand?" [Laughter.]

Then Mr. Farley, the puissant St. James, before he pronounces the benediction and takes up the collection, will call on us to rise, and we will sing together:

My country 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee we sing;
Land where our fathers died,
Land of the Pilgrims' pride,
From every mountain side—

Including the House of Representatives—

Let freedom ring.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I have time enough to apply this, because a sermon without concrete application is wasted ammunition. I am going now to put on a few "arousements." [Laughter.]

I am opposed to the proposal referred to by Mr. Farley as the "Supreme Court fuss" for two main reasons, each of them branching out into many others. First, I am a citizen of the United States, which I consider God's best gift of opportunity to the common man and to the uncommon man as well, and with the present uncertainty and unrest and class consciousness and hatred and all kinds of trouble coming over the horizon, I think it is most unfortunate, to say the least, for the President of the United States in his high office to raise a question as to the validity and force of law affecting the foundations of our civilization, and the integrity and independence of the courts of law appointed under the Constitution to interpret the same.

I am opposed to this proposal because I am a Member of the House of Representatives. I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, how this magnificent body has reached such low estate in the minds of the "hierarchy" at the other end of the Avenue, and the public generally. I have been associated all my life, although you might hardly think it, with groups of fine high-minded people in business, in industry, in education, in religion, in journalism, in politics, and I have said a hundred times on the platforms of this country that I have never been associated with a group of men and women of a higher average level of intelligence, integrity, and character than my fellow Members of the House of Representatives here in Washington.

This was true when we Republicans were in power. It is true when you Democrats are in power. Why, Mr. Speaker, we can furnish out of our membership today half a dozen colleges in this country with magnificently equipped faculties. We can furnish the courts, including the highest in the land, with competent judges. We can furnish business with some few "malefactors of great wealth", and even with some "princes of privilege." We could furnish American labor with sound and adequate leadership. We have enormous resources of brain and character.

Consider, for example, the gentleman who presides with such dignity, ability, and fairness as the Speaker of this House. I would like to see him President of this country. He is a man of power, a man of character, the equal of any of this Nation's best in any party or any section. [Applause.]

Talk about men and women of this caliber and character being rabbits and mice and rubber stamps. What in the name of God has happened to us to have suffered such a moral and intellectual collapse as to make it possible for Jim Farley to stand up and say, "We will call the roll." I resent that. I deplore it as a national calamity.

I am just a voice crying in the wilderness over here among the scattered remnants of the people of God [laughter and applause]; but that is my view, spoken as a citizen.

I have here a book called Heaven or Hell, written by our distinguished colleague, LOUIS LUDLOW, and in this book he points out the amazing and dangerous and unconstitutional subservience of this Congress to the will of the Executive. I do not know exactly where Louis locates the Congress, whether in heaven or hell [laughter], but he does point out that out of 77 major laws passed in the first 4 years of Mr. Roosevelt's administration, only 18 of them originated here, where all ought to have originated, while 59 had an illegitimate birth conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity somewhere downtown and were brought up here, and the bastards laid on our doorstep with the command of the Executive that we acknowledge parentage. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey may be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. So, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a Member of this House. I hope its political complexion may change somewhat next year, but whether it does or not, I am an American first, and I have as many friends on this side of the aisle as I have over here—perhaps more [laughter]; and I deplore the attitude of cynicism and arrogance toward Congress and the courts now assumed by the executive section of our Government.

I am opposed to this Supreme Court proposal because the President brings it up here absolutely without notice and without having consulted, apparently, one of our leaders, and lays it on our doorstep, and if we pass it then we become responsible for all the evil with which it is packed.

I have taken an oath, and so have you, to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and if we were to agree to this proposal and legislate to pack the Supreme Court with men prepromised, prearranged to vote proposals originating in the Executive section, as constitutional, whether they are constitutional or not, then everyone of us who casts such a vote has violated his oath.

I am in favor of any amendment, in accord with the Constitution itself, which the people desire, and I have no interest in the argument that we cannot write an amendment. If we cannot write an amendment, then the amendment ought not to be written; and if we do write an amendment, the argument of the Executive is it will take a long time before it can become law. That is the very genius of our constitutional form of Government, that necessary changes will take a long time to effect, so we may make no mistake, under the urge of passion or fear. And if it does take a long time, it is said, the Republicans will defeat it. Well, if there are enough Republicans to defeat such a proposal emanating from this great majority at this time I will say, "Thank God; I see signs of returning sanity among the American people." [Laughter and applause.]

I advise you all to read Heaven or Hell and then solemnly vow that from now on we as Members of Congress are going to discharge our constitutional obligations to the people of this country. They say the President represents the whole country. Well, so do you. There is not a man or woman here but what represents every man, woman, and child in the United States of America. In local matters we may rightfully be governed by local considerations, but when any large question, affecting the welfare of all the people, comes before us, whether we are there or here, Republicans or Democrats, Progressives or Conservatives, we ought to ask only one question: Is this good for the United States of America as a whole? If it is I will vote for it, and if it is not I will vote against it, regardless of the threat of any pressure group here or hereafter. [Long, continued applause.]

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] arose on the floor of the House yesterday and made the statement that I had violated the rules of the House in extending my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Wednesday over his objections. For the information of the House, and since I was detained at the telephone at the time the gentleman made his assertion, I desire to state that the RECORD of Wednesday shows conclusively that I was given permission to extend my remarks.

At the time I requested such permission the gentleman from Illinois made the statement that he objected to the inclusion of the three telegrams I had received from my district advocating passage of the Gavagan antilynching bill. He did not object to my extending my remarks, and so stated. The telegrams in question did not go into the RECORD, and the gentleman's objections, therefore, were met. In the gentleman's remarks of yesterday he states that I put into the RECORD a document without the permission of the House. My address on antilynching legislation does not contain any documents, and I am at a loss to understand just what the Member from Illinois has in mind.

In his remarks the gentleman stated that my actions in extending my remarks on antilynching legislation and merely referring to telegrams I had received advocating passage of the Gavagan antilynching bill was characteristic of the propaganda that has been used which resulted in the defeat of his bill. The telegrams in question were received from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Buffalo Chapter, and the Buffalo Young Women's Christian Association. I believe both of these organizations are nationally known and enjoy an excellent reputation in the civic and social life of our country.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEITER. I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

REHABILITATION LOANS BY FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 174.

House Resolution 174

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1228, a bill to amend the National Housing Act. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, of the 1 hour allowed on this rule I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, the rule before the House pertains to Senate bill 1228, which extends section 6 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended. That section went out of effect on April 1. All this bill does is to extend the activities of the Government in securing loans to banks and other financial institutions. Under the act as it now exists the Federal Government can guarantee loans made by financial institutions to individuals for the purpose of repairing real estate or rehabilitating themselves, and the Government insures 10 percent of the total amount of those loans. This act will change that proportion to 20 percent, and it extends the time until July 1, 1939. In other words, the purpose of this act is to continue what we have been doing until July 1, 1939, to permit the advancing of money to those unfortunates who have been in flood or drought or tornado areas to reestablish themselves.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think we are all in sympathy with the purpose of this legislation; but why is it necessary? We have already passed legislation which permits loans to people in those distressed sections. Those loans will only bear 3 percent, as I understand it. If they apply for a loan under this measure, they will probably have to pay a little over 9 percent. How could the gentleman expect anyone would make application under this law for a loan when they could get it on easier terms under the other law?

Mr. HARLAN. I would rather delegate the answer to that question to a member of the committee who has given the proposition more study than any member of the Rules Committee.

There is nothing objectionable or radical, as far as I have been able to discover, in the change in the law as proposed in this resolution. There is not a great deal of necessity for prolonging the debate on the resolution, as I see it. Therefore I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered on the Consent Calendar, and at that time there was some controversy concerning it, due to the fact that it was thought unfair advantage might be taken of the people in the flood-devastated areas, particularly with respect to interest rates. Most of the States have usury laws. The rate of interest which is allowed to be charged under the usury laws of the States varies from 6 to 8 percent. For that reason certain members of the Committee on Banking and Currency thought it advisable to have some discussion of the bill, in order that it might be determined what the policy of the Congress should be with respect to a limitation upon the rate of interest which banks might be permitted to charge on these insured loans.

In considering that I think we should have in mind the fact that the Federal Housing Administration does not make loans direct to individuals. They insure loans which financial institutions, such as banks and trust companies, make to the individuals. This question could be used as the basis for a very broad discussion of the monetary and financial policy of the Federal Government. It is not to be hoped, of course, that we will get into a discussion of the Budget, and so forth, because, although that is an important question, it probably is not germane to this particular matter. However, I think we should call attention to one or two facts in respect to the condition of the banks which are making these loans or which are expected to make these loans.

Somewhat less than a year ago there was much criticism of the banks for not making loans. Industry was complaining that although it had been to banks and wanted credit, it could not get credit. Some used the excuse that the office of the Comptroller of the Currency was not lenient enough in their examinations. Some said it was the policy of the Federal Reserve Board to compel such a liquid condition of the banks that loans could not be made. Other reasons were given, but nevertheless the fact remained that loans were not being made by the banks. So that we found ourselves in this condition: The banks of the Nation had something over $3,000,000,000 of excess reserves which were not being used for the purpose of financing agriculture, business, and industry. Those $3,000,000,000 became a menace, according to the policy enunciated at that time by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank, in that it was the basis for about 10 times that amount of normal credit, and if credit accelerated in a normal manner, there was danger of inflation.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System were perfectly justified in raising reserve requirements to remove that threat. This condition continued, however, and although under the first order reserve requirements were raised approximately 50 percent and the excess reserves likewise reduced 50 percent, nevertheless we found ourselves in a comparable condition 3 or 4 months ago and the excess reserves had increased to over $2,000,000,000. The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System found it necessary again to raise reserve requirements because the banks were not lending money, they would not make available this large reserve of credit which should have been put into use during the past 3 years. Thus it was necessary again to raise the reserve requirements and reduce the excess reserves of the banks from $2,000,000,000 to about $500,000,000. At the present time, then, they have excess reserves of about $500,000,000, having frozen into the legal reserves required by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System something like $3,500,000,000 of potential base for 10 times that much credit.

Now, we find ourselves in this condition with respect to this bill, that although the banks have virtually been forced by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to take huge offerings of Government bonds at from 2⅛- to 2⅞-percent interest, there is no money in the banks, in spite of the tremendous reserves, to lend these poor people in the flood-devasted areas at 4, 5, 6, and 7 percent. Why? Because the policy of the Federal Reserve System has been such that the banks have been led to believe that if they held off and did not make these loans that the House of Representatives would pass this bill by which their loans might be insured 100 percent. I say 100 percent, because although this bill provides that only 20 percent of the loans shall be insured, that means 20 percent of the aggregate of the loans made by any one institution, so a bank which has loaned $100,000 in these areas will not stand to lose 1 cent until the aggregate of their losses exceeds $20,000. They will not lend in these flood-devastated areas until the Federal Government insures the loans. In addition to that, under the regulations of the Federal Housing Administration, the banks not only have their loans insured 100 percent, but they are allowed to charge usurious rates of interest. They are allowed to charge, and the banks actually do charge, 9.72-percent interest which, according to the laws of the majority of the States of the Union, would be considered usurious.

Mr. SNELL. Acting for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], I yield the gentleman from Michigan 10 additional minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The point that I want to make, briefly, is that although the Federal Housing Administration was originally set up to give relief to the unemployed in the building trades, and the insurance of mortgages and loans was secondary to that very laudable undertaking, nevertheless, we now find that because title 1 expired on March 31 of this year, all that remains in the Federal Housing Act today is the benefit to the banks, not to the individual borrowers, not to the people, the carpenters, the bricklayers, the masons, the plumbers, and others employed in the building trades. The only benefit that remains in the Federal Housing Administration is the insurance to banks.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Has the gentleman's committee considered establishing Federal mortgage agencies which would make loans in place of relying on the banks?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not believe we have had any such question before our committee recently.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The present practice is to insure the loans made by these banks up to 80 percent of their face; is not that the fact?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Twenty percent of the aggregate.

Mr. O'MALLEY. That covers 80 percent of the loans.

Mr. WOLCOTT. An individual loan cannot be isolated so that one could say that that particular loan was insured up to 20 percent of its face value. One must take the aggregate of the loans made by that bank. A hurried reading of the act would leave the inference that an individual loan is insured up to 20 percent of its face value, but in reality the bank is insured up to 20 percent of all the loans it has made.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The point I am getting at is that if there were a different policy and the banks were insured up to 80 percent of the unpaid balances of those loans, the banks would make more effort to collect and keep in good standing these loans; but as long as the bank is all bailed out they do not care, they leave it up to the Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would say that the bank is bailed out before they ever make the loan. The banks do not have to put up one cent of money, nor is there any charge made for insuring loans made by them.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Nor do they have to worry about keeping the loans in good standing or about making any effort to see that the loans are paid. Uncle Sam holds the bag.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not presume we could say that the banks do not make any effort to see that the loans are paid; but I may say to the gentleman that, as is the case with insurance companies or casualty companies, the fact that an obligation is secured to the obligee puts an entirely different complexion upon the obligation; and if I were a banker, or if the gentleman from Wisconsin were a banker, knowing that a loan was secured 100 percent we surely would not use the same zeal to collect the loan that we would if it were a private obligation for which the bank itself was wholly responsible.

Mr. O'MALLEY. In other words, would it not be better if the bank were compelled to stand a share of the loss if such occurred?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think it would be better if the banks were in a position where they would not have this sop, this bait, thrown out to them and they would continue to do as they always have done, seek a market for their money under the best possible conditions which today would mean probably 4 or 5 percent interest to these borrowers instead of trying to make these people in the flood devastated areas think they are going to get something, and after they have been kicked into insensibility have a pen put into their hands and be required to sign the dotted line guaranteeing to pay 9.72 percent interest, in addition to having that loan wholly insured.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SCOTT. Did not the gentleman say a moment ago these reserves had built up because the banks would not make the loans due to the fact they did not have this insurance?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I did not intend to say that. I said that during the past 3 years the excess reserves have been built up because there was no demand, or the demand by business, industry, and agriculture on the banks for credit was not met.

Mr. SCOTT. Why was it not met?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It was not met in the first instance because the banks, immediately after the crash and up to the present time, have been compelled to maintain a very high degree of liquidity. Another influence is the amount of credit which the Government has made available outside of the banks, and industry, agriculture, and business have sought credit from the Government instead of from the banks.

In that connection I want to call the attention of the House to a thing that is fundamental and one of the most important questions which confronts us today. That is the fact that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System believe they can control inflation in a situation where, although the index of business activity stands at 97, using 1929 as a base of 100, nevertheless the index of bank credit shows that only 50 percent of the normal amount of bank credit is being utilized to sustain this activity, and if the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System could control the entire flow of credit from the banks today, it could control only about 50 percent of the credit used today as a base for inflation.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman think if the Government was not offering so much credit, and if it was not insuring these loans in time the banks would then begin to make loans on their own responsibility to the people provided for under this act?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do. They would seek their own market and instead of these people having to pay 9.72 percent they would probably be paying only 5 percent. I think a bank would be very glad to make an uninsured loan, properly secured, at 5 percent rather than have to invest its assets in Government bonds paying only 2⅛ or 2⅞. Incidentally, I may say if there is any question as to why the people of this country are not receiving more than 1 or 2 percent interest on savings deposits it is because the banks have been forced into a condition whereby they get only 2⅛ or 2⅞ return on their money from the return on Government holdings and the banks cannot afford to do business on an overhead of only one-eighth of 1 percent.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is it not fair to say that the Federal Government has placed itself in the position of endorsing and approving this rate of 9.72 to which the gentleman referred, which has been charged the small borrowers throughout this country?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand they have not only put the stamp of approval on it, but this rate is charged under regulations set-up by the Federal Housing Administration.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is that not one of the reasons why the banks of the country are so enthusiastic about this particular activity?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The banks are particularly enthusiastic about it, because if they can make loans without using their own money and have those loans fully insured, and receive a return of 9.72 percent instead of 5 or 6 percent interest, they would be foolish if they were not enthusiastic.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. What evidence was produced before your committee that influenced it to continue legislation which allows them to charge 9.72 percent?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The words that Mr. McDonald used, if I remember correctly, were that in order to get the banks to make loans in these flood-devastated areas, "We must hold out this insurance and this interest rate as a bait." In other words, this bill is purely and simply to bait the banks in the flood-devastated areas, and if the poor people down there who have had their homes washed away will bite on this bait, then they will be tied up to pay 10-percent interest; and if they cannot carry that rate of interest, they will lose their homes eventually to the Federal Housing Administration.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman believe that to be true?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I believe that is true; and if the banks of these flood-devastated areas had reasonably good security, they should be glad to make loans at 5 percent or 6 percent.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill, and it will not take very long to state my reasons. I think it provides a basis of enough substance to justify the defeat of this bill by the Members of the House.

In the first place, I come from a State that has recently suffered from a very severe flood. I yield to no one in my desire to give every assistance possible to those people, and in opposing this bill it is not my purpose to oppose the giving of relief to flood sufferers. Instead, I believe this bill is a duplication and that it has disadvantageous terms for the flood sufferers as compared with legislation already passed by this House. The actual operation of this agency shows it is not fair to flood victims.

Only a few weeks ago we passed the Disaster Loan Corporation bill, authorizing the R. F. C. to use funds amounting to $20,000,000 so that Corporation could make character loans to sufferers in the flood areas.

This bill before us today is a different matter; but it renews the authority of the F. H. A. to do exactly the same kind of thing. Under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill——

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Does the gentleman mean to make the responsible statement on this floor that those two bills are not entirely different and distinct and take in two different classes of borrowers?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I shall define the two different classes of borrowers. Under the R. F. C. the loan is made directly to the individual, on the basis of character loans. No collateral is required. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. FORD of California. If he is broke.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Under this bill the loan, which ultimately goes to the same individual, is made by the bank and is guaranteed by the F. H. A. This is the only difference I know of so far as the class of borrowers is concerned. Therefore, in the final analysis the destination is the same, the flood sufferer. But the terms are vastly different. Under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill the flood sufferer can borrow money direct from the Government on a character basis at the rate of 3 percent interest. Under this bill the same individual will go to the bank to get his loan, and it will be guaranteed by the F. H. A., and if it passes all the way through, according to the testimony presented before the committee, he will have to pay 9.7 percent interest in order to get the money. Not only will he have to pay 9.7 percent interest to get the money, but, in addition, the answers of the Administrator and the staff of F. H. A. indicate that under this loan authority the borrower has been required to put up collateral in 50 percent of the cases. The interest rate is excessive. The terms are ridiculous compared with the terms specified under the R. F. C. bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not quite understand why we talk about the Government guaranteeing 20 percent, when in this report it is said the Government guarantees only 10 percent. What is the reason for this difference?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Originally the guaranty was 20 percent under the Federal Housing Act. A few years ago the guaranty was reduced to 10 percent. The F. H. A. now tell us they find loans will not be made on the basis of a 10-percent guaranty, and therefore they propose the amount of the guaranty again be fixed at 20 percent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This would mean a 10-percent advantage to the person who seeks a loan, would it not?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The direct advantage would be to the bank. The bank would have a 20-percent aggregate guaranty instead of a 10-percent guaranty.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Would not the result be that if the bank has a greater guaranty it will be more liberal in making loans?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The bank would be more inclined to make a loan, which is the reason the additional guaranty of 10 percent is asked. It is also a greater reason why the flood borrower should not have to pay 9.7-percent interest.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am interested in seeing that the flood sufferers have every possible opportunity to obtain loans. Why does the gentleman say this bill applies to flood sufferers when there is nothing in here anywhere about floods?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. It refers specifically to disasters, hurricanes, floods, fires, and other catastrophes.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, very much.

In answer to the question of my colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] the bill refers to tornadoes, cyclones, hurricanes, floods, or other catastrophes.

There is one other point I wish to bring out, in conclusion. Under this bill F. H. A. officials testified they have loaned only $135,000. The loans are distributed over 11 States, which is barely $10,000 per State, and only 11 States are affected. We have heard a lot of hullabaloo and a big hue and cry about eliminating unnecessary bureaus and commissions and about duplicating authority. Why not do something about it in this case? I am in favor of the flood sufferers being able to secure loans. However, if you were a flood sufferer and wanted to get a loan, would you go to this agency where, in 50 percent of the cases, collateral has been required? Would you put up such collateral and pay 9.7-percent interest, or would you go direct to the R. F. C., which has already been authorized to make Government loans, where you can borrow the same amount of money for 3 percent and not have to put up collateral?

It is on the basis of this duplication, its small operation to date, and to its excessive rate of interest that I oppose the present bill and advocate its defeat. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think we should look at this bill in its broad terms somewhat in this light: The Federal Housing Administration was created for the purpose of doing general good in bringing about construction and the use of heavy materials throughout the United States. Loans to banks were insured in order to induce banks to make loans to people who would not otherwise be able to secure them, starting out on the basis of 20 percent of insurance. Later, when the amended act was brought in, the proposition was submitted that the amount of insurance should be reduced to 10 percent, and the philosophy was expressed that if the rate was so reduced banks would be somewhat inclined to scrutinize more carefully the character of loans and not push so much credit out for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding homes, putting up new houses, and so forth.

Then came along the so-called catastrophe philosophy, which has not yet been defined to my satisfaction, and into this proposition was injected the question of flood repairs.

Let us look at this in a common-sense way. Business is picking up on a tremendous scale. There is plenty of evidence of it available to any man who wants to read as he runs. One who has been afflicted by catastrophe is not in as good a position to negotiate a loan as a man whose affairs are in complete running order, whether on a farm or in business. If you expect private institutions to make loans to sufferers from catastrophes, certainly you have to make it a practical proposition, so that the men who pass on loans in the offices of the lending institutions of this country will make loans of this sort; otherwise you have to come back to the Government's financing the whole deal.

To the people who oppose a bill of this type may I say, ought the Government to continue to make loans, or do they want the private institutions to make the loans? Do we want further to siphon out loans to our people through Government agencies, or do we want the loans made through the banking and credit institutions of the country? This question is fundamentally involved in the pending bill.

Another important consideration is this: The reason the banks get 100 percent insurance under this by reason of the accumulated reserves is because they used common sense in making loans, and have not incurred a sufficient amount of losses to absorb the insurance which was granted under the original F. H. A. and its activities subsequent to the passage of the bill. Had they made careless loans and suffered great losses, the reserve would not be there, and had this occurred private institutions would not make loans under this measure.

A lot has been said about the rate of interest. I make loans, character loans and secured loans, and have continually done so personally, and am doing so today, on 3 percent interest. The way to judge a man is by what he does and not by the way he talks. I am in favor of the 3-percent loan. I am in favor of the 1-percent loan, and I wish we could make it so we would not have to charge interest on any kind of loan; but if you make the rate so low the private institutions will not make the loan, and when I say private institutions I mean the banking institutions of the country, and if they will not make the loans then you kill the effect of this proposed law, and a man cannot go to the bank and borrow the money. Then where does he go? He goes to the loan shark, and then what does he have to pay? From 10 to 40 percent or even a higher rate.

Mr. McDonald testified on this bill that the lowest rate he knew being charged by any finance company in the country is 12 percent by General Motors Acceptance. I hope we can reduce interest costs to our people who have to borrow money.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1228) to amend the National Housing Act.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1228) to amend the National Housing Act, with Mr. GREEVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill would extend until the first of July 1939, the provisions of the act of April 17, 1936, under which the Housing Administration may insure loans made for purposes of rehabilitation in flood-stricken areas where disasters occurred prior to the 1st of January 1937.

Under the former act of April 17, 1936, loans of this character might be insured to the amount of 10 percent. Under the bill now being considered, provision is made for insurance of 20 percent of loans.

The purpose of this legislation is to aid in securing relief loans for people who have suffered from disasters and are not in position to obtain accommodations by usual methods. There is no provision in the bill for making loans. The plan is to insure loans and thereby induce private lending agencies to afford relief accommodations to sufferers from disasters.

A great deal has been said about the hardships and exactions imposed by lending agencies. Reference has been made only to banks. I desire to call attention to the fact that this bill does not provide alone for insurance of loans made by banks, but it applies to loans made by trust companies, building and loan associations, personal loan associations, and any agency or institution that may be approved by the Federal Housing Administration.

Of course, Congress has nothing to do with interest rates, which are matters to be determined by State legislation. It is not within our province to deal with all matters of that sort. What we are undertaking to do is to assist these unfortunate people in being able to find shelter for their families in the time of their distress. There is no law compelling anybody to make a loan. The Housing Administration is not required to insure any loans. The administration of the details is entirely in the hands of the Housing Administration, and I may say for the benefit of gentlemen who seem somewhat disturbed, if they will examine the record of the transactions that have been had by the Housing Administration, under the authority of the law which expired on the 1st of January of this year, they will find slight basis for their fears. There were only a few loans made and no losses have been sustained up to this time.

If I were called upon to offer a criticism of this legislation, it would be entirely in the opposite direction from that which has been indulged in by gentlemen who have discussed the measure today. My fear is we shall not have as large a measure of relief to these sufferers as I should so much like to see granted. We have presented this bill in the hope that some small measure of relief will be afforded and really this is all that anybody who is informed on the situation hopes for.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. Do the hearings that the gentleman's committee conducted give any intimation as to the approximate number of these loans or to what particular territory they will be confined?

Mr. STEAGALL. The measure is not limited as to territory. It is only limited as to the character of the distress and the period within which the distress must occur and within which the loan must be made.

Mr. WOODRUM. Can the gentleman give us any information as to what further need for personnel or appropriations is going to follow the granting of this further right to insure loans?

Mr. STEAGALL. There will be none whatsoever.

Mr. WOODRUM. I thank the gentleman for that assurance, and I shall remember it.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman may rely on it fully. The organization is already established. They administered a similar act down to the 1st of January of this year without any cost beyond mere nominal expenditures, and the fund out of which this relief will be granted is $100,000,000 that was provided in the former act. There is $15,000,000 of that fund remaining now, which would be the limit of relief that could possibly be afforded under this act, and it is an amount in excess of that which anybody has any idea will ever be used.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am very much interested in what the gentleman says with reference to the administration of this act so that more assistance will be given. I want to get this clear in my own mind and for the purpose of the record: Is it not true that the amount of loans that will be made if this act becomes law is dependent very largely upon bank and trust-company management?

Mr. STEAGALL. And other lending institutions; yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is dependent on their willingness to go along with it?

Mr. STEAGALL. Certainly. All we can do is insure the loans. They have to be approved by the Administrator. Many lending agencies that have applied for insurance have been refused and some who have been put on the accepted list have been removed because their practices were not satisfactory to the Housing Administration. If there is any relief to be accomplished, we cannot go out into the field of interest rates and the multitudinous details that must of necessity enter into the consideration of a loan to be made. These are matters that must be left to the lending institutions to determine.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I wanted to have clear.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 19 minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I trust I may bring one or two suggestions to your attention relating to this kind of legislation. I do not wish to say that I am grudgingly giving it support. I shall vote for it because I think there will be but little loss involved, and we are already in the business.

In fact, I favor these small character loans. I have seen enough of the expense forced upon borrowers through a search of title and expense of legal documents. That lack of expense comforts me a great deal, in the face of the fact that these loans carry a charge of 9.72 percent actual interest. The extra bookkeeping and collecting does involve much work for the banks, and the high rate is necessary bait, I fear, in order to get them to make this kind of a loan.

What does interest me is this, and which has not been referred to is this:

> The Administrator is authorized and empowered upon such terms and conditions as he may subscribe.

You may have seen the former application blanks furnished to the banks, wherein the borrower has to sign and qualify according to certain specified conditions, and the insured bank can only loan to him on those conditions prescribed. The loan was based largely on his income, and such a loan could be made for a year, 18 months, or even longer if his income per month seemed to guarantee the regular payments thereon.

It might appear to you here that the administrator could prescribe, "Never mind what a man's income is, make this loan under any conditions you please", but he might also make it so difficult, or so like the previous conditions, that it would be very hard to get a loan. I have favored this method of lending money under title I, which you have refused extension. I have done it only for the reason that as long as W. P. A. and other relief measures are needed and we are to continue to spend money on so-called recreation and adornment projects, sandpapering the sides of the roads, and all that sort of wastefulness, it would be far better to lend money for the repairing of buildings or even the building of small homes. However, I desire to get rid of all these governmental ventures in banking as soon as possible.

Only a day or two ago I had to appear before a division of the organization here under discussion. In a district like mine, where we have abundant banking facilities, a nearby bank decided "to go Federal." Although the communities have plenty of banking facilities, some desire to be financed by Federal funds and guaranties. When we pass bills to help out the distressed conditions of communities and banks, I do not wish sections already provided for to come to the Federal Government. They argue, "We can get Federal capital for this set-up. The Federal bank will also buy paid-up shares when we need more capital." We can loan money at 1 percent less interest and take the business away from the other banks.

Another Federal yardstick! Banks financed by our own people through buying their shares are to be injured, although just recovering from the recent adverse conditions. And you and I are put in the uncomfortable position of opposing a plan that would lower interest rates to our people. However, in order to do it they would use the credit of the Federal Government. We already have a staggering contingent debt. We have guaranteed a vast amount of loans and securities. We will never know again within a billion, or even billions, what our actual national debt may be. A contingent debt can be smiled off for a while, probably, but necessarily some time something besides a smile will be called for in the settlement thereof. I take these very few minutes on this matter to bring to your attention the advantage that is taken of legislation meant only for distress purposes.

I believe that there will be very little money available to these sufferers under this particular bill. The bill includes any catastrophe. If any of your constituents have a catastrophe which is not flood or cyclone—I do not know what it might be—I presume these loans would be available.

The only other thought I wish to express is that we have insured banks up to 10 and 20 percent of the loans of this character which they have made. If a bank has made $1,000,000 of loans, they have $200,000 guaranteed; so they can lend $200,000 less any previous losses, and up to that amount suffer no loss whatsoever. Perhaps this is good business; but it is simply another bait to get banks to take these risks. I should be interested to read the conditions prescribed in the application blank that the Federal Housing Administrator furnishes the banks for the borrower to sign stating the conditions under which he must pay. This is a small matter for flood sufferers. I shall not oppose it, since I have so many larger matters to object to. I shall yield and will not oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just for the purpose of the RECORD, there is not anything in this bill or outside of the bill that would prevent the banks all over the country where these catastrophes may occur from making such loans as they may please to their people, character loans or otherwise, is there?

Mr. GIFFORD. The bill does state very plainly what may be done in spite of some testimony before the committee "that the banks would not, of course, lend money except in the afflicted areas where they have had a serious disturbance." The bill reads plainly enough. The gentleman would have to ask his bank to define catastrophe.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think the gentleman understood my question. There is nothing to prevent any banking institution, as far as the act is concerned, from making such loan as it may please to make to anybody who applies.

Mr. GIFFORD. The applicant has to comply with rules and regulations prescribed by the Administrator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am assuming that the bank does not ask for the insurance.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, well, that is a different matter.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Would the gentleman in his definition of catastrophe include drought? For instance, would the drought areas in Nebraska come within the bill, a condition of drought in 20 or 30 counties? Would not that be a catastrophe?

Mr. GIFFORD. If I were a banker and that question were asked of me I should assume that I would have to ask the Administrator if that came within the definition of catastrophe, before I dared make the loan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In order to get insurance on it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. Let the Federal Housing Administrator determine that.

Mr. STEFAN. I merely want to say that we consider it a catastrophe in Nebraska when last year we lost the entire crop of corn and grain in 20 or 30 counties because of the drought. The gentleman would consider that a catastrophe, would he not?

Mr. GIFFORD. I would; yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill because I think it may open an avenue of help to the people of my district and State and the other sections of the flooded area who have been sorely stricken as a result of flood.

There has been a great deal of misinformation in regard to this bill. The purpose of the bill is to stimulate the lending institutions to lend to those who have been the victims of disaster. It will insure each individual loan up to $2,000, and in the case of hospitals, schools, and so forth, up to $50,000. Twenty percent of these loans under the provisions of this bill will be insured.

What are the facts with reference to interest rates provided in this bill? The National Government does not provide any interest rate. The National Government in this act provides a maximum rate beyond which the banks may not charge. No minimum interest rate is fixed. If the banks are actuated by public spirit and by a desire to serve, they can lend at any interest rate they desire less than the maximum. The maximum interest rate that is prescribed under the rules and regulations adopted by the Federal Housing Administration is 5 percent discount. If one borrows $100, the bank gives him $95, and he pays the loan back in 12 equal installments. There is no rebate on the interest. That amounts to 9.72 per cent. But the banks or the lending institutions do not have to charge that interest. If the bank desires to help these people in distress, it can make a much lower interest rate.

It has been said that the banks are insured to the full amount of their loans by reason of accumulated insurance reserves. Under this bill if a bank lends $100,000 and sustains no loss, it will have a $20,000 accumulated reserve insurance, and the insurance accumulates as the bank lends and sustains no loss.

Let us look at the accumulated insurance of the various institutions in the States that have been the victims of the flood. I will read you from an appendix to the hearings on this bill in which those figures appear.

In Arkansas the accumulated insurance reserve of all lending institutions is $42,356. In Illinois, $6,454. In Indiana, $104,686. In Kentucky, $459,284. In Louisiana, $239,410. In Mississippi, $31,755. In Missouri, $37,222. In Ohio, $386,492. In Pennsylvania, $210,005. In Tennessee, $902,118. and in West Virginia, $89,991, making a total accumulated reserve in the whole stricken area of the banks and lending institutions of $2,509,773.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Does the gentleman feel the banks have a pretty good thing out of this? Do they have more than normal protection under this act?

Mr. SPENCE. I believe that. This service that we are endeavoring to have rendered the people is not going to cost the Government any considerable sum because heretofore there have been no losses sustained and I believe it will stimulate lending by the institutions.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. If the banks get more than normal protection as a result of this legislation, does not the gentleman think 9.72 percent interest is excessive?

Mr. SPENCE. I do. I have talked to the Housing Administration officials and I was told they were going to use their influence on the lending institutions in an effort to persuade them to lend at lower rates of interest than 9.72 percent. There is no reason for the banks charging 9.72 percent. However, let us make comparison with General Motors Acceptance Corporation, which does a somewhat similar business. It lends at 6 percent discount, which amounts to 12 percent as computed under this bill. They not only make that charge, but they have additional charges which the borrower has to pay. Under this bill he does not have to pay any additional charge.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Of course the unfortunate thing is that the man buying an automobile is in a different position than a poor duffer who has had a flood loan.

Mr. SPENCE. That is the truth; and that is the reason I want to protect my people. In many instances in my district their homes have been swept away. Their furniture is gone. They have no clothes except the clothes on their backs. Their families need help. Where is a man in distress going if he cannot go to an institution that has been approved by his Government? As the gentleman on the other side stated—the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]—he will go to the pawnbroker and the loan shark and will be subjected to whatever interest charges those people desire to subject him to.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Why should not that man go to the R. F. C., where he would pay 3-percent interest, and not be compelled to put up any collateral?

Mr. SPENCE. If he can go there and get the money, so much the better. I want to keep every avenue open to help the people of my district and State and people of the other States affected.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Would the gentleman feel favorably inclined toward an amendment which would specify that the interest rate shall not exceed 6 percent?

Mr. SPENCE. That matter was brought up in committee, and Mr. McDonald, the Administrator of Federal Housing, said he thought that would have a tendency to prevent loans being made under this act. We thrashed that out. I would like to see those in distress get the money without interest, but if they cannot get it without interest I want them to get it as cheaply as they can. I want as many loans made as possible. There is no reason why the banks should lend this money at 9.72 percent. If the banks have public spirit, if they want to serve the people and really help in their rehabilitation, they will make loans at low interest rates under this act; and I sincerely hope they will do that.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The gentleman feels that 9.72 is an excessive rate?

Mr. SPENCE. I do. Sir Francis Bacon said that the usurer "earns his bread in the sweat of the face of another and ploweth on Sunday."

I do not want to help the usurer or those who wish to take an unconscionable advantage.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman has made a touching plea on behalf of his people. May I say that in committee I offered an amendment to cut this rate to 6 percent? After being told by the Administrator it would restrict the loans, I withdrew the amendment. Does the gentleman believe if we cut this rate to 6 percent any loans will be made in his district under the bill?

Mr. SPENCE. I hope there will be, but I do not know. I rely on the superior experience of Mr. McDonald, who is the Administrator, and he thought the reduction of the maximum interest rate would not have a tendency to stimulate loans.

There was some discussion in committee about the penalties that were imposed for delinquency. In the case where a loan is delinquent the lender is charged 5 cents on a hundred dollars. Some Members have been under the impression that the borrower thereby paid 5 percent because of his delinquency. He pays one-twentieth of 1 percent when his loan becomes delinquent, and the limit of that charge is $5. For instance, if a school or hospital borrowed $50,000 under that provision of the act and the loan became delinquent, it could not be charged more than $5 as a delinquency charge.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think in view of the fact this bill increases the guarantee up to 20 percent that the banks in his section of the country, which is a good deal like mine, would be willing to lend the money under those circumstances at 6 percent?

Mr. SPENCE. I hope and trust they will do so. There is one other thing I believe, and in this I think the gentleman will agree with me. Anybody that has seen the scenes of disaster and the hardship that have resulted by reason of the flood will realize that those people cannot be rehabilitated except through direct grant by the Government.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman give us the benefit of his observation on this point: Assuming that we had been in a period of declining prosperity during the last 3 or 4 years, or since the F. H. A. became operative, is it the gentleman's opinion in that event these reserves would have been built up to the extent that the banks now have 100 percent protection, we will say?

Mr. SPENCE. I do not want to go into that at this time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Assume that somewhere down the line in the near future we hit a recession in business, or a deflation, if you please; is it not true a lot of these loans which have been made may be impossible of collection; at least, that is a prospect?

Mr. SPENCE. I think that is true; yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman one other question? If we take such action on this bill as will result in the financial institutions not making these loans and the people then resort to the R. F. C., is not a situation thereby created whereby the Government proceeds to make loans and thus eliminates private industry from the business?

Mr. SPENCE. Absolutely. I think it would be a very much more healthful move to stimulate lending by private institutions than for the Government to go into that business itself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And help carry out some of the doctrines we preach on this side?

Mr. SPENCE. I think so.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman who are members of the very important Committee on Banking and Currency whether there is any reason why we cannot change the rate of interest providing a maximum of 7 percent as against a maximum of 9.72 percent?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to answer the gentleman, not for the committee, but from my own observation and from the testimony offered before the committee, it develops that the banks will not make these loans, or they say they will not make them unless they are authorized to charge 9.72-percent interest. I do not think this House should be a party to such usurious practices.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Who knows the banks will not do this?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The banks have not done it. In the first place, the banks have lent only $135,000, whereas the devastation attending the floods of 1936 aggregated probably $2,000,000,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is that because of this interest proposition that the would-be borrowers refuse to borrow, or what is the reason? Is it because there are some other exactions which are too strict on these would-be borrowers?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I cannot speak for the banks in that particular. I do know that only about $135,000 of loans have been made, and they have all been made at 9.72 percent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. What is the rate of interest the F. H. A. receives on other loans the banks make? Surely the banks have made more than $135,000 of loans.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Nine and seventy-two one-hundredths percent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much do the banks lend? Is it true the banks have loaned only $135,000 in the United States, in view of all the advertising the availability of such loans has received? It cost more than that to do the advertising.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This is in the flood areas. The total of loans which have been insured runs up to a considerable amount. Perhaps the chairman of the committee could state the total. I do not know it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Well, it is immaterial anyway.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The $135,000 is what has been lent under section 6.

The gentleman made a point there which I thought a very excellent one when he asked if the gentlemen did not think the banks could be induced to charge a lower rate of interest. Everyone acknowledges that 9.7 percent is too much. Previously the banks would not charge a lower rate of interest, but at that time they were guaranteed only to the extent of 10 percent. Now, we are proposing to guarantee them 20 percent. It seems to me the gentleman is right, and as long as we are increasing the guaranty the banks ought to charge a lower rate of interest.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In answering a question by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] during the hearings, Mr. Gignilliat stated that approximately $45,000,000 in insured loans have been made under the act; 9.852 loans have been insured. This is not under this particular section but under the whole law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman. I thought the $135,000 was entirely too small a figure to be the answer to that question.

Mr. Chairman, like my good friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], I come from a flood area. He and I are agreed on this one important point: We do not want anything to go into this bill which is going to make it harder for our people to get help. On the other hand, we do not want anything in the bill which will make it impossible for them to get help under this bill. If it is the consensus of opinion of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency that we must allow this figure to stay in here at 9.72 percent in order to get any help at all, then we want it to stay; but if we can reduce the figure to 7 percent, it ought to be done.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I think the interest-rate figures should be lower than 9.72 percent, and so voted in the committee. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the difference between the standpoint of the lender and the borrower. Insofar as the lender is concerned, he gets his 9.72 percent because he is lending money all the time and has use for it. However, insofar as the borrower is concerned, unless he is a money lender himself it makes no difference to him when he pays his 5 percent. Therefore, really the borrower is paying only 5 percent. That is the situation. There is a difference between the position of the lender and the borrower.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman.

Here is the point to which I was about to direct the attention of the House. A good deal of comment has been made on the floor with reference to the Disaster Loan Corporation as it figures in this set-up. Some of you may not have heard what I said here last Monday on this subject. I was rather mild about it at that time. The Disaster Loan Corporation is not a complete answer to our troubles. The disaster loan company may be doing all it can, but it is not meeting the full demands of the situation. It does not do what some of you who have spoken think it is doing. It does not lend money on character only. It requires, in many instances, what I think is unreasonable security. Many a man—and I fear many a good man—has been turned away from the Disaster Loan Corporation because he could not meet the security test. I am glad to report, however, I have assurances that the Board is going to issue more liberal instructions.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I will yield in just a moment.

I think they have been brought up in the atmosphere of the R. F. C. They are in the atmosphere of the lender, they are in the atmosphere of the man who must have every possible security the borrower has to offer. They want to make the borrower put up everything he possibly can, and I think this is the unanimous testimony of the Congressmen who represent districts in the Ohio Valley.

We—I mean the afflicted people of my district—are in the attitude of people who are asking the mercy of the House and of the Disaster Loan Corporation. Today we want the R. F. C. to know our people are not satisfied with what they are getting out of the Disaster Loan Corporation. We do not want any of you to vote against this bill just because you think we are getting 3-percent money. We are not getting much of it.

An attempt is being made to compel the building and loan associations to stand by and let the R. F. C. have the first loan. In the State of Ohio everyone knows practically all the building and loan associations have been out of the lending business for 3 or 4 years. They have no money to lend. They must meet the demands of their depositors for withdrawals when any money comes in. Many a building and loan association has a first mortgage on property in my section of the country that cannot repair and remodel the property because they have no money to lend.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In just a moment.

In that connection, the Disaster Loan Corporation should take the second mortgage, or the third mortgage, if necessary, if it is going to do what we intended should be done.

As I said on Monday, I do not wish to find fault unnecessarily with the people connected with the Disaster Loan Corporation, and I think if all of us in Congress here who are interested in the Ohio Valley would insist on them being more liberal in their administration, it would have a most beneficial effect. That would encourage them to know what the sentiment of the House is.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As a lawyer, of course, the gentleman is aware of the universal rule that statutes are to be construed in the light of congressional intent.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MAY. And the gentleman knows that Congress intended that these loans should be character loans whether these people had a dollar's worth of property or not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I have maintained that character and sympathy should have some part in determining whether a loan should be made. In justice to the Disaster Loan people I think they would like to be more liberal but they can hardly get themselves altogether out of the atmosphere of conservatism and they simply will not take chances.

Mr. MAY. If they are trying to construe the law in that way, what is keeping them from doing it?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. They do not consider character as you or I would, and they are asking security of some kind in most, if not all, cases.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does the gentleman know what loans have been made by the Disaster Loan Corporation?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I know I represent four counties in Ohio fronting on the Ohio River, with 160 miles of river front, and not a cent came into my district until this week.

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that my information is they are making loans at the rate of between 100 and 200 a day, and there have been approved up to this time about 3,000 individual loans, beginning with loans as low as $50, and they are making many of them on character. This is the information which has been furnished me and I believe it is reliable.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman ought to look into the matter and I believe if he does he will find that is not the case at all. I mean that they do not loan on character only.

Mr. STEAGALL. What is not the case? What part of my statement is not true?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is my impression that is not the case, that they make loans on character only.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House that no character loans have been made there?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot answer that. I do not know of any made on character only.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is what the gentleman is about to say, while my information is entirely different.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Here is what I say. The information I have in my district is that no loan has been made on character without security. If I am wrong about that I am willing to apologize humbly, because, as I said before, I am cooperating as well as I can with the Corporation. I am trying to encourage them all I can, because I appreciate their position. They are afraid that if they make loans too freely they will receive congressional criticism. They are afraid that if they do lend any of this money without security that will not stand a complete test, somebody will criticize them. I say they ought to shake themselves loose from such a hard and fast situation. They ought to go out there and lend money to people who have good character, who have demonstrated the fact they have always paid their bills in the past. I do not believe that they should make loans to well-known dead beats, or make a loan of more than is reasonable or that the man cannot reasonably pay. On the other hand, if a good man who has a good reputation and can get the recommendation of the local disaster committee needs some money which will go to rehabilitate him and his family he should have it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Ohio 3 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. May I inquire whether in the gentleman's criticism of the Disaster Loan Corporation the gentleman is referring to the attitude of the Corporation since the amendment to the act of last month, or are the circumstances which the gentleman cites those which obtained prior to the last amendment of the act?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. We have not amended the act with reference to the Disaster Loan Corporation.

Mr. MOTT. Oh, yes; we amended the act last month. We amended the original Disaster Loan Corporation Act to take off the statutory requirements as to security.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I am talking about what they have done since we passed the last act. This act we are considering today has nothing to do with the Disaster Loan Corporation.

Mr. MOTT. Their attitude is still conservative.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Conservative; that is right.

Mr. MOTT. Then may I suggest that, under the act as now amended, there is not any reason for them to be conservative unless they want to. They have ample authority to be liberal under existing law.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is my position exactly, and I thank the gentleman. They seem too cautious and fearful of what Congress intended, although I think we had enough debate on the bill when we passed it about 6 or 8 weeks ago to convince anybody that this Congress intended for them to be liberal. I am sure that after the assurances given here this afternoon they will liberalize their regulations further.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In view of the gentleman's intense interest in this matter from the standpoint of his district, certainly the gentleman realizes that any reduction in interest rates is a matter we should always keep in mind. And the rate of interest on commercial paper and short-term stuff has increased tremendously within the last few days or the last few weeks. This is something all the banks are interested in, and they are shifting their portfolios all over the United States to move into higher interest-gathering areas.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I appreciate that. And if this bill will not bring our people any relief unless the rate is left at 9.72 percent, then I expect it should be left there, but I think 7 percent would be better, of course.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And this is a matter that has to be kept in mind. Let me also ask the gentleman this question. Does the gentleman feel that under this legislation the Disaster Corporation should make loans which protect the holders of mortgages on property that is to be rehabilitated?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; if the mortgagee cannot come forward and protect his own equity, most assuredly they should protect him. If a man has a home worth $5,000 and owes $2,000 to a building and loan association, and the building and loan association is in such shape that it cannot loan him any money, are you going to refuse to help this man and let the building go down and have the man lose everything he has? And have the building and loan company lose all it has? Certainly, this Disaster Loan Corporation should say that there is character in the building association and character in the man himself and therefore they are going to lend him some money to rebuild his home so he may again become a useful citizen. And if the building and loan company benefits in having its equity saved, it is all the better. The building and loan company cannot get more than the face of its claims, and it might stand to lose a part of its equity, and the owner might lose all his equity if the help is not extended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think this is fundamental, because I do not believe it was the intent of the House, when we passed that act, that such service was to be given to the mortgage holder. I think the debate is very clear on that. The intent all the way through is shown. Now, if the House feels that that kind of method should be met——

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Oh, I know what is in the gentleman's mind. That law was not primarily for the benefit of the mortgagee, but if in benefiting the man who is down, the mortgagee is benefited also, we are not going to refuse to benefit him. The primary object is to benefit the man who needs help. I recite my incident again. Does not the gentleman think if a man has a home worth $5,000 and he has a $2,000 mortgage on it in a building and loan association or with some private individual who cannot come forward with any more money for repairs, that the Disaster Loan Corporation should let that man have three or four hundred dollars to rebuild or refurnish his house, so that he may keep this $5,000 structure and pay the building and loan association and pay everybody else? Does not the gentleman think we ought to do that? If not, where would there be any benefit at all to anybody?

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes. Answer that, please.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think, under the bill we passed the other day, if I were administering it, I would force the mortgage holder to subordinate his claim to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And if he could not pay it, then you would let the man and the building and loan company both go down?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. I would ask Congress to save the mortgage holder.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be one of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency and a Member of this House who does not look with such extreme horror on banks and bankers. I know how unpopular it is to rise on this floor at certain times and say anything in favor of a bank or banker. The general reputation we try to give them is that they are out to take the last farthing out of all the people they can. I do not think that is in any sense correct. There are a lot of honorable bankers and a lot of bankers in this country who might have been much better off if we had surrounded them with the same kind of protection that we have the banks in the case of this type of loan.

I live in Indiana. That State has been pretty badly hurt. My own district was not hurt. My district does not border on the Ohio River. We are in the northeast part of the State, and the watershed there drains into Lake Erie and Lake Michigan, only a small average flows to the Ohio, and we have not been affected by this directly; but I do know that the cause is a just one, and that it has been a terrible calamity. I know from what I have been told by people who have visited the territory. They need this help.

Now, the question has been raised how much money will this release for the purpose of remodeling homes, putting on some new paint and paper? The statement of the Housing Administration is that it will release about $60,000,000 in loans; also that there are, in round numbers, 1,200 agencies already set up in these 11 States to make these loans. So we are just carrying on the type of work that has been done. There is approximately $15,000,000 of the insured fund that may be used that will release this $60,000,000.

This interest rate seems to be something that a lot of Members are worrying about. My understanding is that we do not say anywhere in this bill that the rate shall be 9.72 percent. That is strictly an administration matter. Have you examined carefully the type of these loans, and do you know how large they are? The average is only $400. There is not a man in this Congress who does not know that you cannot handle a line of business in a bank with a lot of small loans without charging something for that. What does it mean? A man comes there to borrow $400. They give him $380 in cash and he pays back at the rate of $33.33 per month. Included in that amount of 9.72 percent that comes in these monthly payments are the recording fees and record and investigation. These people do not always come into the bank and pay the loan promptly. They must repeat the requests for payment. In all of this comes the telephone and everything in the nature of handling a small loan.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARLEY. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. How many loans are there, in the aggregate?

Mr. FARLEY. One million three hundred and twenty-six thousand one hundred and two; with a total amount of $500,220,642.

I have been told that the banks at Richmond, Va., figure that they lose money on loans of $100 and $200; that the handling, the bookkeeping, the things that are essential in handling bank business of that kind cost something. I think that the rate of 9.7 percent, even though it is not the average, is not an excessive rate for loans of this character. The gentleman from Michigan suggests that people will go anywhere to get this money. The Morris Plan Bank is one of the places where they go. How much does it cost to get money at many banks that specialize in monthly payments? It costs 23 percent, as against 9.7 percent. That is the difference. We are just providing these people with an opportunity to get some money to do things that are essential for them to live in some degree of peace and happiness after this terrible calamity. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in the statement which I made on the rule there seemed to be some doubt as to where I stood on this matter.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman plan to introduce an amendment lowering the rate of interest that may be charged on these loans?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that I have prepared an amendment to follow the first paragraph of the bill providing that no loan shall be insured under the provisions of the act which bears a greater rate of interest than 7 percent per annum. I feel justified in offering such an amendment, because I do not believe this Congress wants to be a party to usurious practices. We have heard a great deal said here today about this 9.72-percent interest which is charged to these poor people who have been wiped out in these flooded areas, attempting to justify it on the ground that it includes carrying charges, investigational charges, this, that, and the other thing. The usury laws of most of the States, however, provide that neither under the guise of investigating the merits of the loan nor the costs of carrying the loan may the total amount of interest exceed that set in the statute, which varies to 6 to 8 percent.

Banks have made loans on real estate, on agricultural, industrial, and business property for 3 percent, and they have been so anxious to get these loans that they have written off whatever minor charges there might be upon the part of their people. They are on their regular pay rolls, men employed for this purpose. In many instances there is very little or no expense to the bank. In many instances it is a mere transfer of an obligation from a private individual to the bank so that no investigation seems necessary; and you cannot justify usury on the ground that it costs money to carry the obligation, because the interest itself is supposed to be a consideration for carrying the loan.

Answering the statement made by Members here this afternoon that 9.72 percent is the maximum amount which is charged under the act, I may say that that is true; but it seems that they are charging the maximum amount. I quote a few excerpts from the hearings. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] asked Mr. McDonald, Administrator of the Federal Housing Administration, this question before the committee:

Mr. SPENCE. What is the cost of a loan to the borrower under this bill?
Mr. MCDONALD. Five percent discount.
Mr. SPENCE. What does he actually pay?
Mr. MCDONALD. He actually pays 9.2 percent.
Mr. SPENCE. I thought it was 9.7 percent.
Mr. MCDONALD. It is 7; that is right.

And it developed later on that, instead of either one of them being right, it was 9.72 percent. So the borrower, and not the insured agency, not the bank, or the trust company, or the other financial institution which qualifies under the act, pays—the borrower pays 9.72 percent.

Mr. Chairman, how can the House of Representatives justify its action in getting a poor person in the Ohio or Mississippi Valleys down in the mud and then kicking him into insensibility and charging him usurious rates of interest? The only justfication for it is that the banks in these flood-devastated areas have exacted through the medium of this legislation, and will continue to exact, their pound of flesh. You can do as you please, but so far as I am concerned I am not in my sensible moments going to contribute anything more than the floods have contributed to the discomfiture of these people in these areas.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that 7 percent is an excessive rate to charge this class of borrowers?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish it might be 5 percent. I think that under present banking conditions it could be 5 percent. But because I was fearful that somebody might come back at me with the statement that the legal rate of interest in Michigan is 7 percent, I made it 7 percent. But Michigan is a high-interest State. In my opinion, these loans could be made for less than 7 percent, but certainly for no more than 7 percent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 6 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Administrator is authorized and empowered, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to insure banks, trust companies, personal finance companies, mortgage companies, building and loan associations, installment lending companies, and other such financial institutions, heretofore or hereafter approved by the Administrator as eligible for credit insurance, against losses which they may sustain as a result of loans and advances of credit, and purchases of obligations representing loans and advances of credit, made by them subsequent to the date this section takes effect and prior to July 1, 1939, or such earlier date as the President may fix by proclamation upon his determination that the emergency no longer exists, for the purpose of financing, by the owners of real property or by lessees thereof under a lease for a period of not less than 1 year, the restoration, rehabilitation, rebuilding, and replacement of improvements on such real property and equipment and machinery thereon which were damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, hurricane, flood, or other catastrophe in the years 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, or 1939, either on the same site or on a new site in the same locality where the damaged or destroyed property was located. The Administrator is authorized to grant insurance under this section, as amended, to any such financial institution up to 20 percent of the total amount of loans, advances of credit, and purchases made by such financial institution for such purposes, and any insurance reserve accumulated by any such financial institution under section 2 of this title shall be applicable to the payment of any losses sustained by it as a result of loans, advances of credit, or purchases insured under this section."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 2, line 23, after the word "section", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following: "Provided, That no loan shall be insured under the provisions of this act which bears a rate of interest in excess of 7 percent per annum."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment to which I referred in my previous remarks.

Mr. Chairman, the thought occurs to me that there should be no discrimination in the legislation which this Congress passes, and there should be no discrimination in the regulations set up by any agency of the Federal Government. I think this is a fundamental truism with which all will agree. I do not think any of us should knowingly countenance a situation which allows wealthy corporations to get their money at 3 percent when a poor man, living on the river bottoms of the Ohio and Mississippi, has to pay almost 10 percent for his money.

Listen to this testimony given by Leigh R. Gignilliat, Jr., deputy administrator in charge of modernization credits, Federal Housing Administration, in this respect:

Twenty-five percent of the loans insured by the Federal Housing Administration are over $50,000.

Mr. McDonald turned to Mr. Gignilliat and asked:

What would that be from our own experience?

Mr. Gignilliat replied:

I think in the case of the $50,000 loans, they have been made as low as 3 percent straight interest.

Mr. Chairman, how can we, as Members of the House of Representatives, justify a set-up which allows a corporation or an individual having security sufficient for them to come into a bank and make a loan of over $50,000 to obtain his money at 3 percent when the poor man, whom we really want to help, and whom we expect will be helped by this act, will have to pay nearly 10 percent?

May I quote the balance of Mr. Gignilliat's statement:

In other words, that is about one-third of the maximum. We simply give a maximum figure, but I would say 25 percent of the loans are made at the lower rate, and practically all of the larger loans are made at a lower rate.

Mr. McDonald says that the actual cost to the home owner, to the fellow who cannot borrow $50,000, but wants $400, a thousand dollars, $2,000, or $5,000, is almost 10 percent.

If you gentlemen over there or anyone else in this House can justify a set-up like that, you go ahead and do it. My conscience is going to be clear. I am going to be able to say to my people that so long as I have been voting in this House I have tried to be consistent, regardless of statements made by other men.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Is the gentleman satisfied the banks will lend to these smaller people at the rate of interest provided in his amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why worry about that? There has been loaned only $135,000 as against a loss of $2,000,000,000 in the disaster. They will not make the loans unless they are assured of security, I grant the gentleman that. They have virtually given us an ultimatum they are not going to make more loans unless insured by the Federal Government. That is a nice set-up. In other words, they are throwing out a bait, and in that particular let me quote from the testimony of Mr. McDonald.

Mr. Spence stated:

But the Government ought not to apply the standards of the ordinary money lender to its activities; do you think so? Should not the Government try to do something better for the people than the man who makes his money that way?

Mr. McDonald's answer is as follows:

That is true. On the other hand, you cannot make an institution lend money unless you make the bait sufficiently attractive; nor can we stop them from making the loan.

You go ahead and bait the banks if you want to. If they want to continue under a situation in which they are compelled to take Federal obligations at 2⅛ and 2⅞ and prefer to buy and invest in those Government obligations rather than in the homes of this Nation, I think it is high time that you and I should put our stamp of disapproval upon such banking methods.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. We are of necessity considering two phases of disaster loans. In considering this matter we cannot refrain from giving some thought to the R. F. C. Disaster Loan Corporation.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. In considering the joint relationship of those two bodies, does not the gentleman think if the business of this Government was properly administered, the one agency would consider and make its plans fit in with the other and if that were the case can the gentleman tell me whether the F. H. A. has made any plans to fit in its work with the R. F. C.?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can only refer the gentleman to Mr. McDonald's testimony. He was asked by Mr. Williams:

What about this Disaster Loan Corporation we have just created?

Mr. McDonald replied:

I do not know anything about that. It is not in the field now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood that was to take care of cases exactly like this.

Mr. MCDONALD. I am not familiar with that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am just wondering why it would not operate. Have you not examined into that act at all?

Mr. MCDONALD. No; I am not familiar with that act.

In other words, one branch of the Federal Government does not know what the other branch of the Government is doing in respect to flood relief.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, there was an amendment offered to reduce this interest rate to 6 percent, and I was very glad to support the amendment. Naturally, I will support this amendment.

I would like to give my reasons. A bank which has not built up a reserve sufficient to protect itself 100 percent from any loss is not going to make any loans under this proposed legislation. That means they are taking no risk whatever. They are taking no business risk on their loans, but 7 percent is plenty to charge for a mere service charge, and that is all there is involved here. Remember that a bank which has not built up a reserve sufficient to insure itself 100 percent against loss is not going to make any loans. This being so, there is no possible risk involved. So that the percentage which they will receive amounts to a service charge, and 7 percent is sufficient and more than sufficient to reimburse them for carrying the loan on their books and writing the necessary letters involved in carrying the loan. I believe every member of this Committee and every Member of the House would be justified in voting for this amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation is to afford relief to people in distress. There are many details which enter into the making of loans, many of which we could not anticipate and could not attempt to deal with if we desired. The interest rate to be charged happens to be one of the matters which might possibly be dealt with in this legislation.

I venture to say, however, that the practice the gentlemen desire to terminate by this amendment would not necessarily be ended by the adoption of the amendment. I have serious doubts that merely writing into law a provision that the paper insured should not bear an interest rate in excess of 7 percent would prevent the imposition of service charges, appraisal fees, and other charges by which indirectly any lending institution could build up the total rate to be charged the borrower to an amount in excess of that named in this amendment. The truth is the only practical way to handle this legislation is to confer authority to insure these loans, and trust the Federal Housing Administration to impose whatever rules and regulations are reasonable and desirable to accomplish the altruistic purposes of the legislation.

The Housing Administration has refused to approve applicants for insurance institutions whose practices they did not consider fair and just. They have stricken from their list of approved agencies numerous institutions whose practices have been regarded as obnoxious and unreasonable. This is the only way we can intelligently deal with the situation. It sounds fine to talk about reducing interest rate. It is easy to get up here and criticize somebody.

These loans are not all made by banks, as has been indicated. They are made by various institutions approved by the Housing Administration. It is easy to criticize the interest rates charged, but everybody knows when you go to make loans of the type that will be made, to accomplish what we have in mind and to be insured under the provisions of this act, they are loans which cannot be made at the same low rate of interest which obtains on more desirable security. Everyone understands this. We have nothing to do with interest rates. That is a matter for State legislation.

If the time ever comes in this House when I shall vote on establishing the interest rate to be charged any legitimate interest or business in the United States, I will never favor 7 percent, because a 7-percent interest rate is itself usurious and unconscionable under present conditions. I repudiate any part of the responsibility for naming 7 percent as an interest rate in this legislation. We cannot name any rate unless we want to hamstring and hamper the Housing Administration in administering this law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEAGALL) there were—ayes 39, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUCE: On page 2, in line 3, strike out the figures "1939" and insert in lieu thereof "1937."
In lines 12 and 13, strike out "1938, or 1939."

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the reasons I shall give for the adoption of this amendment will undoubtedly secure its defeat, yet they ought to be presented, not merely for the edification of this large and enthusiastic audience, but also for the benefit of the public at large.

In the committee I inquired why legislation should be enacted in anticipation of disasters in subsequent years, 1938 and the first half of 1939. No explanation was given, no reason was advanced. From that time to this I have been cogitating over the problem of why this attempt to read the future and prepare for the unforeseen should be incorporated in the law.

I have discovered one reason, and one reason only, and it is that the next Presidential election will take place in 1940. It is the evident program of the Democratic Party to lose no opportunity, past, present, or future, to take away money from all the people and give it to some of the people for political ends.

Here I want to scold my brethren on the other side a bit for their lack of foresight in not completely carrying out the program. I would remind them that between July 1, 1939, and the first Tuesday in November of 1940 there will be 16 months, in the course of which there may be a flight of grasshoppers in Kansas, the potato bugs may become numerous in North Carolina and Maine, a dam may break in Missouri, or somewhere else there may arise excuse for giving the money of all the people to some of the people.

This is a neglect which, in view of my great friendship for my Democratic associates on the committee, I am sorry to feel compelled to call to public attention. This loss of opportunity, sir, is a serious matter. There may arise the possibility of spending millions and millions of dollars by reason of catastrophes in those 16 months. Why not amend this bill with that in mind? I had thought of moving such an amendment myself, but I did not want to deprive any gentlemen on the other side of making, by such a motion, amends for the blunder. I call it a blunder, sir, because that word has so often been used to characterize the conduct of the Democratic Party. It is known to be phenomenally capable of making blunders. It made a great blunder yesterday afternoon, perhaps the greatest blunder that will have been made in this session, when it dodged the issue, when it declined to tell the public what it thought of the sit-down strikes. It thereby exposed itself to the just and reasonable criticism that it has not the courage to face at once great public questions.

We have now heard, through the testimony before the Senate committee considering the Supreme Court, confirmation of what we had feared has been taking place in the matter of New Deal legislation. Furthermore, the recent decisions of the Supreme Court legalizing certain proposals that have come to the surface after they were at first put under water also show that any reasonable man must accept the conclusion that the failure of the New Deal to accomplish many of the results it has desired has been due to imperfect law drafting. The administration did not secure the services of capable men who were able to draft constitutional legislation. That is another type of blunder for which the gentlemen on the other side whom I address have been famous through the years.

In this particular case they have neglected a glorious opportunity to get money from all the people for some of the people in the months immediately preceding a Presidential election. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, every Member of the House and Senate, a few days ago, received a copy of the book, The Story of the Constitution.

I want to place in the Appendix of the RECORD a statement in support of the proposal to furnish each Member a generous supply of copies of this book in order that it may be furnished to all the schools and colleges and libraries throughout our districts.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The third sentence of subsection (a) of section 2 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "The total liability incurred by the Administrator for all insurance heretofore and hereafter granted under this section and section 6, as amended, shall not exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCOTT: Page 2, line 24, strike out all of lines 24 and 25 and insert:

"SEC. 2. Section 2 (a) of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended by striking out 'April 1, 1936, and prior to April 1, 1937' and inserting in lieu thereof 'April 1, 1937, and prior to April 1, 1938,' by striking out 'April 1, 1936, exceed 10 percent' and inserting in lieu thereof 'April 1, 1937, exceed 5 percent', and by amending the third sentence thereof to."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section or to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SCOTT. No, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GREEVER). The Chair is of the opinion the amendment is not germane, and the point of order, therefore, is sustained.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SCOTT: Page 2, line 10, after the word "thereon", strike out the remainder of line 10, all of lines 11, 12, 13, 14, and in line 15 the word "located."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment will not be——

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, is it not a little late for that?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield for that purpose?

Mr. SCOTT. No, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. SCOTT. The amendment will not emasculate the bill. It will simply continue title I of the Housing Act, which expired on April 1, except that it reduces the insurance to 5 percent. It will not in any way affect the flood-relief section of the bill, as there are ample reserves to take care of everything. No additional appropriation is necessary for a continuation. The original $100,000,000 credit of the Government still has $15,000,000 upon which to operate. If the Government guaranty is reduced from 10 percent to 5 percent, which is ample, the banks will continue to make loans and this fund will handle an additional $300,000,000 worth of construction. As the effect will simply be to continue title I of the Federal Housing Act, I do not know of any particular reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the gentleman from California had already begun debate on the amendment prior to the time the point of order was made. Therefore, the point of order came too late.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the chairman permit me to say that the moment I was able to follow the reading of the amendment I was on my feet asking recognition to make a point of order. I could not know what was in the amendment; it had never been called to my attention, and it was impossible to know the effect of it until its reading had been completed and until I could follow the reading as it related to the bill. As soon as I could I rose to make a point of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order came too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the amendment had been read by the Clerk and that the gentleman from California had been recognized and had entered upon debate. Therefore the point of order came too late and the Chair so ruled.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the effect of this amendment would be to extend title I of the Housing Act and to defeat all the provisions of the present bill, and would leave no provision in the Housing Act for the continuation of insurance of relief loans as was provided under the act of last year, which we amend by the bill now before the House. I just wish the membership of the Committee to understand the effect of the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Did I understand the gentleman to say that if this amendment is adopted it will nullify everything we have been trying to do here today?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then I hope the amendment is defeated.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. Did the gentleman say that if this amendment were adopted it would nullify everything that was done today?

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely. The bill before the House attempts to extend the benefits of the provisions of the act of last year, which terminated on the 1st of January of this year, providing for the insurance of loans to people who suffered from disasters prior to the 1st of January 1937; and the effect of this amendment would be to continue title I of the Housing Act, and there would be nothing left of the bill now before the House.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Would not those flood disaster sufferers be able to get their loans if title I were continued?

Mr. STEAGALL. They would, under the general provisions of title I of the Housing Act, but not under the special act passed for their benefit last year, nor under the provisions of the bill before us which attempts to extend the benefits of that act.

Mr. SCOTT. But they would get the benefit?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. GREEVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill, S. 1228, to amend the National Housing Act, and, pursuant to House Resolution 174, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to recommit which I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 2, line 23, after the word "section", strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no loan shall be insured under the provisions of this act which bears a rate of interest in excess of 7 percent per annum."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 25, noes 65.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 215, not voting, 116, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCOTT and Mr. JENKINS of Ohio asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

DISASTER LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 251, to extend the lending authority of the Disaster Loan Corporation to apply to flood disasters in the year 1936.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is my impression that a rule has been granted for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that one or two Members on this side may want to discuss the bill briefly. I wonder if an agreement could not be reached as to time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states to the gentleman that Members can discuss the bill under the 5-minute rule.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for loans made necessary by floods or other catastrophes of the year 1937", approved February 11, 1937, is hereby amended as follows:

By striking out of the second paragraph thereof "year 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "years 1936 or 1937."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to tax the patience of the House by undertaking a lengthy explanation of this bill. I am sure every Member is familiar with its provisions. It will be remembered that on February 11, 1937, we passed an act for the establishment of the Disaster Loan Corporation to be officered by officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the purpose of making loans to sufferers from disasters during the year 1937. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of that act we made available the sum of $20,000,000 which had been left over from a fund of $50,000,000 that had been provided in an act of last year designed to afford relief of the same type for people who suffered from similar disasters during the year 1936. Loans to victims during 1936 could not be made after January 1, 1937.

The provisions of the pending resolution extend the benefits of the act of February 11, 1937, to sufferers from disasters during the year 1936, so that anybody who was not taken care of under the former act will be eligible for loans under the recent legislation. Victims of disasters in 1936 will share in the benefits of the recent act, the same as those of 1937. This, in short, Mr. Speaker, is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I understand the pending bill merely permits sufferers of the 1936 floods to enjoy the same benefits enjoyed by the sufferers in the recent disasters.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FORD of California: On page 1, line 4, after the word "floods", add a comma and the word "freeze."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, in 1937 the State of California suffered a tremendous loss by reason of a freeze that affected the citrus belt, causing damage to the extent of $55,000,000 or $60,000,000. The great majority of the growers can take care of their losses.

There are a few small groves, however, that were just about to come into bearing caught in this frost and those groves were set back 1 or 2 years. Those people have exhausted their capital in bringing the groves to that point of production. If they can get a small loan for 1 or 2 years, it will carry them over and save a number of groves in the State. I may say every dollar of this money will be paid back.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist upon his point of order?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my point of order against the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] proposes to amend the title of an existing law. The Chair is of opinion that an amendment to the title of an existing act is not germane to the substantive matter of the proposed joint resolution, and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, and may I ask the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to give me his attention.

This is a matter some of us have not heard much about. The other day we passed the Disaster Loan Corporation bill and set up the Disaster Loan Corporation. At that time the gentleman strenuously opposed the Disaster Corporation taking care of the flood sufferers of 1936 on the ground it was retroactive. He stated we could not go back and take care of these floods. A few years ago in Michigan we had a hog-cholera epidemic. Then one year the frost got all of the peach blossoms. Some of our people have not recovered from those disasters.

Mr. STEAGALL. What is the gentleman's question to me?

Mr. MICHENER. In just a moment. Following the logic of the gentleman as presented when the Disaster Corporation bill was up for consideration, if we could not take care of these things that happened in the past then, I am wondering why he brings in this bill which will take care of floods that occurred in 1936? That is retroactive. In other words, if his logic was good a week ago then is it bad today?

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to say that he evidently does not remember correctly the position I took on the occasion to which he refers. I made no objection to including in that act those who suffered from disasters of 1936. The bill before us at that time had been passed by the Senate and had been called up in the House by unanimous consent.

The suggested amendment would have delayed its passage for several days when we were in the midst of immediate suffering in Kentucky and other States by floods with which they had just been victimized. For that reason I urged that the amendment be not pressed at the time. One amendment was withdrawn upon my assurance I would request the Banking and Currency Committee, as soon as I could, to call a meeting to consider legislation for the benefit of the sufferers of 1936. In compliance with that agreement we offer the resolution before us this afternoon.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman states that the bill was passed the other day because he promised to take care of some floods, if he could get his bill passed that day. Would it be possible to have the gentleman promise now that if this bill goes through, he will bring in more bills to take care of other disasters, other floods, and other unfortunate things that have happened in years gone by?

I was not exactly facetious when I referred to the hog-cholera epidemic and the frostbitten peach blossoms in Michigan. Of course, these things are catastrophes, especially so when it deprives the farmer of his year's income. There are many thousands of such catastrophes happening to our people every year. These things have been happening since the beginning of time and will continue to the end of time. It is well and necessary for the Federal Government to come to the rescue of its people when national emergency overtakes them; at the same time it is not the function of the Federal Government to rush into local communities and render assistance every time some farmer loses a cow, a businessman suffers a fire loss, or where the professional person is prevented by a spell of sickness from carrying on his occupation. A feeling is growing up among the people that they must look to Washington more and more for assistance. The natural sequence is that while they are looking to Washington for assistance they are submitting to control and regulation from Washington. In these days it seems so easy when something goes wrong at home, just to ask the Federal Treasury to furnish the funds to repair the injury. This is a dangerous custom and has brought about a deplorable lack of self-reliance and community responsibility among our people. This thing must stop. There is a bottom to the Federal Treasury. The Federal Government is still spending $2 for every $1 of its income.

It seems inevitable that we must increase Federal taxes. I say inevitable because it seems impossible for the Government to curtail expenditures. We have been assured by the administration that there will be no new taxes but that the expenses will be paid and the Budget balanced out of increased Federal revenue and without more taxes. It has already been demonstrated that this promise is fallacious. We are now squarely up against the facts; we have reached the crossroads in the highway and ere long must provide for additional taxes unless we stop these expenditures.

This bill before us takes care of 1936 catastrophes. Now, as a matter of fact, the local communities have already taken care of these emergencies in those communities. They did not get Federal aid. In 1937 the Congress passed the Disaster Act to care for this year's catastrophes. Immediately the Members of Congress representing districts suffering in 1936 started pressure movements to get some of this easy Federal money for their bailiwicks, and as is evidenced by the report of this committee this pressure has been effective. In the language of Smanthy Allen in the old book called The Cabbage Patch, "What is good for Thomas Jefferson is good for Tursy Ann." As a result we are all trying to get our hands into the Federal Treasury to take some of the easy money back home. I shall not be surprised to have other bills brought before us taking care of other unfortunate circumstances transpiring in the past and in days when it was not so popular to rush to Washington as the national nursemaid.

This whole policy must be discontinued and we must return to individual and local responsibility or else our country is going bankrupt. Warnings are of little value in Congress at this time, but the taxpayer is soon going to be aroused, and when he does realize how generous the Congress is with his hard-earned tax money, then the people back home will speak in no uncertain terms.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan relative to the broad scope of this bill were not intended as serious criticism of the proposal. Certainly, there should be no doubt as to the merit of the bill. This bill, House Joint Resolution 251, is simply an amendment to the amended Disaster Loan Corporation Act of 1936. Because in the first amendment to that bill the disasters of 1936 were omitted, the purpose of this bill is to cover those disasters, which, of course, should be covered. Fortunately, no real opposition has developed to this most just and equitable proposal, and under ordinary circumstances I would not take the time of the House in debating it.

Since some discussion has now arisen, however, I desire to say a brief word about the bill because it is of vital and particular interest to a little community in my own district. The town of Bandon, Oreg., last September was completely destroyed by fire which had its origin in one of the great forest areas of my State. In 45 minutes that thriving little city was wiped off the map almost as completely as if it had never existed. Bandon was a town of about 1,500 inhabitants. The total property loss in Bandon, by reason of the fire, was something more than $2,000,000, of which about $350,000 was municipal property, which included streets, sidewalks, all water and sewerage, light and power establishments, and all public buildings and equipment of every kind. Practically every dwelling house, about 500 in number, as well as the entire business section of the town, was destroyed.

The city of Bandon is wholly unable to rebuild its public property destroyed by fire. The disaster reduced the assessed valuation of all taxable property within the city from $798,110 to $424,680, against which reduced valuation there now stands a municipal debt of over $280,000, plus delinquent taxes of upward of $200,000.

Obviously, a municipality so situated cannot raise taxes immediately. Obviously, it cannot issue salable bonds. Obviously, it cannot offer the kind of security for a loan that is required under the original Disaster Loan Corporation Act. Neither can it offer the kind of security required by any other existing Federal loaning agency.

The town still has its principal pay roll intact because that pay roll came principally from the large sawmill located outside of town and beyond the fire zone. They have everything at Bandon with which to rebuild that little community except the money to go ahead and do the work. If this bill passes, Bandon can secure from the Disaster Loan Corporation the money necessary to rebuild all of its public property destroyed by the fire.

The amendment we are now considering will offer this little town of Bandon, Oreg., the chance for existence which otherwise it would not have. To Bandon, as a municipality, the enactment or defeat of this measure means all the difference between life and death. I dare say that under the amendment we are presently considering there are hundreds of towns similarly situated all over the United States which were damaged or destroyed by floods or fire or some other catastrophe in the year 1936, and these towns all will have the opportunity to benefit in the same way by the timely and humane aid which this bill is intended to provide.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Banking and Currency Committee for bringing in this amendment, and its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], for his interest and energy in having the matter brought so speedily to a vote. I am grateful to my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON], who introduced the bill, and with whom it has been my pleasure and good fortune to cooperate continuously since its introduction. To all of these and to the general membership of the House I wish to express not only my own sincere appreciation but also the heartfelt thanks of the citizens of Bandon and of all the people of the State of Oregon.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House Resolution 173, providing for the consideration of the joint resolution just passed, House Joint Resolution 251, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, April 15, following the address of the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT], I may address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is this the day the bill of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] is up for consideration?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. There will be 6 hours of general debate, beginning on Tuesday. However, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The Speaker. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

REDUCTION OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I again remind the membership of the House that, as a member of the Committee on Expenditures, I feel there must be no dodging of my plain duty, even though this afternoon I debate a question which I wish I did not have to discuss. Perhaps I should take for my text something I read this morning, which you may also have read: "The cherry blossoms are very beautiful, but they bear no fruit", "Students of recent legislation and Congressmen who voted for such legislation ought to recognize the species." Therefore, I may appear to be critical of some recent legislation. I wish to make certain comments on relief measures before the message of the President is placed before us. I shall try to have the courage to discuss even the C. C. C. camps. In view of the wellnigh universal approval of them, I may well hesitate.

May I first add to what the gentleman from New Jersey has said today, and say that as far as relief legislation is concerned it has been politically very successful? Will you read the Review of Reviews of this week and note the comment of the editor to the effect that Mr. Farley certainly could have carried Maine and Vermont if he had taken the trouble? The editor goes on to say—

> Why, yes, he could have carried all the Provinces of Canada, he could have changed the Mexican Government, he could have upset Hitler, and he could have stopped the war in Spain, with the thousands of millions of dollars he had to use about as he saw fit.

These are not my words, and, even if the editor's statement is overdrawn, I hope that I may have interested you enough to read the whole article. You may really get something of value from it.

A message will be sent to us soon asking for more billions for relief—and we have no money. In one breath we are told we must not borrow any more and in the next we are told we must have several more billions. Economically, relief appropriations have probably not been too successful; politically, successful beyond your fondest hopes. Actual success will be determined much later on when we shall have suffered the evils of an indebtedness of possibly $35,000,000; that is, if it shall later have brought on the feared inflation and other dangers. We will then regret our zeal, which has so often overcome our judgment.

We are apparently to make permanent the C. C. C. camps. Do we know enough about them? What of the enormous expense involved? I have tried to learn about them, as I have endeavored to learn about other relief expenditures. I have visited such camps often. I have addressed the young men on many occasions. I have tried to contribute to their entertainment. I have seen much of their work in my own territory. In my district I have seen two camps built at large expense and then wholly abandoned. I looked at the work done and was assured by a competent forester that, with a tractor and 20 men familiar with work in the woods, he could have done what these 300 boys had done in the same time.

I am for the aims of C. C. C. I do not regret the expense of the work that has been of any permanent value. I want all the intangible values you can mention retained. However, I am not at all pleased with the enormous expenses, as shown in the figures I have been able to secure. If my Committee on Expenditures would allow us to call witnesses, we could get more definite ones. I can get them only by way of newspaper reports and comments and by the speeches made here.

I cannot get the information as accurately as I could if the proper witness were on the stand. While we read that there have been 1,700,000 of these young men enrolled in these camps, I am not sure of the number. However, if that is the number, many of them did not stay long. I know they say it costs, roughly, $1,000 per young man, but I find that it costs nearer $1,200 per person, yet we pay him and his family only $360. A contractor certainly could have done his work for $240. How about the balance of $600? We should provide much of the so-called intangible value for this sum and bring about far greater results in educational and moral values.

Cannot we take care of these intangible values for much less than this amount when it is admitted on the floor of this House that every 21,000 of the 350,000 are taking advantage of the correspondence courses provided? Think of it! Of the $486,000,000 that it cost last year, only $1,000,000 was expended for these educational or intangible features, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Lately I have written several of the educational workers in the camps asking if they would explain to me more carefully the value of the intangible features of the work. Always, when I visit them or when they write me, they tell me about one young man or a certain limited number who have shown excellent results. I received a letter just this morning about one young man who is a high-school graduate. He did not need to be taught the three "R's", but he had lost his courage and the camp had brought about a better outlook on life as a result of which he had been greatly benefited. Seemingly some other way might, perhaps, be provided at much less expense to help in such cases. Certainly more discipline is needed in most of these camps. The men can usually stay out as late at night as they wish to. You and I have picked them up on the road at all hours of the night and they tell you they can get back into camp any time they please, providing that they are on hand for work in the morning.

I hope the Members will ponder over these suggestions and if anyone cares to comment on them I shall be very pleased. I wish to be shown if I am mistaken in my viewpoint.

I want the soil-erosion and forestry projects carried on, but such work is only worth exactly what a contractor would have done it for. This is a hard, cold statement of fact and we cannot get away from it. The fact that these boys did the work does not affect the value of the work done.

If you want to do something for these boys, let a contractor do the work at these lower prices and then give the boys some worth-while training and do not bait him with entertainment in order to persuade him to take a little of these educational advantages.

We must acknowledge that a large proportion of them do not get the sort of training we have been led to believe. Why boast so much on this floor of the intangible values when the facts do not warrant the tremendous expense involved? It is nice to have this work done, but the cost and usefulness thereof must be considered.

If the wages and relief is $360, and the work can be done for $200, let us find a better way to help these boys. Prices are now going up from 15 to 20 percent on supplies and you cannot say that we need this work for the further relief of industry. This argument is passe. The pump has been primed. If we now desire to make those camps permanent, we must face the facts and consider expense. Every State will wish to get its share, but camps should be located only in places where real and permanent benefits will be derived and not on land that is not worth $3 an acre, to be later abandoned to resume its former condition. I have in mind camps where they built 39-odd miles of road, now generally either muddy or dusty, and on land of little value.

Now the roads are impassable and now money will have to be provided from other sources to maintain them.

Do not expect posterity to point to many of these jobs as representing common sense and lasting values such as certain other speakers have conveyed. Let us preserve whatever of good we are doing for these boys, but let us not do foolish work, and waste unnecessary millions of money which we have had to borrow for this purpose.

I am not complaining about the work that needs to be done, but let us have it done at less expense and then use the saving for the actual training and education desired. We have been spending nearly $500,000,000 for three-tenths of 1 percent of our people, and if you include their families, it is then only 1½ percent, and if you add all the others involved you get only 2½ percent aided by this one-half billion of dollars. The cost was $486,000,000 last year and $435,000,000 the year before, and now it is proposed that it be a permanent expense. The proportions are the same, even if the number is reduced.

I hope you may not misunderstand me. I taught school a long time and I love boys as much as, and I think more, than almost any man in front of me. I think I have done my part during my life toward helping them. I have visited these camps and have talked to the boys. I looked at the lads in the front row but was more interested in those in the back. Of course, the camps have done much good, but not what we had hoped for, considering the amount of money spent and largely wasted in localities where the work was not needed and where the projects were later abandoned. Certainly there ought to be more of discipline and required application to educational features if the camps are to be continued.

I am bringing this matter to your attention while the subject of making the C. C. C. camp permanent is being considered. We must face the realities of this great expense and the fact that we are making no provision for meeting it.

You say you cannot measure intangibles by money. You certainly must do it. We cannot educate our sons without measuring exactly the amount of money it is going to cost us to do it. If we do not have the money, we have to borrow it and mortgage the future in so doing. It is no different with the Government. We have no money. We have to borrow the money in order to continue this experiment. Let us think it over carefully. We read in nearly all the newspapers that it has been a very wonderful thing. Of course, it has, if the results are really commensurate with its cost—a cost of nearly $2,000,000,000 to date.

Again I say I am very desirous that this matter be given full and careful consideration before saddling such a heavy burden of cost on our people. Are there not better methods at one-half the expense?

I am one of those who believe in direct relief. It costs 50 percent less than the present method of relief. Made work is surely only a form of dole. Made work largely is useless work. It may be like the cherry blossoms. It is pleasing to have them if we can afford such things, but we no longer have any money and have borrowed all that it is safe to do.

I told you we could not get the proper information. You must read the recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Two experts reported therein that, after careful examination, it was found that the overhead of made work relief is 39 percent, and only 15 percent in direct relief. We must now consider that information with great care and with a willingness to consider the arguments on both sides of the case. The word "dole" may be called by a better name and the sting taken from it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does not the gentleman really believe in a well-thought-out, long-term, long-range public works program?

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] recently congratulated you on the speed of your relief measures. When we voted you $3,300,000,000 in 1933, from April until Christmas, practically nothing was done. There was scarcely a project ready. I called attention here to the number of men in each State who had been put to work on what they called a "carefully selected, planned work", but very, very few were actually assigned to work on December 1. It was anything but speed. Just before Christmas, in desperation, checks were forwarded to every municipality in the country for one-half of its relief load, and another amount for work relief. Wealthy communities received and accepted these gifts, whether needed or not.

Speed? Yes, they greatly desired distribution before Christmas. But I could talk a long time about the dismal mistakes and failures of that period. But our memories are so short! Do not talk to me about "speed in relief" during those months from April to December 1933.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. There would not be a much better time to give it than at Christmas time? The gentleman would not want it given the day before election?

Mr. GIFFORD. Splendid. I appreciate that. But is the gentleman so pleased that it should have been given to these wealthy communities?

Mr. RABAUT. No. I am not pleased that they should give it to wealthy communities, but I do not think it is the proper time for criticizing something that was done just before Christmas. I think the gentleman will agree with me.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON] says, "Is it not wise now to conduct carefully planned work?" We had the C. W. A. What a stench, even in memory! We had the F. R. A. with much local control. Then we had the F. E. R. A., under the dictation of all sorts of officials of the Federal Government. Finally we have the W. P. A. Do you not remember the row between Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Ickes, wherein the latter wanted to take charge of all these carefully planned works on which the most of the funds ought to be expended. But Mr. Hopkins said we must have made work. It was quicker planned and would relieve more people. It may have. This may have been true, but lately his W. P. A. has largely been getting into the sphere of Mr. Ickes' recommendations, has it not? The W. P. A. now is greatly interested in matching funds for school houses, water works, and things of permanent value. We can be a little more hopeful of Mr. Hopkins' activities, which were formerly so wasteful. But they are still giving it to wealthy communities which can generally afford to match the grants and get there first with their requests. It is not right that wealthy municipalities profit at the expense of our Federal Government, now at the end of its financial rope, according to Eccles and Morgenthau.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. I agree with the gentleman on that. I do not believe in all that, but I do believe that business and the properly constituted organizations should begin to formulate some kind of a long-range, well-thought-out public-building program that could be put into effect any time it was necessary.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, for some years, now, we have had the Natural Resources Board and other boards reporting to Hopkins, who says, "Give the report to the poor. You make me laugh." That is about what he has said in reply to suggestions as to long-range planning and proposals for direct relief.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is true and I agree with the gentleman. Mr. Ickes believes in a long-term, long-range program.

Mr. GIFFORD. So do I, but I do not think they should give Federal funds to municipalities which do not need assistance and to States whose credit is as good as that of the Federal Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. I agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr GIFFORD. It should not have been done.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let me ask the gentleman just one more question, not strictly from a political viewpoint. We know that the Republican Party is against the expenditure of funds such as has been going on during this administration. Every Member of Congress probably has had the experience I have had of a wealthy community with no bonded indebtedness whatever asking me to help obtain loans to build schoolhouses, yet they are against spending. If they need it they should have it, and I would not want to take it away from them.

Mr. GIFFORD. I understand what the gentleman means. I recently read of a town where half the taxes are paid by summer residents, and it has just got a new water plant about half paid for by the Federal Government and a new schoolhouse half paid for through the same source.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. In March 1933, I believe, this Government owed $20,800,000,000. Today we owe about $34,000,000,000.

Mr. GIFFORD. Thirty-five billion dollars.

Mr. KITCHENS. All right; in March 1928 a man who had 100 bushels of wheat could pay $25 taxes. Today a man with 100 bushels of wheat can pay $50 taxes and have $75 or more left. If he had a share of stock in 1928, it was worth only one-tenth what it is today. He can get 10 times as much for it today as he could then—on a great many issues. A man with a bale of cotton in 1933 could pay $25 of taxes if they took it all. Today he could pay $50 and still have as much left as he could have got for the whole bale of cotton in 1933. In view of this, does not the gentleman think that the money the Government has been spending is helping the people, and that we really owe less today than we did in 1933?

Mr. GIFFORD. I appreciate, of course, the gentleman's viewpoint. I could wish that I were a wheat farmer or a cotton raiser. I own some little real estate. For some 5 years I have been unable to move any of it, and I am in no position to pay my taxes, just as I was 4 years ago. Now I am merely about hanging on. There are a lot of people who have such things who have been just hanging on for the last 4 years. I think a little sympathy is due them. Their condition is actually worse, for their taxes have been materially increased. The Democrats have now got the debt up to $35,000,000,000, and the Republican Party, when it comes into power in 1940, will not have a nickel left to carry on with.

I may say to the gentleman who commented a few minutes ago on the spending program that its effect will be largely determined by whether or not inflation or other dire results of borrowing come upon us. If inflation comes from our financial operations, and the people have to lose their savings and all values crash, we will wish to forget the great expenditures on borrowed money so blithely made during the last 4 years.

Mr. RABAUT. Is the gentleman's State doing anything now about a long-range tax program?

Mr. GIFFORD. We have a Democratic Governor. I am ashamed of his recent coming to Washington for help from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. RABAUT. Are they giving you any relief?

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course. I presume all States are demanding their share so long as lump sums are appropriated. We are going ahead under the present set-up, but can we not hope for a different distribution of relief funds?

I do not want to be political, but I know—we all know—we have to have votes. It is the votes that count. State and town officials must get their share of relief or lose the votes. They are judged by their ability to get these funds, unfortunately. Will that day ever come when you will say, "It shall go only to those who need it"? I will join with you in the proposition that every man who really needs relief shall have it. But the present methods of distribution are abominable in many respects.

Mr. RABAUT. I appreciate the sincerity of the speaker, but does not the gentleman think there is a general interest in the plight in which the people have found themselves rather than this criticism now from the political angle?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and you and I have plenty of people on relief who are going to be there permanently. You cannot drive them off. You say they have lost their courage, but they have lost their desire. We also fix it so that men do not dare go off relief and take a job, because it is such a hard matter to get back on the relief rolls. The situation is in a very sorry mess.

Mr. RABAUT. That is what is bothering them. We are changing it.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish you were. You have been a long time doing it. You have taken 4 long years and spent all the money possible, and now Mr. Eccles says you must not spend any more. He asserts that you must not borrow any more money; that the danger point has been reached. You have been skating on thin ice and must keep farther away from the water hole of debt and inflation. You must now force the States to take care of their own. Whenever the States prove they cannot handle the situation, I will vote with you gentlemen to help them, either by lending them the money or giving it to them. But stop these present foolish and dangerous practices. Carry on the P. W. A. as we can afford it. A man sandpapering a roadside for months at a time realizes he is on a dole and wishes he could have his time at home by himself, where he could do more for himself and for the Nation's good by having that time to work on his own property or for himself while receiving some direct relief.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the Federal Government gets out of the relief business, can the gentleman tell us how the States can reach these millionaires who take millions of income out of my State and live in New York and make them bear their fair share of this relief load?

Mr. GIFFORD. You are surely getting them now.

Mr. O'MALLEY. We are getting them through the income tax.

Mr. GIFFORD. And you still retain in your State the money that is invested. You do not talk about the money that has been lost. Much of the money invested there you still have in property located there. You have the wages of the men working on the property there. You have the taxes on that property. Now you would like to come into my State and siphon out even the profits the man has made.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Absolutely.

Mr. GIFFORD. You do that under the sixteenth amendment. You would like to have it all there. You would like to bait us into investing our money and risking it there and if we make any profit you want to siphon it back there. I fully understand that theory.

Mr. Speaker, there is much to be said on this subject of relief. As ranking minority member of the Committee on Expenditures, I want to do my duty and do it courageously. I am not opposing relief. I am not opposing the C. C. C., as such, but I am asking you to consider the tremendous cost. I know that better results should be had for much less money spent.

Mr. SPENCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I am somewhat surprised to hear the gentleman's attack on the C. C. C.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am by no means attacking that organization. I have suggested that some claims made for it have been greatly exaggerated.

Mr. SPENCE. The C. C. C., it seems to me, has taught the young men discipline and obedience and things they have not been taught at home. It has taken them off the streets at a time when they could not find employment. It has rendered a great service to the country. The cost, of course, is another thing; but I do believe it has been beneficial to our institutions and to the stability of America in general.

Mr. GIFFORD. I grant all that. But if I had a boy and you passed me $700 or more, I could spend it on him with a private tutor. You could do a lot for these boys and not leave them so much to their own ends. The gentleman knows all about that. Of course, some of these camps are very well handled. Some of them are not. Some of them are doing useful work. Some are doing little of value, present or permanent.

Mr. SPENCE. Does not the gentleman think it teaches them obedience and discipline?

Mr. GIFFORD. To a certain degree; yes. I am glad to help in any beneficial way I can, but I insist we could do much more for the real good of these boys with so large an expenditure.

Mr. SPENCE. Would they have gone to a private tutor and would they have spent the $700 that way?

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is now talking about something else. If they do not wish anything for them, that is another matter.

Mr. SPENCE. But we are doing something for them.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am merely asking the gentleman to consider the cost. I want all the good things preserved.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin about millionaires coming in, I wonder if the gentleman from Wisconsin objects to foreign capital coming into the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. GIFFORD. He objects to them going out again after they get in there.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does he object to capital going into his State, developing industries there, and supplying employment to the Wisconsin workers? That is what I am wondering.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The millionaires who have left our State to escape taxation made their millions originally in the State and brought very little with them when they came in. The only way we can get relief funds to feed these men who have been thrown out of employment after the orders have fallen off is through the Federal income tax. Then the Federal Government gives it back to them.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did they come in because the Wisconsin folks lacked the ability to develop their own industries?

Mr. O'MALLEY. They come in to cut down our forests and mine our coal. Most of them came in with carpetbags and went out with millions.

Mr. GIFFORD. It does not matter to me so much who has the millions.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It does not matter to me, either. I have not got it.

Mr. GIFFORD. It does not matter to me if they will only invest it properly for the benefit of humanity. I have told you about the real estate I have owned. I should not have bought it. I should not have struggled to pay the taxes. I made a mistake. Somebody else should have had the money, and they would have invested it a great deal better, perhaps, for the real benefit of our citizens. Few of us have the capacity to use wealth properly, but all of us can envy those who do wisely control the use of it.

I do not think we ought to complain if the man who has money uses it properly for the benefit of humankind.

Mr. COOLEY. What did the gentleman state is the average cost of keeping a boy in a C. C. C. camp?

Mr. GIFFORD. One thousand two hundred dollars. It was claimed on the floor the cost is, roughly, $1,000. The expense was $486,000,000 last year. There were less than 351,000 enrollees. You divide it. If you divide it, you will find it is more than $1,200. [Applause.]

I will not take further time to enlarge on this subject. I will extend my remarks. Do not say I am against either relief or the C. C. C. I am not. I simply wish to protect the Treasury and get better results from these enormous spendings.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the last special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 12, 1937.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Claims

Senate Concurrent Resolution 51

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma has exhibited to the Legislature of the State of Texas a brief showing that, since statehood, Oklahoma has been deprived of the right of taxation of Indian lands and oil and gas from restricted Indian lands, amounting to a large sum, which had to be provided by increased taxes on the remainder of the property belonging to other citizens of that State; and that the State of Oklahoma and its other citizens have sustained the loss of a large amount of revenue on account of such exemption and as a result thereof, have been compelled to bear the burden of the principal cost of government, education, highways, and police protection enjoyed by the Indian population, wholly from taxes raised from the property of the taxable citizens of the State; and that the Indians enjoying such immunity from taxation are wards of the United States and not wards of the State of Oklahoma; and

Whereas it appears from this showing that the citizens of the State of Oklahoma should be reimbursed by the United States and should not be required alone to bear this added burden: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Texas (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be requested to take the necessary steps to ascertain the amount of loss or detriment suffered by the State of Oklahoma and the people of Oklahoma, through a proper fact-finding committee or tribunal and to make an adequate appropriation to reimburse the State of Oklahoma; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Texas be requested and instructed to send a duly authenticated copy of this resolution to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Congressman from the State of Texas, and to the Honorable John N. Garner, Vice President of the United States, and to the Honorable Allen G. Nichols, president pro tempore of the Senate of the State of Oklahoma, and to Hon. J. T. Daniel, speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Whereas the cost of shipping a ton of freight from continental United States to the Territory of Hawaii is $5.75 for a 2,200-mile trip, which is one-fourth of 1 percent per mile, while the local shipping company, the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Co., charges for a 90-mile trip (Honolulu to Kahului) $3.80 per ton, which is a little over 4 cents per mile and incidentally just 16 times higher per mile than the freight rate from the mainland; and the same rate applies to other ports from Honolulu; and

Whereas the exorbitant rates charged by the local steamship line have and are doing the Territory of Hawaii a great injustice, as this Territory is an agricultural country and approximately $19,000,000 of the purchasing power of the Territory of Hawaii went out for the purchase of foodstuffs, a great share of which could be and should be grown and produced in the Territory of Hawaii, utilizing the natural resources of this country, and opening up new fields of endeavor for the growing and unemployed population and making Hawaii safe from starvation in the event of an emergency; and

Whereas, as stated above, it is utterly impossible for local farmers to compete with the importers of food produce from the mainland on account of the outrageous rates charged by the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Co. between islands, thus enabling Matson Navigation Co. to have a full load of sugar and pines on their vessels going to the mainland and a full load of freight (produce and food that should be grown in Hawaii) on the return trip; and

Whereas the Army and Navy officials have for many years been pleading with their superior officials in Washington, D. C., that more diversified agricultural products should be grown in Hawaii so that Hawaii would be able to sustain itself in an emergency and prevent starvation in the Hawaiian Islands should the food supply, for some reason or other, be suddenly shut off; and

Whereas the Territorial government should, through its proper departments, render aid in any efforts to remedy the lack of a market for Territorial grown and produced goods, so that the importers and shippers shall not have a free hand in depriving the Territory of Hawaii of making itself self-sustaining; and

Whereas if the Federal Government—the Army and Navy—would cooperate and assist the farmers of Hawaii to create a market by establishing purchasing depots on the islands of Hawaii, Molokai, Kauai, and Oahu, where the farmers and truck gardeners and other producers could deliver and sell their products to the Army and Navy and have these products delivered from these various depots on Army and Navy water transportation, it would greatly add to the well-being and security of these islands; and

Whereas this proposed procedure would be an incentive and guarantee to the youth of Hawaii and the average man who is willing to earn an honest living and be a farmer with a market in sight which would insure him against exploitation of large business concerns who have profited greatly by working in with the shipping companies and importing most of Hawaii's food from the mainland: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, be respectfully requested and memorialized to establish purchasing depots on the islands of Hawaii, Maui, Molokai, Kauai, and Oahu, and that all products purchased at these depots be delivered to the various Army and Navy posts by and on Army and Navy transportation, for the purpose of opening up the markets of diversified agriculture so that Hawaii and its inhabitants will not starve if and when an emergency arises that will shut off the source of food supply to Hawaii; and be it further

Resolved, That, in addition to the above-named officials of the United States Government, a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the commanding officer of the United States Army in Hawaii, to the commandant of the Fourteenth Naval District, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Memorial relating to the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

To provide for the protection of land resources, to promote the profitable use of agricultural lands, and to ameliorate the injury to agricultural prosperity occasioned by the decision of the Supreme Court declaring invalid the Agricultural Adjustment Act, Congress passed and on April 27, 1935, the President approved the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

This act, as administered, has proved of great benefit to the agricultural industry.

Under the terms of said act the administration of the act will be turned over to the several States not later than December 31, 1937.

There is strong reason to believe that by reason of lack of experience in and knowledge of the technique of administering the conservation program, and the fact that a majority of the States have failed to enact legislation to provide for such administration, the withdrawal of Federal administration will work a great hardship upon, if not destroy, the effectiveness of the plan.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, earnestly requests:

1. That the Congress take steps to amend the said act so that the Federal Government may continue to administer the program provided for therein in cooperation with the agricultural extension service or other suitable agency of the several States.

Adopted by the house March 4, 1937.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Memorial 2

Memorial relating to the protection of American farm products

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectively represents:

There is general recognition of the importance of protecting the agricultural industry of the United States against the destructive competition of farm products from foreign countries where, by reason of lower standards of living, and cheap labor, many such products, and particularly those stable in character, may be placed on the market at prices which the American farmer cannot meet.

In pursuance of this policy the Congress has shown its intention to extend protection to American farm products which are sources of starches, by imposing an import duty, or tariff, on such starch-producing products as corn, potatoes, and rice.

It is a fact, however, that certain other starch-forming products, because of improper classification, are permitted to enter the country duty free, among them being tapioca, sago, and cassava, which are classified as flour.

These products are almost exclusively used as, and in fact are, starches, and their admission without the payment of duty goes far toward nullifying the protection given to corn, potatoes, and rice.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, requests:

1. That the Congress take appropriate steps looking to the inclusion of tapioca, sago, and cassava, and any other products chiefly useful for their starch content, in the list of protected farm products.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

MEMORIAL REQUESTING THE PASSAGE BY CONGRESS OF "SEEING EYE" LEGISLATION

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Those unfortunate persons, the blind, who are doomed to go through life in darkness, are entitled to every aid, protection, and comfort that ingenuity or human sympathy may suggest.

"Seeing eye" dogs, specially trained, are being used with splendid success for guiding the movements of the blind and rendering their life more pleasant and more secure.

Wherefore, your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona requests:

1. That the Congress enact the bill now pending, H. R. 222, by Mr. SMITH of Washington, providing for the accompaniment of blind persons by "seeing eye" dogs on common carriers, without the payment of additional fare, and any other practical legislation recognizing the right of the blind to the protection afforded by the "seeing eye" dog.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Joint memorial relating to flood control on the lower Gila River in Arizona

To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

The storage dams on the Gila, the Salt, and the Verde Rivers, constructed and used for irrigation purposes, do not have sufficient storage capacity to prevent flooding of the basin of the lower Gila River in Arizona in periods of excessive run-off of the three rivers mentioned above, and of the other streams feeding the lower Gila.

The valley of the lower Gila has a very large and valuable area of low-lying lands susceptible of cultivation, which lands would be totally destroyed for agricultural purposes in the event of a serious flood in the Gila Valley.

The Reclamation Bureau of the Department of the Interior of the United States has investigated the subject of flood control of the lower Gila and has tentatively selected a dam site on the Gila River between the towns of Gila Bend and Wellton, Ariz., as a feasible location for a storage dam to control the floodwaters of the Gila and to prevent the damage which would be caused by a serious flood in the lower Gila Valley.

In addition to the utility of such a dam in preventing damage by floodwaters of the Gila, the gradual release of the stored waters behind such a dam would tend to stabilize the level of the underground waters in the Gila River Basin, and would permit pumping operations from the underground waters for irrigation purposes without lowering the water table to a point where such pumping becomes more expensive than is warranted by the benefits derived therefrom, as is the case in certain years under present conditions.

The President of the United States, in a recent message to Congress, has suggested a 5-year program of public works to be undertaken by the United States, of which sum a large part will in all probability be allocated to works for the control of floods.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, prays:

That the President and the Congress of the United States in selecting the projects to be included in any program of public works adopted by the United States and in the expenditure of any sum allocated to the State of Arizona as a part of said program, the need and desirability of a flood-control dam on the lower Gila River should, for the reasons set forth herein, receive serious consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Joint memorial relating to the construction of a highway to link reclamation projects of the Colorado River

To the President and the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

That the development of the vast resources of the Colorado River represents an outstanding opportunity for the conservation of the Nation's wealth, for providing employment, creating farm homes, and for developing recreational facilities for the nationals of this and other countries.

That there are along the Colorado River several outstanding reclamation projects and dams, namely, Boulder Dam, Parker Dam, Imperial Dam, the Gila project, and the Yuma project; and that a short distance below the international boundary line is located the Gulf of Mexico, and an opportunity for development of commerce by establishing a deep sea port for the benefit of the commerce of the United States and Mexico.

That there exist more than 2,000,000 acres of land irrigable from the Colorado River which, if developed, will furnish an empire of national importance, and that there are wonderful recreational advantages at Lake Mead, behind Boulder Dam, and in the Gulf of California.

That it is important to the United States that the reclamation projects and dams within the United States be connected with a good highway, for use, both in time of war and peace, and that such development could be made to bring about construction of a highway within the Republic of Mexico joining the proposed highway at San Luis on the international boundary line and connecting with the Gulf of California and the proposed international highway to South America.

That the construction of the proposed highway would relieve unemployment and be of great advantage to the United States.

Wherefore your memorialist, the Legislature of the State of Arizona, prays:

1. That the United States Government, through any of its agencies possessing authority for the construction of highways, or through the cooperation of two or more of such agencies, the Bureau of Public Roads, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Indian Bureau, or other agencies, construct a highway from Boulder Dam, or to connect therewith at Yucca Junction near Kingman, in Mohave County and on the Arizona side of the Colorado River, and connecting the said Parker Dam, Imperial Dam to a junction with the Republic of Mexico, at San Luis.

2. That if additional legislation be required or desirable for the consummation of this constructive improvement that the Congress enact the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Memorial relating to a grant of public lands

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Forty-five percent of the area of the State of Arizona is embraced in Indian reservations, forest reserves, national parks, and monuments, and other forms of withdrawal from entry and settlement.

This vast empire, while adding materially to the cost of maintenance of government, brings no direct revenue to the State and but little to the counties in which certain of the Federal reserves lie; prevents development at the hands of private industry, and affords little or no opportunity for the builders of homes;

The State, by reason of this unusual, if not unparalleled, situation, is deprived of a great and most potent source of revenue, and willing farmers and stock raisers of opportunities which otherwise would be theirs of making homes and establishing themselves in life.

Furthermore, practically all of the remaining public lands within the State lying without these Federal reservations is of a character which does not render it susceptible to title thereto being procured under the United States land laws. The problems of its proper utilization and development could best be met under State laws and through the medium of State administration.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, urgently requests:

1. That legislation be enacted granting to the State of Arizona the equivalent of two additional sections in each township in the State.

2. That the Legislature of Arizona be authorized to provide for the administration of such land in such manner and for such purposes as it may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate concurrent resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of legislation to make the National Youth Administration a permanent organization, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented today by Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, memorializing Congress to order the Board of Army Engineers to make a comprehensive survey and report for the development of power and conservation of resources of the Milwaukee River area, and, if such proposal is found feasible, to make the necessary appropriation therefor, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. DUFFY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the El Paso (Tex.) Kiwanis Club, protesting against the transfer of the headquarters of the International Boundary Commission from El Paso, Tex., and favoring the retention of Commissioner L. M. Lawson, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a copy of an address by Byron W. Skillin, delivered before the International Relations Club of New York University on February 18, 1937, on the war-debt scholarship plan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I have heretofore presented a memorial signed with 15,000 names, and a second one with 10,000 names, from the State of California in reference to the proposed court plan of the President. I now present a memorial containing 10,009 names of citizens of that State in opposition to the proposed plan. I ask that the memorial be noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be received, noted, and referred as requested by the Senator from California.

(The memorial presented by Mr. JOHNSON of California, signed by 10,009 citizens of the State of California, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.)

He also presented memorials of 137 citizens of Salt Lake City and Ogden, Utah, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a letter, in the nature of a memorial, from the executive secretary of the Providence (R. I.) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court of the United States, together with papers relative to a poll of the membership of that chamber on proposed changes in the Supreme Court, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GIBSON presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas one of the greatest needs of this State is for further improvement of town roads; and

Whereas, while we recognize that the various projects which have been undertaken by the Civilian Conservation Corps have been and will continue to be of great benefit to the State, we believe that if the corps is to be continued, the purposes for which it was created and organized can be accomplished as well, and the people of Vermont will receive even greater benefit, through the employment of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the improvement of our town roads; and

Whereas we believe that in other States than Vermont a similar need for improvement of back roads exists, and that in such States the Civilian Conservation Corps could be usefully employed in projects for the improvement thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That we earnestly request the Federal Government to give serious consideration to the policy of permitting participation of the Civilian Conservation Corps in projects for improvement of so-called town or back roads, for which other Federal funds are not now available, and urge the members of the Vermont delegation in Congress to lend their best efforts to promote the adoption of such policy and the enactment of such legislation as may be necessary therefor; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of State be hereby authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Director of Emergency Conservation Work, and to each member of the Vermont delegation in Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, favoring the enactment of legislation permitting participation by the Civilian Conservation Corps in projects for improvement of so-called town or back roads for which other Federal funds are not now available, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. GIBSON.)

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE presented the following concurrent resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of making the National Youth Administration a permanent organization

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby urges the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation and make such provisions as may be necessary to make the National Youth Administration a permanent organization; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted forthwith by the Secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of each branch of Congress and to the members thereof from this Commonwealth.

Mr. DUFFY presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to authorize a Milwaukee River flood-control project

Whereas lands adjacent to the Milwaukee River have suffered great destruction and damage to property and business by the overflowing of the Milwaukee River; and

Whereas a deepening and widening of such river has been found necessary by investigation to prevent the recurrence of other floods with consequential losses; and

Whereas a comprehensive plan of control will be adaptable to the development of electrical power: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin memorialize the Congress of the United States to order the Board of Army Engineers to make a comprehensive survey and report for the development of power and conservation of resources of the Milwaukee River area, and, if such proposal is found feasible, to make the necessary appropriation therefor; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. COPELAND presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas it is generally conceded that the Niagara Falls constitute the epitome of scenic beauty which is one of the wonders of the world; and

Whereas the force of erosion in the past several years has caused several rock slides which have seriously damaged the Falls and brought to the attention of New York State and the Nation the need of taking steps to preserve the beauty of the Falls; and

Whereas these authorities have stated that corrective measures could be taken by man which would not only allay the action of erosion but would insure more permanent existence of the Falls in their present beauty, and have declared plausible construction of weirs which would (1) control the flow of water to prevent concentration at the Horseshoe Falls, where erosive action has been speeded by the increasing volume of water, and (2) equalize the flow over the Horseshoe and the American Falls so that the latter would carry an increased volume of water and would not be left nearly dry at certain times of the year, as at the present; and

Whereas such measures would entail the engineering project which would require action of the Federal Government leading to an immediate survey and preparation of plans for the weirs; and

Whereas discussion of preventive measures is now occupying the attention of the Congress of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same hereby it, respectfully memorialized to enact legislation or take such other steps as would lead to correction of the present undesirable conditions recited therein to grant benefit to the Nation and of nature lovers in all parts of the world; and be it further

Resolved (if the senate concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives elected from the State of New York, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such Federal legislation as will accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. COPELAND also presented a resolution adopted by Warren G. Harding Council, No. 118, Junior Order of United American Mechanics, of Mineola, N. Y., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation to provide for the preferred employment of American citizens by the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

DEVELOPMENT OF NEW USES FOR SOUTHERN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I introduce a bill providing for the establishment of a regional research laboratory for the development of new uses of southern agricultural products, other than forestry products, and so forth, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill of the Senator from Mississippi will be received and referred as requested; and, without objection, it will be printed in full in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2140) to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of new uses of southern agricultural products other than forestry products, particularly cotton and cotton-plant products, for the purpose of providing new markets for southern farm crops, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a regional research laboratory for the development of new uses of southern agricultural products other than forestry products, particularly cotton and cotton-plant products, for the purpose of providing new markets for southern farm crops

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed (1) to establish and maintain a regional research laboratory at such place as he may select within a locality in the United States where cotton is the principal agricultural commodity; (2) to conduct at such laboratory research, experiments, investigations, tests, and demonstrations with respect to the chemical, physical, and physiological properties and utilization and preservation of southern agricultural products other than forestry products, such as cotton and its byproducts, cottonseed, moats, cotton hulls, cotton lint and linters, and cotton stalks, rice straws, rice hulls, tung nuts, tung hulls, sugarcane bagasse, palmetto fiber, and similar products, and particularly the collection, harvesting, preservation, and industrial utilization of whole cotton as a raw material for the manufacture of cellulose, with a particular view to the development of wider uses of Southern crops by industry; and (3) to make public the results of such research, experiments, investigations, tests, and demonstrations.

SEC. 2. For such purposes the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise such suitable lands, to acquire or construct such buildings and appurtenances thereto, to acquire such equipment, apparatus, and supplies, and to cooperate with other Federal agencies, State agencies, or individuals upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 for construction, organization, operation, and maintenance of the regional research laboratory for the first fiscal year following the passage of this act, and $400,000 for operation and maintenance for each of the following 4 fiscal years, and thereafter such sums as may be found necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, which sums shall be in addition to the established program of work adopted by the Department of Agriculture.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 251) to extend the lending authority of the Disaster Loan Corporation to apply to flood disasters in the year 1936 was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO PUBLIC EDUCATION

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it was the intention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to make a motion this morning to take up Senate bill 419. The Senator from Alabama, however, has been taken down with the "flu", and it is impossible for him to be here this morning. I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, when the Senate meets, or following the approval of the Journal, a special order be entered to consider Senate bill 419.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not able to identify the Senate bill by its number. What is the order of business?

Mr. HARRISON. It is the bill providing Federal assistance for education, and is Calendar No. 224.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest that the clerk read the title of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report by title the bill as to which the Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that a special order for its consideration for Thursday be made.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 419) to promote the general welfare through the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am compelled to object to the request of the Senator from Mississippi. The Senator realizes, no doubt, that, under the state of business in the Senate, he can make his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill whenever he chooses to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think the order I requested failed, perhaps, to convey the idea I intended. Following the approval of the Journal, if the Senate should recess, or after the conclusion of morning business on Thursday next, I request that a special order be made to take up Senate bill 419, and that a motion may be then made for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator repeat his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that a special order be entered to enable a motion to be made to take up the bill referred to by me on Thursday next. Of course, if the motion should prevail, then the Senate would consider the bill at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair see if he understands the Senator's request. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that, after the conclusion of the morning business on Thursday next, it be in order to make a motion to take up the bill which has just been stated by title.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is an unusual motion, and it is quite unnecessary. The Senator may ask unanimous consent to make the bill a special order, or he will have the privilege, if he secures recognition from the Chair, to move to take up the bill on Thursday without unanimous consent being given. I object to the request in the form in which it is presented.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator's suggestion as to a motion being made at any time recognition can be obtained from the Chair. We had intended to endeavor to take up the bill this morning. Inquiries are being made as to when it may be taken up. My object is to fix the matter for a day certain so that Senators may be informed of the fact. I realize that if my first request had been agreed to there would be no necessity for a motion being made, as the matter then would have been a special order. My request is merely that on Thursday the measure may be considered, provided a majority of the Senate agree to a motion to that effect.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator may make his motion whenever he sees fit to do so. I am not in a position to consent to make a special order of the bill to which he refers. Therefore I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me suggest to the able Senator from Mississippi that he merely give notice that on Thursday, when he is able to secure recognition, he will move to make the particular bill the unfinished business of the Senate. That would give ample notice without the necessity for asking unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I give notice that as soon as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] reaches the floor of the Senate the motion will be made sooner than Thursday, if the opportunity affords.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee which had under consideration the bill referred to by the Senator from Mississippi. I think the bill has merit, but I should like to say to the Senator from Mississippi that some of us will be guided, with reference to our position concerning the bill and a number of other bills, largely by what the Senator from Mississippi can tell us Thursday as to whether we are going to have a tax bill at this session and what is really our fiscal outlook. Is the Senator prepared to make a statement now?

Mr. HARRISON. I can say only for myself that I think there will be no tax bill at this session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that so far as my studies of the subject have gone, if we authorize an appropriation of $1,000,000,000 for aid to the States in the matter of education, as is contemplated by the bill to which the Senator from Mississippi has referred, commencing with $100,000,000 for the next fiscal year and adding to the amount $50,000,000 each year thereafter for 5 years, the aggregate amount authorized would be $1,000,000,000. Under the state of the revenues, as indicated by the estimates and by the receipts, we would have an enormously increased deficit, and that is the reason for my opposing the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

Insofar as I am informed, we have about exhausted the sources of taxation to which the Congress is willing and able to resort. Manifestly, we cannot go on extending Federal activities into new fields and spheres of action, and increasing expenditures, without making some provision for meeting them. As every Senator knows, the deficit is already a large one. While many efforts have been made to close the gap between receipts and expenditures, such efforts have not been completely successful. It seems that the time has about come—indeed, it has already arrived—when we should give more careful consideration to that subject. If we authorize $1,000,000,000 in this instance, and then authorize the additional appropriations and expenditures which are expected to follow, we will have a situation in which it will be necessary to increase taxation and probably to find new sources of revenue.

I do not think anyone will insist or can insist that it is our obligation to continue, without limitation as to time or subject, taking on new and added responsibilities for the Federal Government. Undoubtedly there is need for some assistance to the States which have been unable in the present conditions to keep open their rural schools, but the plan of the bill is to commit the Federal Government permanently to a policy of aiding the States, without regard to their need for aid in the matter of promoting education. It is the one last field into which Federal activity is to be extended. It is my deliberate judgment that very careful consideration should be given to the proposed legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas has stated what was in my mind. The bill will call for $100,000,000 at once and for $50,000,000 a year additional thereafter for some years, but there lying back of the bill are other bills and other measures providing for increased appropriations in new fields. If we are not going to the precipice, economically speaking, we must stop expenditures somewhere.

I have understood from the press that the President is to send Congress a message on Wednesday with respect to the fiscal situation. It is absolutely certain that unless we change the program of appropriations and extending the obligations of the Government we will have to have a new tax bill. I do not think we want such a bill. I think we ought to be able to curtail our expenditures so as to avoid it, and I am quite sure we can. Before I support the measure, notwithstanding the fact I think it has merit, I shall want to know where we are going with reference to expenditures during this session.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course, the bill is a very unusual one. It is one proposing the adoption of a permanent policy. For my part, I believe the sooner we come to the adoption of permanent policies and get away from emergency policies, the better it will be for everyone concerned.

We talk about $100,000,000 for the first year for schools. I have never been dogmatic and insistent upon carrying out my ideas to the exclusion of the opinions of everybody else. As one who believes sincerely in this proposal, I am perfectly willing, if other appropriations are cut down proportionately, to reduce this one likewise.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi what other appropriations he has particularly in mind?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I see where we are drifting in the discussion. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent to answer the question.

Mr. McNARY. I am willing to listen to the Senator for a few moments, but this discussion is wholly out of order. It will lead to interminable debate. I withhold my objection for a moment to permit the Senator to further explain his position.

Mr. HARRISON. I could not explain it in a moment. I will withhold any further statement until I have more time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

ACCEPTANCE OF MEDALS, DECORATIONS, ETC.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit and ask for the immediate consideration of a concurrent resolution.

Senate bill 1455, authorizing certain officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Navy and Army to receive medals, orders, decorations, and so forth, tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, has passed the Senate and House, and is now pending before the President; but it contains an error in the case of one man, who is referred to as a lieutenant instead of a lieutenant colonel. I submit a concurrent resolution requesting that no action be taken by the President until the correction is made, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1455) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy, officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the United States Army, and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered; that if and when the said bill is returned by the President, the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the said bill be deemed to be rescinded; and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, in the reenrollment of the said bill, to make the following correction, viz: In the language inserted by the engrossed House amendment no. 4, on page 2, at the end of line 11, of the engrossed bill, strike out the word "Lieutenant" and insert the words "Lieutenant Colonel."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask who the individual is in whose behalf the concurrent resolution is submitted?

Mr. WALSH. The individual is Lt. Col. James Roosevelt.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING OF HEARINGS ON BILL CREATING A FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. POPE submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 9), which was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

CROP-INSURANCE SYSTEM FOR FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to have the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INCREASE OF MIDSHIPMEN FROM DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 1949) to increase the number of midshipmen allowed at the United States Naval Academy from the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is a great deal of merit in this bill, but I ask that it go over so that I may confer with the Commissioners of the District of Columbia regarding it. They are very much interested in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement regarding the bill.

For a long time it has been generally believed that the District of Columbia ought to be better represented in the number of midshipmen sent to the Naval Academy and the number of cadets sent to the Military Academy at West Point. At the present time the District of Columbia quota of representation is five midshipmen at the Naval Academy at Annapolis. As a matter of fact the District has only four, because the appropriation bill each year contains only sufficient money to permit each Senator or Representative to appoint four, though the provisions of the general law permit the appointment of five. The quota for the smallest State in the Union is five midshipmen for each of its Senators and five for its one Representative. Thus the quota for a State that has two Senators and one Representative is 15.

This bill would permit the District of Columbia—which has a population of 600,000 persons, a population in excess of that of many of the States—to have in the Naval Academy at least the minimum representation that the smallest State has. Another bill is pending to provide similar representation in the matter of quota of cadets at the Military Academy at West Point.

With this brief explanation, I am content that the bill go over so that the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee may confer with the Commissioners regarding it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Has the bill to which the Senator refers, for the appointment of cadets to the Military Academy, been reported from the committee?

Mr. WALSH. No; but I will say to the Senator from Utah that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], who has been particularly interested in the matter, and I have conferred regarding the bill, and have agreed upon a general policy; and, of course, whatever quota policy is finally agreed upon for midshipmen at Annapolis should apply to the appointment of cadets at West Point.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that one of my reasons for calling attention to this matter, and desiring to confer with the Commissioners about it, is that in case the Congress increases the number of appointments of midshipmen, I wish to be sure that it also increases the number of appointments of cadets at West Point.

Mr. WALSH. That should be done; and I rather assume a bill dealing with that matter will be on the calendar, perhaps, at the next call of the calendar. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this increase has been petitioned for by a large number of citizens' associations of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. I am in favor of an increase, but I desire to see that each organization is represented.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, in connection with the bill which the Senator from Massachusetts has just discussed, I desire to say that no one wishes to see the District of Columbia discriminated against in the number of midshipmen and cadets; but the bill in question compares the number now appointed from the District with the number appointed from States that have a limited population, which apparently puts the District of Columbia in a position where it is discriminated against. I do not believe anybody wishes to be put in a preferential position.

I have before me the census of 1930, showing the ratio to population of the representation now had by States; and the average for the United States is 1 cadet for every 55,000 persons. If this bill should be passed giving the District of Columbia 15 midshipmen, on the basis of the 1930 population, the District's ratio would be about 1 cadet to 32,000 persons. If the District should be put on the same basis as the average of the country, 10 cadets would be the proper increase, instead of 15.

I desired to call attention to that fact. There are 26 States that have less than 1 cadet to 65,000 persons.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the presentation by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is deserving of consideration. His viewpoint is that the number of midshipmen or cadets should be based on the average population of the various States that send midshipmen to the academy, but that is difficult to work out, for the population of a State such as Idaho, which has 15 midshipmen, is very much smaller than the population of a State such as Massachusetts or New York. There is a reasonable argument on both sides as to whether this increase should be based upon the average population or upon the number of midshipmen who are appointed from the smaller States. My opinion is that perhaps the fairest and best plan is that the District of Columbia should be represented by the number of midshipmen—namely, 15—who now represent the smallest State in the Union. The bill is to go over anyway, and I am sure a satisfactory decision will be reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

DOROTHY WHITE AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 2108) for the relief of Dorothy White, Mrs. Carol M. White, and Charles A. White was announced as next in order.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury allocated by the President for the maintenance and operation of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and in full settlement of all claims against the United States Government, the sum of $500 to Mrs. Louis Abner, of Loogootee, Ind., for injuries sustained by being struck by a United States Government truck driven or operated by a member of the Civilian Conservation Corps on September 29, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William Blakely, as administrator of the estate of Joseph Blakeley, late chief electrican's mate, United States Navy, the sum of money credited to the account of said decedent in the ship's bank of the U. S. S. West Virginia or elsewhere if it shall have been transferred therefrom, constituting pay and allowances due and unpaid on the date of his, the said Joseph Blakeley's, death on May 13, 1926, at the naval hospital, San Diego, Calif., and all cash found in his personal effects on or subsequent to said date: Provided, That the said William Blakely, shall first file an affidavit with the Comptroller General of the United States showing the correct spelling of his, the claimant's surname: Provided further, That the sum so paid under this act shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for pay and allowances and cash from the personal effects of said decedent, Joseph Blakeley: And provided further, That no part of the payment authorized and directed to be made in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with the settlement of this account, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not had time to read the report on this bill, and therefore I should like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the bill is favorably recommended by the Department, with an amendment suggested.

Mr. KING. It is stated that it ought to be referred to the accounting officer. Has that been done?

Mr. LOGAN. That has been done, and the accounting officer has rendered an opinion. The claim was originally for considerably more than the bill carries, but the House of Representatives, following the recommendation of the Department, cut the amount down, I think, about half.

Mr. KING. If it has been approved by the Comptroller General and other officials of the Government, I have no objection.

Mr. LOGAN. That it has been so approved is my recollection. I know it has been approved by the Secretary of the Navy, and I think it was approved by Mr. McCarl. He held originally that the claim could not be paid, and it was then necessary to pass a special act in order to meet some objection he made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAUDE CURTEMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. Hunter the sum of $455. Such sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages resulting from the serious injury of the said Asa J. Hunter, who, on October 6, 1930, suffered serious injuries and was run down and struck by a United States post-office truck on October 6, 1930, in the city of Minneapolis, Minn.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. ROY S. KOSTENBADER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1936) for the relief of Roy S. Kostenbader, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the beginning of line 3, page 1, to strike out "That the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to cancel the charges, in the amount of $96.61, entered on the accounts of Elmer W. Laub, deceased, as postmaster at Belfast, Pa., by reason of the unauthorized expenditure of funds by Roy S. Kostenbader while performing the duties of postmaster at said office from January 29, 1935, to April 15, 1935", and to insert in lieu thereof "That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Elmer W. Kostenbader as compensation for their voluntary services in acting as postmaster at that post office from January 29, 1935, to March 31, 1935, and from April 1, 1935, to April 15, 1935, respectively", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of Elmer W. Laub, deceased, former postmaster at Belfast, Pa., with $96.75, being the total amount retained from postal receipts by G. A. Laub and Roy S. Kostenbader as compensation for their voluntary services in acting as postmaster at that post office from January 29, 1935, to March 31, 1935, and from April 1, 1935, to April 15, 1935, respectively.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Roy S. Kostenbader a sum equal to the total sum of any amounts paid by him to the United States in settlement of such charges.

STERLING BRONZE CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3701) for the relief of the Sterling Bronze Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the claim of the Sterling Bronze Co. for $8,168 for material supplied and work performed in furnishing and installing electrical supplies and equipment in the New House Office Building under contract ACho-23. Appropriations heretofore made for the construction of the New House Office Building are hereby made available for the payment of this claim in the said sum of $8,168: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington favor us with a brief explanation of this measure?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the bill provides for the payment of the Sterling Bronze Co. moneys due for the installation of certain equipment in the House Office Building. The contract was originally let to the Robert Phillips Co. The Phillips Co. failed and went into receivership, and the National Surety Co., which was on the bond of the Phillips Co., made arrangements with the Architect of the Capitol and the Sterling Bronze Co. to substitute the Sterling Bronze Co. for the Phillips Co. Then the National Surety Co. went into receivership, and the Comptroller General took the position that since the National Surety Co. was in receivership, the Architect of the Capitol could not proceed further with the Sterling Bronze Co. The Sterling Bronze Co. did the work and was entitled to the money, and they now have a release from the receiver of the National Surety Co., so that the Government will be protected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. SHOCKLEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 171) for the relief of George E. Shockley, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$620" and to insert "$323, in full settlement of all claims against the Government", and to add at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George E. Shockley the sum of $323, in full settlement of all claims against the Government occasioned by the cancelation of a contract entered into between the said George E. Shockley and the United States Coast Guard Service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

E. B. GRAY

The expenses of the members of the Board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said Board and their actual expenses of travel."

SITE OF SOUTHWESTERN REFORMATORY

The bill (S. 1724) to authorize the transfer to the Attorney General of a portion of the Fort Reno Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation, Okla., as a permanent site of the United States Southwestern Reformatory was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Attorney General, for use as a permanent site for the United States Southwestern Reformatory, established by virtue of the authority conferred by the act approved May 27, 1930 (46 Stat. 388), all of that tract of land containing approximately 1,000 acres, more or less, including all improvements thereon, now occupied and used by the United States Southwestern Reformatory under a permit dated the 20th day of April 1936, signed by Harry H. Woodring, The Assistant Secretary of War, being the southeast corner of the Fort Reno Quartermaster Depot Military Reservation, Okla.

FURNISHING OF SAMPLES TO PROSPECTIVE MANUFACTURERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1972) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell, loan, or give samples of supplies and equipment to prospective manufacturers, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under rules, regulations, and limitations to be prescribed by him, to sell, loan, or to give to contractors and private firms which are or may likely be manufacturers or furnishers of supplies and equipment for the use of the War Department or of the Army, under approved production plans, such drawings, manufacturing and other information, and samples of supplies and equipment to be manufactured or furnished, as he may consider will best promote the interests of national defense.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the bill is recommended by the War Department for enactment into law. It authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion and under rules, regulations, and limitations which he may prescribe, to sell, loan, or give to contractors and private firms which are or may likely be manufacturers or furnishers of supplies and equipment for the use of the War Department or of the Army, under approved production plans, such drawings, manufacturing, and other information, and samples of supplies and equipment to be manufactured or furnished, as the Secretary of War may consider will best promote the interests of national defense.

The bill has the recommendation of the War Department, and is in keeping with the Department's plans. It has the unanimous approval of the committee.

Mr. KING. Has my colleague any information as to the value of the equipment and commodities which will be transferred, and also whether any transfer will be under a grant which will have no limitation as to time?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I think there will be no limitation as to time on the grant, but as to the value, all I know is what I may infer from the use of the word "samples." I think the value would be small at all times.

Mr. KING. I shall not object, but I confess that I am not very much interested in granting for an indefinite period of time to Government officials authority to make gifts of property belonging to the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1472) to authorize the Secretary of War to dispose of material to the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "to dispose of without charge, except for transportation and delivery, to the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America such obsolete material as may not be needed by the War Department, and such other material as may be spared at prices representing its fair value to the War Department" and to insert "to sell to the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America such obsolete material as may not be needed by the War Department, and such other material as may be spared, at prices representing a fair value to the War Department, including the cost of packing, handling, and transportation", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such regulations as he may promulgate, to sell to the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America such obsolete material as may not be needed by the War Department, and such other material as may be spared, at prices representing a fair value to the War Department, including the cost of packing, handling, and transportation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL AIR STATION, SAN FRANCISCO BAY

The bill (S. 2049) to authorize the establishment of a naval air station on San Francisco Bay, Calif., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I shall ask that this bill be passed over for today. This request does not mean that I shall ultimately oppose the enactment of the proposed legislation. I desire to examine a very large file I have which involves the location of a number of naval air stations on the Pacific coast. Certain sections of the coast have been tragically neglected, and I desire to have time to go through my file and study this problem in its general aspects and in a comprehensive way from the viewpoint of national defense. I ask at this time that the bill go over, of course, without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

NAVAL PETROLEUM AND OIL-SHALE RESERVES

The bill (S. 1131) to amend the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920, relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have this bill discussed by the Senator from Massachusetts, who introduced it and reported it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill deals with the conservation and care of the naval petroleum reserves. The Navy now has three important naval petroleum reserves, two in California, and one in Wyoming, the famous Teapot Dome reserve. The Navy also has a fourth reserve, located in Alaska, which is within the Arctic Circle and 1,000 miles from the nearest open port. On that account it is at the present time not of particular importance, and no oil is being taken from its area.

In addition to these four naval oil reserves the Navy has possession of two shale reserves. Shale, as Senators no doubt know, is capable of being converted into oil through a retorting process. These reserves are located in Colorado and Utah. The cost of mining and extracting oil from shale is prohibitive at the present time. The average value of petroleum is about $1 per barrel, while the cost of converting shale into a barrel of oil is about $2. However, the two shale reserves are of immense importance, because when our oil is exhausted—and it is estimated that the present known supply of oil of the United States will be exhausted in about 15 years—these shale reserves will be capable of producing an immense amount of oil for the Navy, or for such other uses as the Government may see fit.

The naval reserve at Teapot Dome is closed and capped, and no oil is being extracted from that reserve. There are about 17,000,000 barrels in this reserve. Naval reserve no. 2, which is of some importance, is located in California not far distant from oil reserve no. 1, also located in California. This bill does not deal in particular with oil reserve no. 2, because it has been necessary, so far as oil reserve no. 2 is concerned, to make leases in order to protect our oil in that reserve, and most of the oil which can be extracted from that reserve has been extracted as a matter of self-protection. About two-thirds of the known oil content has been extracted and the balance will be extracted under present leases.

This bill seeks, first of all, to give the Navy control over the management and operation of the shale reserves over which it now has merely jurisdiction by Executive order. In other words, the bill permits the shale reserves to be managed by the Navy and administered by the Navy in the same way that the petroleum reserves are, and it seems to me there can be no objection to that new authority being granted.

Oil reserve no. 1 is of supreme importance, and it is very essential that we should have a definite and fixed policy in dealing with that reserve. It is estimated that there are now in that reserve about 600,000,000 barrels of petroleum. If it is discovered later that there is oil below the present sands, this number of barrels may be doubled, so that we may have more than 1,000,000,000 barrels of oil in that one reserve. This is on the assumption that we take steps to protect what we have, and that is the aim of this bill.

There has been, and is, litigation of great importance pending as the result of investigations conducted by my distinguished namesake, the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, in reference to some sections of oil reserve no. 1.

Mr. KING. In southern California.

Mr. WALSH. In southern California. It would appear that the litigation should be successful from the Government's standpoint, and that certain of these oil-land sections will be returned to the Government, on the claim that when conveyed originally they contained minerals or oil, and they never should have been conveyed from the public domain.

Oil reserve no. 1, so far as the Government ownership is concerned, consists of several sections of land under which oil is deposited. Among these sections, forming a checkerboard, are sections owned by the Standard Oil Co. Upon the edge of some of the sections owned by the United States leases have been made by our Government so as to prevent drainage. It is thought and believed that no further leases should be made, but that whatever oil is now in those sections of the reserve should be protected and conserved for future uses of the United States Government, and particularly the Navy; but, because of the checkerboard ownership or possession, if the Standard Oil Co. saw fit to do so, it could drain a great amount of our oil by drilling wells on sections which adjoin sections owned by the United States. There are no wells on many of these sections at the present time, and the Navy desires to forestall any drilling in the future.

The primary and important purpose of this proposed legislation is to give to the Navy authority to trade with the Standard Oil Co., section for section, with the ultimate intention and purpose that all the sections which the United States owns will be adjoining each other and connected with each other, and adjoining the Government lands will be the sections owned and controlled by the Standard Oil Co.

That is important, because we are informed that if wells are drilled in a section owned by the oil company, their drainage may extend a mile into the sections owned by the United States Government. Thus we shall do much toward conserving our oil if all our sections are placed together.

The bill also seeks to give authority to the Navy Department to enter into negotiations with the oil company which the Navy now does not have the right to enter into, and to make agreements or transfers of these sections with the approval of the President, and provides that a report shall be made to Congress of what action has been taken.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Masachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the bill provide that the exchange shall be made acre for acre rather than value for value? With respect to the Grazing Act, passed some time ago, dealing with the public domain, where the States owned considerable land, and where the checkerboard system existed, formed by land owned by the Federal Government and land owned by private persons, I may say that by that act authorization was given to make exchanges, not acre for acre, but taking into account the value, because one acre might be very much more valuable than another. I was wondering if the bill under discussion compelled exchange to be made acre for acre rather than taking into account the value.

Mr WALSH. This bill simply gives authority to enter into negotiations and agree upon land-section exchange, subject to approval by the President, and subject to report to the Congress. There is no definition of whether the sections shall be valued on the basis of the oil or on any other basis. The sections are assumed to be all of the same relative value. Each section is a square mile.

The bill also contains a provision giving the Government the right to institute condemnation proceedings to acquire some of these adjoining sections. It is not expected that that right will be exercised, but the provision is made for the purpose of bringing pressure upon those who own private sections adjoining Government sections of land to agree upon a method that will put the acreage owned by each in separate units and by itself.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The able Senator said that the bill makes provision for exchange of oil resources owned by the Government with private individuals or companies such as the Standard Oil Co., and a report must be made to the President. Before an exchange is made, will the transaction come here for study and final disposition by Congress?

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; the bill permits the Navy to negotiate or attempt to complete negotiations and provides for the approval of negotiations by the President and then a report is to be made to the Congress of what has been done, which is the present method, so far as leasing is concerned but not so far as exchange is concerned, because there is now no authority except to lease.

Mr. McNARY. Action upon the bill would be the final voice and vote of the Congress so far as the subject matter is concerned?

Mr. WALSH. It would not.

Mr. McNARY. What further right would Congress have to act?

Mr. WALSH. The Navy would consult with and obtain the approval of the President of the United States, and no action could be taken without the approval of the President.

Mr. McNARY. I asked with respect to Congress, as to what action Congress could take.

Mr. WALSH. The Congress will receive information of every transaction. It will be informed as to when leases are made, when exchanges of property are entered into, when condemnations are made, what the terms of the leases are, and what the prices are that are paid for the sections which it may be necessary to purchase.

Mr. McNARY. What is the area involved in these transactions?

Mr. WALSH. I wonder if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] can give that information. What is the area involved in oil reserve no. 1?

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not recall, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. Speaking very roughly, reserve no. 1 is 13 miles by 9 miles.

Mr. McNARY. Is just one area in the country involved?

Mr. WALSH. Of course this bill seeks to deal with all the reserves, but it is important only with respect to oil reserve no. 1, because Teapot Dome is closed up, and, so far as we know, no attempt will be made to use it, nor is it necessary to make any attempt there to conserve the oil. But in oil reserve no. 1, which is a tremendous asset to the United States Government, we are in danger of losing much of what we possess if we do not make some exchanges, so that our oil cannot be drained by the owners adjoining the sections owned by the United States Government. We have lost for future uses, because we were obliged to make leases, the oil in reserve no. 2. We are trying, by this bill, to avoid what happened there.

Mr. McNARY. I assume the committee held hearings on this measure.

Mr. WALSH. Extensive hearings were held. The committee went into the matter thoroughly, and has suggested several amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill deals with a very important subject. I have not had an opportunity to read the bill or the report of the hearings. I ask that the bill go over for the day.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have no objection, for I believe every opportunity should be given Senators to know what the committee has found. I think it is very proper that the bill should go over; and when it comes up again I shall try to have a map here showing the area, and the importance of some action being taken, some authority being placed somewhere and in some one's hands, to prevent this valuable asset becoming a negligible asset to the Government. It can be made of great value if satisfactory arrangements can be made to trade section for section, so as to put all the Government property in one area. I shall also discuss more at length the additional authority granted by this bill, which I have not reached in my present agreement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor may I interrupt him?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may say that, so far as the exchange is concerned, I think there can be no objection to it. I should be rather hesitant, however, to give authority to the Federal Government to bring condemnation proceedings against a large area of oil lands. Experts might say that the value is several hundred million dollars, but we cannot tell with certainty. I think the bill proposes too large a grant of authority to the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH. I will state to the Senator that the committee had the same objection the Senator has expressed but, after reviewing the situation and taking in the whole picture, we reached the conclusion that it would be greatly to the advantage of the Government to have this power from Congress in order to bring about the best possible results of any negotiations which may be made.

Let me add that the Navy Department reports to us the attitude of the Standard Oil Co. has been most friendly; that that company thinks well of the plan of exchanging lands, section by section, and that it considers it would be to their advantage as well as to the advantage of the Government. No one in the United States Government now has authority to take any action, though it is becoming increasingly important to do so.

Mr. KING. As I have said, I believe that is a wise thing, and I have no objection, so far as that is concerned, but there remains the other question.

Mr. WALSH. Let me add further that there is a case pending against the Standard Oil Co. which it is thought will be adjusted shortly to the advantage of the Government, and that the ending of that litigation will make it of special importance that this measure should be enacted.

I was surprised to find, after the extensive investigations conducted by my distinguished namesake, the late Senator Walsh, of Montana, that there was no new legislation on this subject. The original act of 1920 still remains. It appears that the investigations led to the institution of suits the results of which have been very beneficial to the country, but evidently the distinguished Senator felt that the authority to make leases to conserve the property was essential and should be entrusted to somebody.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, this is a proposition to enable the Government, through some agency, to exchange lands with the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; or other privately owned companies.

Mr. BORAH. Had the committee experts before it with reference to the matter? What I am wondering is how the Government will be protected from having its lands tapped by simply exchanging sections, for no one knows where the tapping is to take place.

Mr. WALSH. The Navy Department has in its employ officials and experts who are extremely well-informed on this subject. They made a very extensive study of it, and all of them appeared before the committee.

Mr. BORAH. I am very much afraid that the Government may cheat the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. WALSH. I can appreciate the views of the Senator in that regard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over. The clerk will state the next bill in order on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 599) for the relief of Earl J. Thomas was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DEVELOPMENT OF FARM FORESTRY

The bill (S. 1504) to authorize cooperation in the development of farm forestry in the States and Territories, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the bill just called, Senate bill 1504, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], is designed to authorize cooperation in the development of farm forestry in the States and Territories, and for other purposes, is an important measure. It needs fuller consideration than is practicable under the order of procedure now in force. I shall ask that the bill go over, with the assurance that it may be taken up again at an early date, if the Senator desires to move its consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, this is a very important bill, although, in substance, it is the same as the bill on the subject which was passed during the last Congress. It is national in its scope. I cannot conceive of any possible objection to it. I think all those who have investigated it will agree that it is a very meritorious measure, and it also has the very hearty approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. I realize, on account of its importance, that it is reasonable to ask that it go over for fuller consideration, although, if we cannot pass the bill under the ordinary call of the calendar, I wish to notify the Senate now that, at an appropriate time, as soon as I can get recognition, or, at least, within a reasonable time, I will move that the Senate take up the bill, so that, if necessary, it may be made the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not mean to imply that I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand, and the Senator's request is very reasonable; I am not finding fault with it.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I think the bill is of sufficient importance to receive consideration when the Senate is proceeding under a different order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On request of the Senator from Arkansas, the bill will be passed over.

FLOOD CONTROL ON LOS ANGELES AND SAN GABRIEL RIVERS, CALIF.

The bill (S. 1571) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think this is too important a measure to be considered under the rule governing the proceedings of the Senate at this time. It calls for $70,000,000 for flood control. The Congress passed a bill at the last session authorizing some four or five hundred million dollars for flood-control purposes. It seems to me that the project provided for in this bill should come within the provisions of the act which has been passed rather than be acted upon as a separate measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah pardon me for a moment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. McADOO].

Mr. KING. I so understand.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It does not provide for any appropriation. It simply makes a particular part of the water flow of Los Angeles County come under the provisions of the general law, enacted last year. For instance, the existing law covers the Los Angeles and San Gabriel Rivers. There is a small creek called Ballona Creek that is near those rivers, but not tributary to them. This bill simply proposes to include Ballona Creek in the measure that is now the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the bill reads, omitting the preliminary part:

In accordance with plans to be approved by the Chief of Engineers on recommendation of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors at an estimated construction cost not to exceed $70,000,000; estimated cost of lands and damages, $5,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it has happened in two or three instances that the flood-control law had to be corrected because the language was such that the Army engineers could not do what was contemplated. In this particular case the bill does not involve a single extra penny either for appropriation for the work or for condemnation proceedings. It simply means that in placing the works, the dams, and so forth, it can be done more advantageously by making the area larger, without any increase of expense at all.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Objection is heard, and the bill will be passed over.

EXEMPTION AND SURVEY OF SANTA MARIA RIVER, CALIF.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3306) to authorize a preliminary examination and survey of Santa Maria River with a view to the control of its floods, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the name "California", to insert "and the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watershed of the said river", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made of the Santa Maria River and its tributaries, in the States of California, and the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination and survey to be made for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watershed of the said river, with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved June 22, 1936, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RELEASE OF RIGHT-OF-WAY AT SPRINGFIELD ARMORY, MASS.

The bill (S. 1705) to authorize the Secretary of War to release a certain right-of-way no longer needed for military purposes at the Springfield Armory, Mass., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to release and quitclaim the easement or interest acquired by the United States from Edward Ingersoll and wife, by deed dated May 14, 1859, for a right-of-way in connection with Springfield Armory, Springfield, Mass., upon payment of a reasonable compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of War and to execute any instrument or instruments necessary to quiet title in the purchaser thereof, the said right-of-way being no longer used or necessary for military purposes.

MACKINAC STRAITS BRIDGE, MICHIGAN

The bill (S. 1104) granting the consent of Congress to the Mackinac Straits bridge authority to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the lower peninsula of Michigan, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Mackinac Straits Bridge Authority, in accordance with Public Act No. 35 of the 1934 extra session of the Michigan State Legislature, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the Straits of Mackinac, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point between St. Ignace, Mich., and the Lower Peninsula of Michigan, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of highway tolls, or the rates of highway toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, LA CROSSE, WIS.

The bill (S. 1897) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near La Crosse, Wis., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near La Crosse, Wis., authorized to be built by the State of Wisconsin, by the act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ARROW ROCK, MO.

The bill (S. 2076) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri

River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Arrow Rock, Mo., authorized to be built by the St. Louis-Kansas City Short Line Railroad Co. by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1929, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, ST. CHARLES, MO.

The bill (S. 2077) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near St. Charles, Mo., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River, at or near St. Charles, Mo., authorized to be built by the St. Louis-Kansas City Short Line Railroad Co. by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1929, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

AUTHORITY TO WEST VIRGINIA TO CONSTRUCT BRIDGES

The bill (S. 1917) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the State of West Virginia by and through the State Bridge Commission of West Virginia, to acquire, purchase, construct, improve, maintain, and operate bridges across the streams and rivers within said State and/or across boundary line streams or rivers of said State", approved March 3, 1931, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is interested in the bill which has just been called, and desires to be present when it is considered. He is unable to be present today because of illness. I, therefore, ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RATING OF GRADUATES OF NAUTICAL SCHOOLS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2084) to provide that graduates of approved school ships may be rated as able seamen upon graduation, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (a) of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea", approved March 4, 1915, as amended, is amended by striking out "after 12 months' service at sea after graduation" and inserting in lieu thereof "upon graduation in good standing from said school ships."

SEC. 2. Subsection (e) of such section 13, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "or proof that he is a graduate of a school ship approved by and conducted under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts explain the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, with the aid of the Federal Government there are various nautical schools, one in Massachusetts, one in New York, one in Philadelphia, and another on the Pacific coast. Since funds are being expended for the training of the students at such schools, their services should be acquired immediately after graduation.

By a strange quirk in the law these graduates may serve as officers, but are not permitted to serve as able seamen until after a year at sea following graduation. It is the belief that these men are fully qualified for certification as able seamen, and the purpose of the bill is to make it possible to make use of their services.

The Government has entered upon a program of subsidizing merchant ships. It is a well-known fact that personnel is more important than matériel. In no better way can we acquire at least a small group of able seamen than by utilizing the service of the graduates of these various schools. The Department of Commerce approves of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

AUTHORITY TO COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO REPORT DURING RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, all the Senate committees are very busily engaged, and I am advised by the respective chairmen that they are proceeding as rapidly as they can with the consideration of important proposed legislation. This morning's activities have brought the Senate Calendar up to date with the exception of certain bills, as to one of which notice has been given that a motion will be made Thursday to proceed to its consideration, and another which likely will be considered when the Consent Calendar is again taken up, and if not a motion to consider that bill will be made. The latter bill to which I refer is the bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] having relation to farm forestry.

In order that the committees may have a freer and fuller opportunity to consider and report important measures I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Committee on Appropriations may be allowed to report an appropriation bill during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow today's session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, to what date does the Senator expect the Senate to adjourn?

Mr. ROBINSON. Until Thursday, unless there is some objection. I wish to have the cooperation of the Senator from Oregon and other Senators in the matter.

Mr. McNARY. I usually register objection to a proposal of the kind submitted, but the conditions are somewhat "irregular", if I may use that term. If I may have an understanding with the Senator, I shall have no objection to the proposal. If on Thursday any Senator should want an additional day, under the rule, to consider an appropriation bill which may be reported, may we have it understood that the bill will go over? I doubt if such request would be made, but I want to keep the matter open in that way in fairness to some Member of the Senate who, being absent at this time, might desire to invoke the rule on Thursday.

Mr. ROBINSON. I see no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon. It gives me pleasure to say that if such a request be made I should not insist upon consideration of an appropriation bill reported during the recess or adjournment until it should have lain over for one day. I shall be glad to grant the request. I am also informed that there will be other business to engage the attention of the Senate for perhaps the entire day Thursday.

I submit the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL JUDICIARY—ADDRESSES BY REPRESENTATIVE DREWRY AND SECRETARY ICKES

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a radio address delivered recently by a Member of Congress, but before doing so I wish to make a very brief comment.

There was delivered at my apartment last Friday a card headed "On the Supreme Court", calling attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes, was to speak on the Supreme Court on Saturday, April 10, the radio period being from 10 to 11 p. m. eastern standard time, National Broadcasting Co., blue network. The card continued, "We urgently request that you arrange for radio parties to hear the speakers", notice being also given that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] was to speak, and also Postmaster General Farley. The card was signed "Mary W. Dewson, chairman of the women's division, Democratic National Committee."

By chance I was not at home either on Friday or Saturday, and I did not hear the radio address of Secretary Ickes to which my attention was called by Miss Mary W. Dewson, but, through the courtesy of the Public Information

Committee, National Press Building, Washington, D. C., I have been supplied with a copy of the radio speech of Secretary Ickes, the Public Information Committee, it having been stated on the floor and not denied, being an adjunct of the Democratic National Committee. I am not offering the speech of Secretary Ickes for the RECORD, although I hope that someone will do so, as I am sure at least all Members on this side of the Chamber will want to read it; but I do want to invite attention to just one thought contained in the speech. The learned Secretary made this statement:

> But, from the battle of last November the enemy has learned a lesson. Even John Hamilton now knows that a front line of Hoovers and Smiths and Du Ponts, of Liberty Leagues and American Bar Associations, will make the American people reach for bigger bricks.
> So this time Mr. Hamilton's front line consists of—

Then he classifies into three groups all those who are opposing the plan in reference to the Supreme Court; and it is that to which I wish to invite attention and make a further brief comment:

> So this time Mr. Hamilton's front line consists of deserter-decoys from the Roosevelt ranks in November, reactionary geographical Democrats frightened by November's proof of the real democracy of America, piqued professional liberals who would rather have no reform than one for which someone else might get credit.

So it occurred to me, Mr. President, inasmuch as most of the committees are not ready to report proposed legislation, that Members of the Senate and the House might be interested in engaging in a little game something like the crossword puzzle, taking the three classifications suggested by our distinguished Secretary of the Interior and arranging those who are opposing the President's plan in reference to the Supreme Court under the different heads, with a prize for the one who could more nearly and more correctly allocate the opposition. As a little guide, I am going to suggest, say, that among the "deserter-decoys from the Roosevelt ranks of November" might be included the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

I have a little more difficulty in making a suggestion in reference to the "reactionary geographical Democrats who were frightened by November's proof of the real democracy of America", but after due consideration I would suggest the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Then when I come to the "piqued liberals" who are opposing the plan only because they did not originate it, I think we could very properly go a little outside the Democratic ranks altogether in this body and include, in addition to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

These are mere suggestions, to be added to and enlarged upon as individual Senators may suggest.

I was coming, in more direct answer to the statement made by the Secretary of the Interior, to the speech delivered over the radio last Friday evening by a distinguished Member of Congress; but before coming to that, let me say that we do not need to confine this game to Members of the House or Senate. We could go outside, for instance, and include among the "piqued liberals", of course, Raymond Moley, Oswald Garrison Villard, Norman Hapgood, John T. Flynn, Dorothy Thompson, and some others who have made somewhat of a reputation as liberals, and who, I am sure, would be interested to know that they are "piqued liberals."

We might also add to such a list such distinguished gentlemen as President Conant, of Harvard; President Angell, of Yale; President Glenn Frank, of Wisconsin; Dean Bates, of Michigan Law School; Dean Smith, of Columbia Law School; and a host of other distinguished citizens who have declared their strong opposition to the measure; but I will leave that to future development.

Returning to the radio address delivered by a Member of the House, I think, of course, we should not neglect or overlook the fact that in the House there are Representative PETTENGILL, of Indiana, who has been out fighting the measure; Representative WILCOX, of Florida; Representative COX, of Georgia; and I believe the distinguished chairman of the House Judiciary Committee has not left unknown his views in reference to the matter.

But what I have in mind particularly, and with this I close, is the speech delivered over the radio last Friday night by the Honorable PATRICK H. DREWRY, a Representative in Congress from the Fourth Virginia district, who is now and during the last campaign was the chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee. I shall read only one statement which he made to show the pertinence of his remarks, and then shall ask unanimous consent, with the approval of the Representative himself, to have his entire speech printed in the RECORD.

This is what I should like to bring to the attention of Senators, having in mind the statement of the Secretary of the Interior that the front line of the opposition, all who are opposed to the plan, must be classed either as "deserter decoys from the Roosevelt ranks of November", or "reactionary geographical Democrats frightened by November's proof of the real democracy of America", or "piqued liberals." Mr. DREWRY, chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, among other things, said:

> It seems strange that such a plain and simple statement should have to be made, but when Members of the Congress of the United States, of equal dignity in our form of government, with the Executive and the judiciary, and outstanding citizens of the country, who have the welfare of the Nation at heart, are classed, because of their opposition to this legislation, as "the same elements of opposition" which, by inference, attempted to prevent beneficial movements for the care of the ill-nourished, ill-clad and ill-housed, then protest must be made by those whose independence of thought and action is thus impugned. I am opposed to this legislation—for I believe it to be neither necessary nor expedient, and in addition it establishes a dangerous precedent in our form of Government. I have great admiration for the President and high regard for the dignity of his office, and belief in the honesty of his purpose in recommending this legislation, but I claim for my office as Representative an equal dignity and for myself the right as a citizen of the United States to place loyalty to my country above that of adherence to the views of the Executive.
> I cannot be classed as being a part of the "same elements of opposition" that opposed former policies of the administration for I gave my services willingly and wholeheartedly to insure the continuance of the administration, and the control of the policies of the Government by the Democratic Party. But this proposal is not and should not be made a subject of partisan debate. The issue goes too deep into the center of the system of the Government of this country to become confused by partisans striving for political advantage. Every citizen, whether he be Democrat or Republican, is concerned with a change in the administration of justice as between man and man in our courts. I am presenting my view solely as an American citizen.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire speech of the chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, the Honorable PATRICK H. DREWRY, may be inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, taking note of the fact that a portion of the radio address delivered by the Secretary of the Interior has been read into the RECORD, I request that the entire speech be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS AFFECTING NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT (S. DOC. NO. 51)

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask that the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States, together with the dissenting opinions in the cases of the Associated Press, petitioner, against National Labor Relations Board (No. 365); National Labor Relations Board, petitioner, against Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation (No. 419); National Labor Relations Board, petitioner, against Freuhauf Trailer Co. (Nos. 420 and 421); and National Labor Relations Board, petitioner, against Friedman-Harry Marks Clothing Co., Inc. (Nos. 422 and 423); and the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Washington, Virginia & Maryland Coach Co., petitioner, against National Labor Relations Board (No. 469), involving the constitutionality of the National Labor Relations Act, approved July 5, 1935, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou God of the human heart, teach us the gladness of that life which is responsive to Thy messages through Nature. We thank Thee for the promise and the brightness of returning springtime. Leaf, flower, and fruit are beginning to clothe grove, dale, and hillside. We rejoice in the radiant sunlight and the deep blue sky. Surely the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork. All about us Thy beautiful world is thrilling with new life. Today, our Father, fill us with its calmness, serenity, and kindred joy. Awaken in us a like renewal which cold doubt has so often caused to die out. O Spirit of God, direct us and rule us, broaden our spiritual vision. Blessed Lord, as the grass, the flowers, the trees, and the streams are vocal with Thy praise, attune our hearts to their melody. Bless our esteemed Speaker and be very near to every Member of the Congress. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 9, 1937, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 48. An act to authorize an appropriation for investigations under the Federal reclamation laws; and

S. Con. Res. 8. Concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1455) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy; officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the United States Army; and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, rescinding the action of the Speaker and the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing said bill, and authorizing the Secretary of the Senate to make a correction in the enrollment thereof.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the leave of absence heretofore granted the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] may be extended 1 week because of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair may state, however, to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to all Members that requests of this sort may be filed with the Clerk.

PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX BY GOVERNMENT AND STATE OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question of the Speaker by way of a parliamentary inquiry. Will the recognition of the gentleman from Missouri in any way interfere with my right today to call up a motion on the Discharge Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the Chair would not allow the interposition of unanimous-consent requests to interfere with his privileges under the rule.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, the purpose of which is:

First. To require every Federal official and employee, elected or appointed, to make a Federal income-tax return on their salary and also require them to pay income tax to the States of which they are a legal resident.

Second. To require all State officials and State employees to make Federal income-tax returns on their salaries.

Third. To require officials and employees of all national banks and State banks, members of the Federal Reserve System, to pay income tax to the States on their salaries.

The joint resolution reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the several States, which conventions shall be composed in each State of delegates elected by a majority vote of the electors of the State voting at such election:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The Congress of the United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by any person as fees or salaries paid by any State, or political subdivision or instrumentality thereof, and the legislature of each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents as fees or salaries paid by the United States or any instrumentality thereof: Provided, That no legislation enacted under the authority of this article shall discriminate against income derived from the United States in favor of that derived from any State, or against income derived from any State in favor of that derived from the United States."

The necessity for this amendment grows out of the decision of the Supreme Court which held one cannot tax the other. Thus the Federal Government is restricted from taxing the State officials and employees and the States are likewise restricted from taxing the Federal officials and employees. Further than this the other interpretations placed on the sixteenth amendment by the Court makes an amendment necessary. It was certainly the intention of Congress, in my opinion, when it submitted the sixteenth amendment to meet the very situation that now exists. The amendment reads as follows:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

While that language appears specific, subsequent developments—court decisions—say it is not.

Another reason that the amendment is necessary is that in the case of Brush against Commissioner of Internal Revenue, March 15, 1937, the Supreme Court by a 7-to-2 decision, Justices Brandeis and Roberts dissenting, held in effect that State officials and State employees are not subject to Federal income tax on the salary they receive.

A third reason is the action of the officials and employees of national banks and State banks, members of the Federal Reserve System, taking advantage of a decision by the Social Security Board, holding that the banks are instrumentalities of the Government. The officials and employees of the banks now place themselves in the same category as a Federal employee and therefore are not making returns on their salaries to the various States for income-tax purposes.

Aside from this the banks in some instances, I have been informed, have advised their stockholders that the devidends received from stocks are not subject to State income tax.

According to the Census Bureau, there are 6,725 national banks in the United States, 114,102 employees and officials, whose total salaries are $211,944,367.

There are 107 Federal Reserve banks and joint-stock land banks in the United States, with 13,757 officials and employees, whose salaries are $24,428,104.

The Census Bureau did not have the number of State banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System, and the number of the employees of those banks, together with their salaries, are not included in the figures above.

Twenty-three thousand eight hundred and sixty-two executive and salaried officers of national banks receive $87,835,041 and 525 executive and salaried officers of Federal Reserve banks and joint-stock land banks receive $4,210,208 all not subject to the State income tax in view of the ruling declaring such banks instrumentalities of the Federal Government.

The number of employees in the government service, Federal, State, and subdivisions of States, is 3,495,363. The break-down is as follows:

Federal	1,051,607
State	305,045
City	590,202
County, township, and minor civil divisions	295,678
Public education	1,252,831

The estimates do not include all persons on emergency-works programs, Federal and State.

It seems to me that there is no good reason why a Federal official, elected or appointed, should not be subject to the income tax of the State of which he is a legal resident, and there is equally no good reason why the employees of the States and the subdivisions of States should not be subject to the Federal income tax, nor is there any good reason why officials and employees of national banks and State banks, members of the Federal Reserve System, should not be required to pay State income taxes.

I have called this matter to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury and expressed the hope, if it is possible, to meet some of the conditions by law, it should be done in the next revenue bill; but a constitutional amendment should be adopted in lieu of the existing amendment to the Constitution that will be so broad as to make it mandatory that all, regardless of whether they are in Government service, should be subject to the Federal and State income-tax laws.

While I have no report as to the number of members of the Federal judiciary appointed prior to 1932 who voluntarily made a Federal income-tax return on their salary for the calendar year 1936, I am informed only six made returns for the calendar year 1935.

The proposed joint resolution makes provision for the adoption or rejection of the proposed amendment to the Constitution by the convention method, rather than by ratification by State legislatures. There are at least two advantages to the convention method: First, it has been suggested by a number of persons recently that Congress can fix a date for the simultaneous holding of ratifying conventions in all States, and thus dispose of the matter within a period of months; whereas ratification by the legislatures would have to await the convening of the various State legislatures, most of which meet only once every 2 years. Secondly, since the members of the State legislatures themselves would be affected by the proposed amendment, that is, their salaries would be subjected to Federal taxation under it, the first method would produce a more disinterested consideration of the matter. Congress adopted the convention method for the ratification of the twenty-first amendment but left the manner and time of calling the convention to the States. All the other amendments were adopted by the State legislature method.

The proposed amendment would permit Congress to tax any income derived by any person as a fee or salary which is paid by any State or political subdivision or instrumentality thereof, and it will permit each State to tax any income derived by its residents as fees or salaries paid by the United States or any instrumentality thereof. Instrumentalities of the United States would include national banks, Federal corporations, and so forth. The proposed amendment, however, expressly prohibits the States from discriminating against income derived from the United States in favor of income derived from the States by imposing higher income taxes on officers and employees of the United States than they do on their own officers and employees. Similarly, the United States cannot tax the officers and employees of States more than it does its own.

The proposed amendment will permit the Federal Government to tax the income of State judges. It will also permit the State to tax Federal judges, notwithstanding the fact that they may have been appointed prior to the adoption of this amendment. Article III, section 1, of the Constitution provides that the compensation of Federal judges shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. This has been construed by the Supreme Court to preclude Federal income taxes on the salaries of such judges. See Evans v. Gore (1920) (253 U. S. 245), and Miles v. Graham (1925) (268 U. S. 501). It is a prohibition, however, directed only against the Federal Government. Federal judges receive their present immunity from State taxation by virtue of the fact that they are officers of the United States. The present amendment will strip them, as it will all other officers and employees of the United States, of this immunity. The proposed amendment will, therefore, permit State income taxes to be imposed upon all Federal judges, including the members of the Supreme Court, who are residents of any of the States.

The amendment, however, will not deal with the power of the Federal Government to impose taxes on its own judges. Section 22 of the Revenue Act of 1932 provides that the compensation received by Federal judges, as such, taking office after the date of the enactment of that act—June 6, 1932—shall be included in gross income for the taxing purposes of the act, and that all acts fixing the compensation of such judges are amended accordingly. Succeeding revenue acts have carried this same provision as originally enacted. The provision was designed to get around the Supreme Court decisions cited above by fixing in advance the salaries of judges appointed after its enactment at the salaries of judges appointed prior to its enactment less income tax. The present situation, therefore, is that Federal judges appointed since June 6, 1932, pay Federal income taxes, while those appointed prior to that date do not. The present proposed amendment does not deal with this situation, which, relating as it does only to taxation by the Federal Government of its own officers, is believed to be a problem distinct from that of reciprocal taxation by the States and the Federal Government of each others' officers and employees.

The amendment will affect Members and employees of Congress, since it is not limited to officers and employees of the United States, but includes all persons who receive income from fees or salaries paid by the United States.

It is absolutely impossible to even estimate the amount of money that is now being lost to the Federal and State Governments by reason of the existing conditions.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, immediately after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes following the special orders already granted for that day.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, the antilynching bill may be up on Thursday and its consideration may require the entire afternoon. For this reason I hope the gentleman will ask for time the following day or at some other time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. FISH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include an address which I delivered at Valley Forge on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and following the previous orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation as it exists now and the fact that undoubtedly the antilynching bill will be called up tomorrow under the rule that we will pass today, I shall have to object to any further requests for time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on Friday, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and following such special orders as may have been heretofore granted.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand there will be very few Members here on Friday of this week. A number of Members have already arranged to be away at that time, and we do not want to have a session on Friday. If I were the gentleman I believe I would defer my request.

Mr. BURDICK. I may say to the gentleman that is the very reason I asked for Friday [laughter], but if it will interfere——

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not believe we will have a session on that day.

Mr. BURDICK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I modify the request and ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on Thursday, following the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, and the previous orders heretofore granted.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am, reluctantly, compelled to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up Calendar No. 1 on the Calendar of Motions to Discharge Committees, being motion no. 5, signed by 218 Members of the House, to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of House Resolution 125.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 125

A resolution to make H. R. 1507, a bill to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, a special order of business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will be recognized for 10 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], if he desires, will be recognized for 10 minutes in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

A majority of the membership of this House has signified its wish that H. R. 1507 receive consideration of the House. This represents an epoch in the annals of the Congress of the United States, because a Democratic House of Representatives initiated and brought to a successful conclusion a discharge petition relating to this type of legislation. I am very proud of the part I contributed to the success of the petition, and I wish to express to every Member who placed his signature thereon my thanks and appreciation.

This success confirms in my mind the belief that slowly but surely the people of these United States are coming to the firm resolve that government by law must prevail; that courts of justice are established primarily to protect the weak and punish the guilty; that the rule of reason by law must be maintained; that justice, as enunciated by the courts, must be the established domestic policy; and, finally, that mob rule and "Judge Lynch" must be forever banished from the proud history of our country.

"Thou shalt not kill" has come down to us from Mount Sinai; the clear import of its meaning has been known and understood through all the centuries of man's travail on this earth; in every civilization known to man where reason and justice ruled this commandment was the pinnacle upon which rested peace and order, justice and civilization. It binds the Christian, the Mohammedan, the Jew, the Turk, the white man and the yellow man, the black man and the red man. Its purport and meaning is applicable to all; no man or race of men is excepted from its binding force; it is a divine commandment, as binding today as when first uttered, binding individually and collectively.

Since history's dawn, mankind has sought in one form or another to approximate justice in order thereby to protect the weak from the strong, to establish peace and order, and to provide for the general welfare. To this end and for this purpose mankind throughout the ages instituted tribunals of one sort or another where truth and justice were sought to be established. Ultimately there evolved legal tribunals known to us as courts and bodies of rules and principles, at times called "codes", "rules", "constitutions", "laws." The ultimate object and purpose was ever the establishment of justice, equal justice, justice applicable equally to all. Mankind instinctively knew and understood that without a general system of laws applicable to all and tribunals for the application of these laws to all, civilization could not exist. Mankind knew and understood that individuals should not and must not be permitted to declare for themselves the law or rule of justice and should not and must not be permitted to execute for themselves the law or rule of justice. Mankind knew that the individual pronouncement of the law and the individual execution thereof meant anarchy, not government; meant barbarism, not civilization; meant chaos, not order.

Investigating mankind's endeavor to approximate justice, we find underlying all tribunals of justice and permeating all systems of organic laws the eternal principles enunciated in the Decalogue. These principles are as binding as when on that great day they were divinely proclaimed for the guidance of men.

The Constitution of these United States, in my opinion, has as its main purpose the fruition of these great principles of human action in government—man's responsibility to man, man's obligation to man, and the rights of man in collective society.

Believing as I do, it is with grief and regret that candor compels me to admit that in our great Nation, dedicated to the freedom of mankind, there exists among us the spirit of mob rule and mob violence. No true American can but grieve because of this terrible scourge of injustice. To strive to eradicate it, seems to me a noble endeavor. Without malice or bitterness, and with no concern save the honor of our country, I appeal to my colleagues of this House to give thought to the great endeavor to remove from our midst this blight. This movement has been gaining momentum through the years; the voice of righteousness is becoming more clear, more insistent; the people of these United States are conscious of the justice and righteousness of the cause and do, I have no doubt, demand legislation to punish and prevent this heinous crime. For in the words of the great Burke—

> Every generation sets before itself some favorite object which it pursues as the very substance of its liberty and happiness.

Truth and justice must prevail. Mankind's struggle to attain it may be arduous; the road to light may be hard and thorny, but eventually God's justice shall prevail—righteousness will triumph and law and order become established. Sooner or later "Judge Lynch" must be dethroned and in his place the goddess of justice enthroned.

To all of you I appeal for justice under law; equal justice to all men—white men, black men, yellow men, red men. Convinced of the soundness and justice of this cause, I happily dedicate my life and my little talents to its accomplishment. It matters not the road be rough and stormy, if the heart be pure and the cause just, there will be found joy and consolation. In conclusion, permit me to rekindle your zeal with the noble spirit of the immortal Lincoln:

> "* * * with malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on * * *."

[Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary procedure here today is rather anomalous. We are considering a motion to discharge the Rules Committee from a matter which never was before the Rules Committee. Some years ago—I think it was in connection with the bonus measure—someone devised a means of bringing before the House, by way of a petition to discharge, a matter that had never been considered, or, at least, not reported, by a standing committee. That was followed by an attempt to bring the Townsend plan before the House in the same way; and now, today—and I say this so that the position of the Rules Committee may be well understood—a motion is made to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of a matter which never was before it and never could be properly considered by it.

The Rules Committee is the servant of the standing committees of the House. When bills are reported by those standing committees, the Rules Committee passes upon their presentation to the House. Never in the 14 years I have been on the committee have I ever heard it suggested that the Rules Committee bring in a rule to consider a measure which had never passed a standing committee.

Antilynching bills have been before the Judiciary Committee of the House. That committee reported out one bill, and on last Wednesday it came before the House. The Rules Committee had nothing to do with its presentation. This particular bill—the Gavagan bill—the Judiciary Committee did not report out, and, therefore, there has been nothing before the Rules Committee.

As to the merits of the measure, that is another matter. I feel as keenly and as bitterly against lynching as any man in this House. I despise it; I detest it. I think only the lowest form of a coward that ever crawled the face of the earth would indulge in lynching. I would like to have seen this bill brought before the House in the proper orderly way so as to give us an opportunity to vote upon it in the regular parliamentary procedure. But I am talking now about the peculiar situation which confronts us.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The gentleman is talking about parliamentary procedure. Does not the gentleman realize that this motion today is the result of true parliamentary procedure.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Technically, it is correct under the rule; but only that.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Parliamentarily, I ask the gentleman, is it not correct?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is technically correct. There is no violation of the rules in what the gentleman has done. I am talking about a technical provision of the rules which everybody had in mind a year or two ago to change, but just by an unfortunate circumstance the proposed change was not presented to the House.

What I mean to make clear is that the merits of the bill is another thing. I am talking now about the parliamentary procedure for the information of the House.

I am against lynching. I am for a proper antilynching bill, and if the Rules Committee should be "fired", laid off", or discharged, I am going to vote for the bill; but I could hardly be asked to vote to discharge myself from something with which I had nothing to do.

I should like to see the question of the Negroes in America, 15,000,000 of them, seriously considered by the people of this country and by Congress, and I would like to tell you where to start. Start in your Capital, the District of Columbia. In the Capital of the Nation the Negro does not get a square deal. Right in the shadow of the Capitol you have segregation and Jim Crowism. If that were properly brought to the attention of this Nation, the people of the 48 States would never tolerate it.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I have a bill now before Congress dealing with the situation in Washington.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I hope the gentleman will pursue it. I would like nothing better than to devote the rest of my life to seeing that these 15,000,000, the largest racial group in the United States, get a square deal in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished colleague from New York, chairman of the Rules Committee [Mr. O'CONNOR], seems to be very much distressed about the parliamentary procedure, but the other day, in order to circumvent the House, a modified, toothless antilynching bill was brought in here. But the will of the House prevailed. The only way we can bring the Gavagan antilynching bill before us for debate and vote is by the procedure adopted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN].

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has been here almost as long as I have; not quite, as I was here in 1922 when this House passed the Dyer antilynching bill by a vote of 2 to 1. There is nothing new or novel about a Federal antilynching bill. This issue has been discussed and debated in Congress for years as well as throughout the country. It is proper and right that this particular antilynching bill should be submitted to the House for vote and after due debate passed.

Let me say, as the American people are discussing the question of lawlessness arising from the illegal seizure of property through sit-down strikes, which we deplore, that human life is more important, and in this instance we are forced to have a Federal antilynching law, because in certain sections of the country prisoners are taken away from the constituted authorities and are mobbed and lynched, and the rule of the rope and the faggot prevails. This bill has to do with the protection of human life, guaranteed by the Constitution. But if there was no such provision in the Constitution, let me say to the Members of the House, because you are going to hear a great deal about the Constitution and the constitutionality of this bill, that the protection of the lives of American citizens, whether they be colored or whether they be white, is above and beyond the Constitution. To safeguard and protect the lives of American citizens is the main reason for the existence of government itself. The Constitution, however, specifically states that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law and that is the purpose of the Gavagan bill.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it is a surprising pleasure that upon this occasion I find something on which I may agree with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN]. I find myself heartily in accord with his statement that we are suffering from mob violence in this country. I agree with him absolutely, and point to the activity in behalf of his bill today as proof of that assertion. For he is just as certainly leading a mob and doing mob violence to every principle of constitutional right and justice and honor as anyone who ever participated in the mob murder of a human being in the wilds of darkest New York or elsewhere. [Applause and laughter.]

This bill is a rape of justice. This bill is itself the rope with which this mob would lynch the constitutional guaranties which we have cherished through the years. This bill is not an antilynching bill. It is a prolynching bill. It will stimulate that dying, almost extinct, disgrace to our civilization—lynching.

Everyone who has even a speaking acquaintance with this problem knows that there is, and in the nature of things can be, only one restraining influence, and that is, simply, local sentiment. Under that influence, we men who have been on the firing line against this evil have seen since 1892 the number of lynchings reduced more than 5,000 percent—far more reduction than there has been in any other crime. From a point where, then, there was 1 person lynched to every 300,000 of population in our country, we have come, as a result of local restraining influence, to where, last year, there was 1 to 16,000,000 of our population. Why kill the only influence which can possibly prevent lynching? Prescribing punishment for innocent people never yet made a friend. Disregard of the supreme law never yet increased respect for other law or helped the cause of law observance.

All good citizens glory in the progress we have made toward the goal of a land completely cleared of the stigma of lynching. Even one is a disgrace to our civilization. All of us feel that way. But while some have been risking their lives to prevent mob violence, others introduce bills.

There is not a man in this Chamber, not a man in either branch of Congress, who is not against lynching. Scarcely a citizen in the whole Nation fails to condemn it. I respectfully submit, therefore, that this resort to mob violence to lynch the Constitution by the passage of this outrageous law should not be sanctioned and that the pending motion should be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the Seventy-fifth Congress convened on January 5, 1937, and, beginning with that day and since, 59 antilynching bills have been introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives. Among these 59 was bill H. R. 1507, introduced by Mr. GAVAGAN, from New York, on January 5, 1937.

Under rule 27 of the House of Representatives it was in order to file a motion in writing with the Clerk of the House to discharge the Judiciary Committee from consideration of any one or more of these antilynching bills that had not been acted upon by the Judiciary Committee for a period 30 days prior to the filing of such motion, and that same rule also provides for the discharge of the Rules Committee of the House of Representatives from the consideration of any resolution before the Rules Committee that has not been acted upon for a period of 7 days after the filing of such resolution. The Judiciary Committee failed for more than 30 days to grant any hearing on the Gavagan bill, or any other antilynching bill, or make any report on either one of these bills.

On February 19, 1937, a resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules requesting the Rules Committee to make in order the consideration of the Gavagan bill. The Rules Committee failed to act on the resolution or make a report thereon within 7 days after it had received such resolution.

The Judiciary Committee having failed to act, and the Rules Committee having failed to act, 218 Members, a majority of the House of Representatives, signed the petition discharging the Rules Committee and making it possible to bring this Gavagan antilynching bill up for consideration, and the question now before the House is, Shall we pass or defeat this motion to discharge the Rules Committee.

Ordinarily I would not favor taking a bill from the committee of which I am a member, or a resolution from the Rules Committee. I realize the value of having a committee to investigate carefully and make reports to the House, and I should not favor taking bills and resolutions from the committees except for good and sufficient reasons. Neither the Judiciary Committee nor the Rules Committee can complain in this particular instance. The Judiciary Committee has had ever since January 5, 1937, to consider the Gavagan and other antilynching bills. The Rules Committee has had ever since February 19, 1937, to consider this matter, but has failed to act. There was no other course open to us who desired that antilynching legislation be brought before the House for consideration. It appeared to be the purpose on the part of those who had control to keep this legislation from coming before the House.

This is one of the most important measures pending in Congress; lynching or mob murder is one of the darkest spots on the record of our country. Since 1882 we have had approximately 5,200 lynchings by mobs in this country. These lynchings have been confined almost exclusively to some 10 or 12 States in the South, and the victims in more than 95 percent of the cases have been Negroes. Sixteen of the States in the North, East, and West have not had a lynching during that period of time. Through all these years the South as a rule has consistently opposed Federal antilynching legislation, while the people of the North, East, and West have favored it. A recent survey of public opinion shows that more than 70 percent of the people of the Nation favor Federal antilynching legislation. Several of our Presidents, the public press, civil, church, welfare, and labor organizations representing more than 40,000,000 members, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the national platforms of the Democratic and Republican Parties have endorsed and urged Federal antilynching legislation. Many of the leading newspapers of the South and, according to a recent survey of public opinion, 65 percent of the people of the South favor Federal antilynching legislation. These groups and the people generally of the Nation have been clamoring for this legislation for more than 15 years, yet Congress has been denied an opportunity to vote on it except in 1922 the House of Representatives, then controlled by the Republican Party, passed the Dyer antilynching bill by a vote of 231 to 119. This bill went to the Senate, which was then controlled by the Republicans, and was favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. A filibuster lead by Senator Underwood, Democrat, of Alabama, prevented the passage of the bill in the Senate.

In the Seventy-third Congress, then under control of the Democrats, the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill was favorably reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee to the Senate, but was never permitted to come up for action on the floor of the Senate. In the Seventy-fourth Congress the Costigan-Wagner bill, S. 24, was reintroduced in the Senate, and on March 18, 1935, it was again favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Although the Democrats have about a 4-to-1 majority in the Senate, the bill was not permitted to come up for consideration, and was filibustered and died at the close of the Seventy-fourth Congress. Antilynching bills have been introduced in the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, but thus far no action taken.

Many antilynching bills were introduced in the House in the Seventy-third Congress and referred to the Judiciary Committee. The Democrats were in full control, but no hearing was given on any of the bills, and no report was made by the Judiciary Committee of the House. In the Seventy-fourth Congress 33 antilynching bills were introduced in the House and referred to the Judiciary Committee. Democrats had a majority of more than 3 to 1 in the House and on this important committee, but no hearings were granted or held and no report made on either one of these 33 bills.

Now, in the Seventy-fifth Congress we have 59 antilynching bills introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House, but no hearings were granted or held until about the 30th of March 1937, and not until a motion was filed with the Clerk of the House to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the consideration of these bills. Under the rules it was the duty of the Judiciary Committee to hold these hearings and make report within 30 days. After it became apparent that a majority of the Members of the House of Representatives would sign the motion to bring out the Gavagan bill, a hearing was ordered by the Judiciary Committee, and after a brief hearing the bill introduced by our colored colleague from Chicago [Mr. MITCHELL] was reported out by a vote of 8 to 7. I voted to report favorably the Gavagan bill. The Mitchell bill could not have been voted out but for the fact that some of those on the committee, who are opposed to any antilynching legislation, voted to bring out the Mitchell bill. Many of us looked upon the Mitchell bill as a mere gesture and would not accomplish the purposes desired by those sincerely interested in putting a stop to mob murder in this country. The Mitchell bill, among other things, provided that where a prisoner was in legal custody of the officer of any State or subdivision and the officer conspired with the mob to murder the prisoner, he—the officer—would be subject to a fine and imprisonment of from 2 to 10 years, or both. Of course, if an officer helped the mob to murder his prisoner he would be guilty of willful murder of the worst sort, and the penalty should be commensurate with his crime. Each and every State in the Union fixes the penalty for willful murder at death or life imprisonment. Of course, the Gavagan bill is a much stronger bill and, therefore, has the backing of all of the real friends of antilynching legislation, including the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and this great association of colored people was and is very much opposed to the Mitchell bill. Those in control of the House Judiciary Committee brought up the Mitchell bill for consideration on Wednesday, April 7. Many of the real friends of antilynching legislation expressed the belief that it was done for the purpose of heading off the Gavagan bill, or the consideration of a real antilynching bill. The House by a vote of 256 to 112 refused to consider the Mitchell bill. Our colored colleague then asserted his bill was defeated by the Republicans who, he claimed, were offended on account of the attack last year on the Republican Party and Abraham Lincoln. There are only 88 Republicans in the House, and some of these voted to bring up the Mitchell bill, expecting to have it amended by substituting the Gavagan bill. There were three times as many votes cast against the Mitchell bill as there are Republicans in the House, and, therefore, the Republicans are not responsible for the defeat of the Mitchell bill.

It is a fact that so far as I have been able to learn practically every Republican in the House is in favor of the Gavagan bill. It is patterned after the Dyer bill that was passed by the Republicans in the House in 1922. Our able and distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee opposed the Dyer bill in 1922 and has consistently opposed antilynching legislation through all the years and is opposed to the Gavagan bill.

There is no civilized nation in the world that has mob lynchings as we have in this country. Wherever lynchings occur, the law, the courts, and the Government have been overthrown, and anarchy rules.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees to each and all of its citizens the full protection of the laws. The purpose of this legislation is to give effectiveness to that provision of the Federal Constitution. It is urged now that this proposed legislation is unconstitutional. An able Judiciary Committee of the House in 1922, after careful investigation, reported to the House of Representatives that Congress had the power under the Constitution to enact such legislation. An able Judiciary Committee of the Senate made a similar report on the Dyer bill in the Senate. The Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate then were controlled by the Republicans. The very able Judiciary Committee of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress declared in its favorable report on the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill that this legislation would be constitutional, and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress made a similar report. A majority of the Senate Judiciary Committee in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses were Democrats.

The House has the right to bring this legislation before it for consideration. The bill will be open for amendment and for argument and all relevant and pertinent matters may be debated and considered. The purpose of the motion now before the House is to bring the Gavagan bill on the floor of the House for consideration. Certain groups in the House and Senate have been denying the Congress the right to act upon this legislation. If the President and the Democrats are in good faith about this legislation it will be put through and signed by the President. The Democrats have more than a 3-to-1 majority in the House and 6-to-1 majority in the Senate over the Republicans, and I venture to say that more than 95 percent of the Republicans of the House and Senate will vote to put this legislation on the statute books, and if action is prevented in the House and Senate it must be laid to the door of the President and his party.

It is claimed by our distinguished friend from Alabama that there is no necessity for this legislation as the number of lynchings have become less. The records show there have been 83 lynchings since President Roosevelt assumed office on March 4, 1933, and these lynchings with very few exceptions have been confined to some 10 or 12 States in the South. Mob murder can be and will be stopped if the Federal Government would get behind it and let the people of the Nation know that the guaranty of protection set out in our Federal Constitution will be a dead letter no longer. In more than 99 percent of the lynchings no arrests or punishments have been imposed. The communities in which these lynchings occurred, although many of them are public with thousands of persons present, say that nothing is done about it because you cannot find out who is in it.

If the Gavagan bill is passed prosecutions can take place in the Federal courts and G-men can be sent to ferret out those guilty of mob murder. It will not do to say that mob murder is necessary in order to protect the women of our country. More than 100 women and many children have been victims of the mob and less than one-sixth of the men who have been mobbed was charged with any crime against women. Of course, no one could be more deeply interested in the protection of the women and our homes than I am and the women will be protected. I strongly favor a government of law and not a government by the mob. Anyhow, let us pass this motion and bring the Gavagan bill up for consideration. If valid reasons are presented why the bill should not be passed I am sure the House will turn the bill down, but if it is necessary and proper legislation we want the House to have an opportunity to consider it and pass it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to stand before this great lawmaking body and to raise my voice as strongly as it is possible for it to be raised in favor of the passage of this measure. The authorship of the bill means absolutely nothing as compared with the importance of its passage. I hope there is not one here who thinks that because my own bill did not get recognition for consideration that I, in any degree or to any extent, shall raise my hand against the passage of this bill. I am in favor of its passage. I shall vote for it, and I am asking that every Member who believes that this disgraceful crime that has blotted our history so many years should be wiped out vote for this bill. Let us put it over. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this measure is not before the Committee on Rules; this measure is before the Committee on the Judiciary. This is a petition to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary. I make the point of order that we have no right to vote to discharge the Committee on Rules from a measure that has never been before the Committee on Rules, and that they have not had the time provided under the rules to consider.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Mississippi concluded his point of order?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order.

The gentleman from Mississippi raises the point of order that inasmuch as the legislative bill governing this subject has not been considered by the Committee on Rules, the motion now pending is out of order. If the gentleman from Mississippi will refer to the rules with reference to the discharge of committees he will find that the form and procedure adopted by those who signed the discharge petition are specifically and unequivocally provided and that they have been scrupulously followed.

The Chair is of opinion that under that rule this resolution to discharge the Committee on Rules is in order, and the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and there were—yeas 282, nays 108, not voting 41, as follows:

That on said day the Speaker shall recognize the Representative from New York, JOSEPH A. GAVAGAN, to call up H. R. 1507, a bill to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, as a special order of business, and to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of said H. R. 1507. The special order shall be a continuing order until the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Sec. 4–A. Whenever the Commission upon investigation instituted upon its own motion or upon petition of any code member, district board, State or political subdivision thereof, or the consumers' counsel, after hearing finds that transactions in coal in intrastate commerce by any person or in any locality cause any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in such commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce in coal on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce in coal, or in any manner directly affect interstate commerce in coal, the Commission shall by order so declare and thereafter coal sold, delivered or offered for sale in such intrastate commerce shall be subject to the provisions of section 4."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "an agent or a place of business"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"(e) The term 'United States' when used in a geographical sense includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: This amendment added to the class of those that might be appointed without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923 "managers and employees of the statistical bureaus hereinafter provided for." The House recedes with an amendment adding the word "the" before the word "managers" in order to make the meaning of the added language clearer.

On amendment no. 2: The House bill authorized the Commission to establish divisions for the proper dispatch of its business and further authorized it to refer any matter to an individual commissioner who was to exercise all the powers and authority of the Commission. Any person in interest was authorized to secure a review by the Commission of the report, findings, or order of the commissioner. The Senate amendment substituted for this provision one authorizing the Commission to establish divisions to consist of not less than three members each, each division to exercise all the powers and authority of the Commission. Any person in interest is authorized to secure a review by the Commission of the report, finding, or order of the division. The Commission is further authorized to assign or refer any matter within its jurisdiction to an individual commissioner, to a board composed of employees of the Commission, or to an examiner, for hearing and the recommendation of an appropriate order. Such commissioner, board, or examiner is to have the power to administer oaths and affirmations, to examine witnesses, and to receive evidence. The Commission is authorized to make contracts for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and to establish and maintain offices throughout the United States necessary for the effective administration of the act. The House recedes with an amendment accepting the Senate language, but adding that the Commission shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia.

On amendment no. 3: This amendment authorized the Commission "within the limits of such appropriations as are made from time to time", to initiate, promote, and conduct research designed to improve standards and methods used in the mining, preparation, conservation, distribution, and utilization of coal and the discovery of additional uses for coal, and authorized the Commission for such purposes to assist educational, governmental, and other research institutions in conducting research in coal, and to do such other acts and things as it deems necessary to promote the use of coal and its derivatives. The House recedes with an amendment striking out the words quoted above.

On amendment no. 4: Under the House bill the rate of tax on all coal was one-half of 1 percent of the sales price or market value. This Senate amendment makes the rate 1 cent per ton of 2,000 pounds in such cases. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 5: This Senate amendment inserts a definition of "disposal" for the purpose of the taxing section. Under it disposal includes consumption or use by a producer and any transfer of title by a producer other than by sale. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 6: Under the House bill the 19½-percent tax in the case of coal not disposed of by regular sale was measured by the "market value" of the coal. This Senate amendment measures the tax by the "fair market value of such coal at the time of its disposal or sale." The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 7 and 8: Under the House bill an exemption from the tax on all sales of coal and from the tax on sales by noncode members was made in the case of sales of coal for the use of the United States, the States, Territories, and political subdivisions for use in the performance of governmental functions. These Senate amendments exempt such sales only from the 1-cent-per-ton tax. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 9: This amendment inserts a section heading. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 10: This amendment makes the necessary technical change to assure that the provisions of the section will be applicable in respect of the maintenance and observance of resale prices and marketing rules and regulations by distributors. (See amendment no. 40.) The House recedes.

On amendment no. 11: This amendment expresly authorizes the Commission, after notice and hearing, to remove a member of a district board if it finds that the member has been guilty of inefficiency, willful neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 12: Under the House bill the district boards were authorized to appoint officers from among their own membership. This Senate amendment extends the provision to authorize appointment of officers from outside their membership as well. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 13, 14, and 16: These amendments make the provisions exempting members of district boards from liability on account of acts of others, acts in the conduct of their business in reasonable fashion, and from the antitrust acts in certain cases applicable in the same circumstances to the officers of the district boards. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 15: The House bill provided that the antitrust laws were not to apply to action complying with the provisions of section 4 taken "while the act is in effect or within 60 days thereafter." The Senate amendment adds after the word "effect" the following: "by its terms." The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 17: The House bill authorized a statistical bureau "in each district." The Senate amendment directs that such a bureau be established "for each district, or group of districts designated by the Commission." The House recedes with an amendment restoring substantially the House provision except that establishment of the bureau is directed rather than authorized and it is to be established "for" rather than "in" each district.

On amendments nos. 18 and 19: The House bill directed each district board to propose minimum prices free on board transportation facilities at the mines for coal produced in the district and classification of coal and price variations as to "mines and consuming market areas." These Senate amendments in effect substitute for the above-quoted words the following: "mines, consuming market areas, values as to uses and seasonal demand." The House recedes on both amendments.

On amendment no. 20: This amendment adds "occupational-diseases compensation" to the things to be included in computing total costs of tonnage. The inclusion of this is surplusage, and the Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 21: The House bill specifies conditions under which the Commission is to increase or decrease the minimum prices. This amendment provides for such action "when otherwise required by this act." The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 22: This amendment adds to the powers of the Commission power to direct the district boards to coordinate minimum prices. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 23: Under the House bill the coordinated minimum prices the district boards were to propose to the Commission were to be just and equitable, not unduly prejudicial or preferential, and were to reflect, as nearly as possible, relative market values of coal at points of delivery in common consuming market areas. In such cases the boards were to take into account transportation methods and charges and their effect on a reasonable opportunity to compete on a fair basis and the competitive relationships between coal and other forms of fuel and energy. To these factors to be taken into account the Senate amendment adds values as to uses of coal and seasonal demand. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 24: Under the House bill, the proposed coordinated minimum prices were to be made with the objective (among others) of making the return per net ton upon the entire tonnage of the price area approximate the weighted average of the total costs per net ton of the area's tonnage. This Senate amendment provides that the return "shall approximate, and so far as practicable shall not be less than" such weighted average. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 25: Under the House bill, the coordinated minimum prices and rules determined by the district boards were to be submitted by them to the commission and "thereupon" the commission was to establish the prices and rules and regulations. Under the Senate amendment the same requirement exists but the commission's action was to be had at any time after submission. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 26: This amendment expressly gives the power to the commission, after it has fixed minimum prices and rules and regulations, to review and revise them from time to time upon complaint or upon its own motion. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 27: This amendment provides for establishment of prices and regulations in any minimum price area prior to taking similar action in other areas and for limiting application of prices for periods fixed by the commission. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 28: This amendment provides that on petition of a district board or any party in interest or on motion of the commission, the commission may conduct hearings to determine whether the minimum prices fixed for a district are not in conformity with the prescribed standards and are prejudicial to any district, and to take action with respect to such matters. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 29, 31, and 33: Under the House bill, code members, district boards, States, political subdivisions, and the consumers' counsel had the power to make complaint with respect to the maximum prices to the Commission and thereupon the Commission, after notice and hearing, was to make such order as may be required to effectuate the purposes of the section. Senate amendment no. 29 extends this privilege to a member of a district board and amendments nos. 31 and 33 extend the provision to include the case of minimum prices. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 30 and 32: These amendments are clerical. The Senate recedes on amendment no. 30, and the House recedes on amendment no. 32.

On amendment no. 34: Under the House bill the provisions relating to maximum and minimum prices were not to apply to coal sold under lawful and bona fide written contracts entered into prior to January 6, 1937. The Senate amendment fixes this date at June 16, 1933, the date of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The Senate amendment also adds a provision under which contracts made on or after June 16, 1933, providing for a price below the established minimum prices are to be unenforceable as to the price provision. The House recedes with an amendment which omits the latter provision and inserts the date June 16, 1933.

On amendment no. 35: This amendment makes a technical correction under which the making of a contract for the sale of coal at a price below the fixed minimum or above the fixed maximum is made a violation under the code. Under the House bill the comparable provision erroneously made the contract itself the violation. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 36: This amendment makes available to the consumers' counsel (as the House bill did in the case of the Commission) data, reports, and information relating to coal of agencies of the United States. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 37, 38, and 39: These amendments add "agencies" and "devices" to the list of methods by which the price provisions are not to be evaded. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 40: Under the House bill the Commission was to prescribe the price allowances to and receivable by persons who purchase coal for resale, and resell it in not less than carload lots. The Senate amendment authorizes the prescription of both due and reasonable maximum discounts and price allowances. Under the House bill the Commission could require the maintenance by such persons of the established minimum prices. The Senate amendment extends this authority so that the Commission may require such persons to maintain and observe the marketing rules and regulations established under the section. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 41: This amendment corrects a clerical error. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 42: This amendment makes it an unfair method of competition and a violation of the code to employ any person or appoint a sales agent at a compensation obviously disproportionate to the services rendered if the employment or appointment is made with the primary intention and purpose of securing preferment with a purchaser or purchasers of coal. The amendment also provides that it shall not be an unfair method of competition or violation of the code or any requirement of the act to sell to or through a bona fide and legitimate farmers' cooperative organization organized under Federal or local law whether or not it grants rebates, discounts, patronage dividends, or other similar benefits to its members, or to sell through any intervening agency to any such organization or to pay and allow it or any intervening agency any discount, commission, rebate, or dividend paid or allowed, or permitted by the code to be paid or allowed, to other purchasers for purchases in wholesale or middlemen quantities. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 43: Under the House bill the Commission had jurisdiction to hear written complaints charging violation of the code if made by a code member, district board, State or political subdivision, or the consumers' counsel. This Senate amendment adds a member of a district board to the list. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 44: This amendment inserts a definition of "producer" for the purposes of the subsection under which coal consumed by a producer or transported by him to himself for consumption by him is exempted from the code section. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 45: Under the House bill, coal sold in transactions in intrastate commerce could be subjected to the provisions of section 4 relating to prices. This could be done by order of the commission if after hearing the commission found that such prices caused any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons and localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate commerce on the other hand, or caused any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate commerce.

The Senate amendment and the conference agreement broaden the provision so that if the finding is made that transactions in coal in intrastate commerce cause such advantage, discrimination, etc., then after the commission's order, coal sold, delivered, or offered for sale in such intrastate commerce is to be subject to all the provisions of section 4. The Senate amendment and the conference agreement apply the same rule if the commission finds that the transactions in coal in intrastate commerce in any manner directly affect interstate commerce in coal.

The conference agreement contains a provision under which the finding is made with respect to transactions in coal in intrastate commerce by any person or in any locality.

Under the House bill, the Senate amendment and the conference agreement powers under the sections are exercisable upon investigation instituted upon the commission's motion or upon petition of any code member, district board, State or political subdivision, or the consumers' counsel.

On amendment no. 46: This amendment inserts a provision not found in the House bill which provides that no producer, because of his acceptance or reinstatement of membership, shall be liable for breach of any contract, the performance of which may be invalidated as a result of the acceptance or reinstatement. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 47: Under the House bill a code member whose right to exemption cf the tax has been revoked or canceled could have his membership in the code restored by paying one and one-half times the amount of tax on the coal sold in violation of the code or regulations. This Senate amendment requires the payment of double the amount of such tax. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 48: This amendment corrects a clerical error. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 49: Under the House bill a code member could sue another on account of injury to him arising out of violations of the act or code in the place (among other places) where the defendant has an agent. This Senate amendment substitutes the place where the defendant has a place of business for the place where he has an agent. The conference agreement inserts both places.

On amendment no. 50: Under the House bill all provisions of law relating to the collection and disposition of internal-revenue taxes were made applicable to taxes imposed under the bill. This Senate amendment makes the provisions of law applicable to the taxes imposed by title IV of the Revenue Act of 1932 applicable to taxes under the bill. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 51: This amendment corrects a clerical error. The House recedes.

On amendments nos. 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, and 61: These amendments subject distributors to the provisions which authorize the Commission to require reports and the maintenance of uniform accounting systems. The Senate recedes.

On amendments nos. 58 and 60: Under the House bill if a producer, after 15 days after notice of default, failed to furnish reports required by the Commission, he was subject to a forfeiture of $50 for each day the default continued. Senate amendment no. 58 reduced the period of grace to 15 days and no. 60 increased the forfeiture to $100. The conference agreement fixes the period at 15 days and the amount at $50.

On amendment no. 62: This amendment makes it a misdemeanor knowingly to purchase coal from a code member in such manner that its sale constitutes a violation of the code by the code member. The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 63: Under the House bill a combination of producers creating a marketing agency for the disposal of competitive coal in interstate commerce at prices determined by the agency or by agreement of producers operating through it was to be unlawful as a restraint on interstate commerce under the antitrust acts unless its producers accepted and complied with the code and unless the agency would not operate to impose undue restrictions on competition. The Senate amendment, while retaining the substance of the House provision, expands it in important particulars. First, marketing agencies created for the disposal of competitive coal in intrastate commerce directly affecting interstate commerce in coal are included. Second, the provisions making the agency an unlawful restraint shall apply only after the promulgation of the code. Third, with the approval of the Commission the agency may, as to its members, and the several agencies, as between themselves, may, provide for cooperative marketing of coal at prices not below or above the code prices. The Commission's approval is not to be granted unless it finds that the marketing agreement will not unreasonably restrict the supply of coal in interstate commerce, will not prevent the public from receiving coal at fair and reasonable prices, and will not operate against the public interest and that the agency and its members have agreed to observe the marketing regulations and prices established by the Commission and will conduct the business and operations of the agency in accordance with reasonable regulations for the protection of the public interest prescribed by the Commission. Fourth, provision is made for suspension or revocation of the Commission's approval upon finding that the Commission's regulations or orders or the section have been violated. Complaints under this provision may be made by the Commission on its own motion, or by a code member, district board, or member of a district board, a State, a political subdivision, the consumer's counsel, or any interested person. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 64: This amendment inserts a definition of "marketing agency"; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 65: This amendment inserts a definition of matters and transactions directly affecting interstate commerce in coal; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 66: This amendment inserts a definition of the term "antitrust laws of the United States." The Senate recedes.

On amendment no. 67: This amendment inserts a definition of the "United States" for the purposes of the bill. The House recedes with an amendment changing the subsection letter.

On amendment no. 68: The House bill authorized the appropriation for the administration of the act sums appropriated or made available to the Coal Commission and consumers' counsel created under the 1935 act. The Senate amendment transfers such sums and makes them available for the uses and periods for which appropriated to the Commission and counsel created under the bill. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 69: This amendment includes the coal-producing counties in California in district 18 for the purposes of the bill. There is no comparable provision in the House bill. The House recedes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN BITUMINOUS COAL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 10

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 4985) to regulate interstate commerce in bituminous coal, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to strike out in section 4–A the following: "and interstate commerce on the one hand."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The House concurrent resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONTROL OF OUTBREAKS OF INSECT PESTS

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making appropriation for the control of outbreaks of insect pests, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, although I have no objection, I think the gentleman should explain the joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of the resolution I may say the House of Representatives by joint resolution on April 6 authorized an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the eradication of grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs. The Committee on Appropriations has held very careful hearings on the Budget item of $2,000,000 sent up for its consideration. This joint resolution is for the appropriation of $1,000,000, one-half of the amount estimated to be required for the purpose set out in the joint resolution.

May I say for the information of my colleagues, who perhaps are not informed on the necessity for such an appropriation, that for many years the Congress has been appropriating various amounts to assist in fighting the grasshopper pest, also the Mormon crickets and chinch bugs. These insects descend on certain portions of the West in such terrific quantities and to such a devastating degree that large areas are infested and terrific economic loss is incurred. We have spent millions of dollars. So far no very well defined program has been presented which would lead us to hope the pests might be entirely eradicated. The best we can do is to fight the pests and try to prevent crop destruction when the time comes.

Last year the Department of Agriculture received $250,000 for the campaign against the grasshoppers. The Department did not receive the money until late. It seems if they can get the use of the funds early enough to spread the poison, before the grasshoppers have multiplied and got on the job, they can control the pests to some extent. The Department did not receive the money early enough last year, and millions and millions of dollars of crops were destroyed. Great fields of corn, wheat, and other grains were mowed down by these pests.

This year we are giving the Department the funds early and giving it four times what it had last year. I am frank to say the Secretary of Agriculture states he should have the $2,000,000, but the Committee on Appropriations feels that if he has the $1,000,000 early enough to start the campaign in time to get the work going early, the pests can be controlled. Therefore, the resolution provides an appropriation of $1,000,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 319

Resolved, etc., That for carrying out the purposes of and for expenditures authorized under the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution making funds available for the control of incipient or emergency outbreaks of insect pests or plant diseases, including grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, and chinch bugs", approved April 6, 1937, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 1938: Provided, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, no part of this appropriation shall be expended for control of grasshoppers, Mormon crickets, or chinch bugs in any State until such State has provided the organization or materials and supplies necessary for cooperation: Provided further, That transportation of control materials purchased under this appropriation shall be under conditions and means determined by the Secretary of Agiculture as most advantageous to the Federal Government: Provided further, That procurements under this appropriation may be made by open-market purchases notwithstanding the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5).

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, are there any questions to be asked, or does the gentleman from Massachusetts or the gentleman from New York wish time on the report?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I notice the agreement appropriates $9,500,000 for the Federal Housing Administration alone, an increase of $500,000 above the amount passed by the House, which amount was $1,000,000 above the Budget, as I recall it. I wonder why we should do such a thing as this?

Mr. WOODRUM. May I say to the gentleman from New York the House Committee on Appropriations increased the appropriation for the Federal Housing Administration from $8,000,000 to $9,000,000 after going into the matter very carefully. I believe the House Committee on Appropriations was unanimous in feeling the Housing Administration had not been given enough funds to administer the act properly; that while the Administration is in a sense in liquidation, it is necessary to have the appropriation for the establishment of certain field offices in order that the benefits of the act may be extended to the rural sections of the country where they are most needed. The Senate felt the Housing Administration needed still another $500,000. There was some difference of opinion among the conferees, but all things considered, the conferees feel the $9,500,000 is not an excessive amount considering the size of the job necessary to be done. Also there has been evidenced every indication of economical and conservative methods in transacting the business.

May I say further to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that the amount and the personnel are considerably less than the Housing Administration had when it was at its peak.

Mr. TABER. Would it not be possible to put this group under civil service so they would not be jockeyed around as the Social Security group has been?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it would be possible, may I say to the gentleman, but not under this conference report.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me this item is way out of line with the needs of the outfit.

Mr. WOODRUM. It is $2,000,000 less than they have for the current fiscal year.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman going to refer to the provision that the Senate confirm all appointees under the Social Security Board who receive $5,000 or more a year?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am going to offer an amendment when we come to consider that item in a few moments.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UMSTEAD). The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 5: Page 37, line 4, strike out "$9,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,000."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask recognition on the motion.

Amendment no. 5 is a Senate amendment cutting the salary of the administrative officer of the Social Security Board from $9,500 to $9,000. The House committee of conference did not feel this was a proper manner in which to bring about such a small reduction as $500 in the salary of an administrative officer. May I say that if this matter were up for original consideration as to the amount of money that should be paid this administrative officer, I would be perfectly willing to join with anyone in fixing the salary at $9,000. However, in the original act we fixed the salary at $9,500, which is the amount he has been paid. The gentleman in charge is Mr. Frank Bane—incidentally, a Virginian, formerly a director of public welfare in Virginia. He came to the Social Security Board from a position with the National Board of Public Welfare, where he was being paid an amount in excess of the amount the Social Security Board is paying him.

He is the administrative officer of one of the most important agencies the Congress has established in recent years, an agency that is handling $250,000,000, an agency that has a clientele—if we may call it that—of 30,000,000 or 35,000,000 people; and, of course, no reason is suggested by anyone as to why we should step out of line and take a crack at Mr. Frank Bane. In the independent offices bill there are many administrative officers of other establishments, notably the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as well as chiefs of bureaus, drawing $9,500 or $10,000. Therefore we are asking the House to insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 5.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 7: Page 38, line 21, after the word "States", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That no salary shall be paid for personal services from the money herein appropriated under the heading 'Social Security Board' in excess of the rates allowed by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for similar services: Provided further, That this proviso shall not apply to the salaries of the Board members."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and I ask for recognition on the motion.

Mr. Speaker, amendment no. 7 seeks to apply the Classification Act schedules of pay to the group of experts with the Social Security Board who are employed on a part-time or contract basis.

May I say that all of the per annum or regular employees of the Social Security Board are now being paid at rates of pay in accordance with the Classification Act, with the exception of the group employed periodically for consultation or for expert advice. In setting up this gigantic insurance undertaking it was necessary to call for part-time expert help under the authority given in the act. The Social Security Board has spent a rather conservative amount for calling in these people. Some of them have been paid at an annual rate of compensation in excess of $10,000. There is one man particularly who is an international authority on social security legislation, and they have called on him once or twice for a contract job to do this, that, or the other, and he has been paid an amount which, if figured on a per-annum basis, would be in excess of the rates in the Classification Act. However, there is only $40,000 in the entire set-up of the Board that could be used for salaries of this character; and my motion is going to be that the House insist on its disagreement, but I may say that on the next amendment, which is amendment no. 8, I shall offer an amendment putting the entire Social Security Board strictly under civil service, with all salaries under civil-service regulation, with the exception of the small amount they are authorized to use for the payment of these experts who are employed periodically.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Will the amendment that the gentleman proposes to offer to amendment no. 8 take care of the situation?

Mr. WOODRUM. Amendment no. 8, if adopted by the House, will put everything in the Social Security under civil service and under the Classification Act, with the exception of contract services which may be employed under amendment no. 7.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me the language which is to be proposed to amendment no. 8 is hardly broad enough to cover the matter.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. As I understand, it is the gentleman's intention to cover both the Classification and the Civil Service Acts by the amendment which he proposes with respect to amendment no. 8.

Mr. WOODRUM. If they are put under civil service, the Classification Act applies automatically.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I recall this matter being discussed in the committee when the social security bill was being considered, and, as I recall, when we passed the bill certain groups were excepted at that time. About what percentage was that?

Mr. WOODRUM. It was not figured on a percentage basis. The original act put them under civil service, but it authorized them to appoint experts outside of civil service. It is that group we are now going to cover by putting everybody under civil service, if the House follows the recommendation of the conferees.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In other words, the number the gentleman proposes to put under civil service is practically the entire number with this exception.

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment no. 7.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 8: Line 1, page 39, after the word "Members", insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated under the heading 'Social Security Board' shall be used to pay the salary of any expert or attorney receiving compensation of $5,000 or more per annum unless and until such expert or attorney shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 8 and agree to the same with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 8: Mr. WOODRUM moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following: "Provided further, That no part of the appropriation or of the reappropriation contained in this paragraph shall be used to pay the compensation of any employee of the Social Security Board not appointed pursuant to the civil-service laws and regulations."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, Senate amendment numbered 8 provided that none of the funds appropriated in this bill should be used to pay the salary of any expert or attorney receiving $5,000 or more a year until such expert or attorney shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of course, that establishes a new precedent in these independent agencies. In the first place, it would very radically amend the original law which provided that the appointments should be made by the Board. It would now require them to be made by the President and approved by the Senate. The House conferees were unable to agree to this. The amendment which we are suggesting seems to me a happy solution of the difficulty. It puts the whole Social Security Board, from top to bottom, with the exception of the Board members and the administrative officers, under the Civil Service Act; requires them to qualify under the civil-service rules and regulations; and their salary to be measured and paid according to the classification schedule. Then there can be no possible question about it. There should be no politics in it. And may I say here that we would be taking out of the realm of conflict and chaos and confusion all of the appointments of those experts on the Social Security Board about which there has been a great deal said on the floor of each House and in the press.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I wish to go along with the gentleman in respect to that statement in taking the matter out of politics. I think the gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I want to assure myself that the effectiveness of the staff will not in any way be lessened through this amendment, and, therefore, I shall ask the gentleman one or two questions. This type of legislation is absolutely new. No doubt the few men and women who are trained in it were scarce, and the department availed itself of their services. Some of those could command a better salary than $5,000 a year. It would seem to me, if there is danger of breaking down the efficiency of the Social Security Board by cutting down the salaries of those who receive over $5,000 a year, there would be a tendency to lower the service which the Board could give, lower its efficiency in taking care of this vast field that the chairman has spoken of, about 35,000,000 people who must be served, and no doubt the number will be greater than that before they get through. It seems to me we ought to protect those experts in the holding of their jobs. I am absolutely opposed to the Senate amendment, and I join with the House managers in opposing that amendment. I am just a little concerned whether or not this amendement will protect those experts in that department, or whether we are liable to have it broken down by political appointments, just the thing that we do not want.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I can say to the gentleman that the conferees as well as the committee have thought along the lines the gentleman has suggested. There are two classes of experts having to do with social security work, those who are regularly employed on the regular yearly pay roll and those who are employed periodically as consultants. The House insisted on amendment no. 7, and that protects the periodic employment.

There is some expert advice that the Social Security Board needs from time to time, and it would be impossible to get it perhaps if it was sought to bring experts from some foreign country—because America is behind in social-security legislation, and we know practically nothing about it except what we have learned from across the water—and propose to give those experts pay at the rate of $9,000 a year. We would not be able to get them if that were so, and those are protected under this amendment. Putting the regular per annum experts under the civil service will not in any way seriously handicap their work or prejudice their right to earn a salary commensurate with their talent and need. We have discussed that with the Social Security Board, or their representatives, and they feel that is very much more to be desired than to be compelled to run the gantlet of Presidential appointment and senatorial confirmation for men who must be selected, not for their ability to command votes but for their intelligence and experience and training in highly specialized lines.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. If we adopt this amendment and they are put under the civil-service classification, will the gentleman inform us whether or not their salaries will be lowered by such a procedure.

Mr. WOODRUM. Their salaries will not be affected, because they are already paid in accordance with the Classification Act.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. And they will be classified under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. WOODRUM. If they can qualify. Of course, they must run the gauntlet.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Will this have the effect of blanketing into the civil service the expert lawyers who have already been appointed?

Mr. WOODRUM. They must qualify. They qualify on a noncompetitive examination.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. This amendment will strengthen the merit system insofar as the Social Security Board is concerned?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think so. I do not think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. And it will eliminate the danger that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] fears, that of political appointments?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think so.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know what the gentleman means by "political appointments", but if he means appointments made by Congressmen or Senators, I do not think there are very many political appointments in the Social Security Board. On the other hand, if he means appointments made by other than Members of Congress, I think there are plenty of political appointments in the Social Security Board and the same condition exists whenever Congress appropriates money by lump sum and does not place the positions under civil service.

Mr. WOODRUM. I agree with the gentleman, and I can assure him that there are no political appointments made from the Sixth Congressional District of Virginia.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am in full agreement with the gentleman and likewise in his position as to appointments. My people will have a chance under the merit system.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will be glad to have it come to the point where I can say I do not have anything to do with it; that it is under civil service, and they have to apply through that.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. In case of future appointments of lawyers and experts, they do not have any civil-service list.

Mr. WOODRUM. There is an attorney register already existing. They perhaps will establish a special register where they want men of special training in social security or insurance work.

Mr. SCOTT. They will set up their register now, but in the meantime, before they get that done, they will have to have some more experts.

Mr. WOODRUM. The first thing they will do is to set up a qualification standard for the different grades, and then those people must qualify under that. They are already under the salary classification schedule.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. Do I understand by this amendment that it obviates the amendment which provides that the President must recommend and the appointments must be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UMSTEAD). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments 11, 12, and 13 may be considered together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report amendments 11, 12, and 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 11: Page 47, line 15:

"COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

"Not to exceed $525,000 of the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation, established as an agency of the Government by Executive Order No. 6340, dated October 16, 1933, continued to April 1, 1937, as a governmental agency under section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), and further continued to June 30, 1939, by the act of January 26, 1937 (Public, No. 2, 75th Cong.), shall be available during the fiscal year 1938 for administrative expenses of the Corporation, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833); printing and binding; law books and books of reference; not to exceed $150 for periodicals, maps, and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment, and servises; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of any real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest, including expenses of collections of pledged collateral, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof."

Amendment no. 12: Page 48, line 18:

"ELECTRIC HOME AND FARM AUTHORITY

"Not to exceed $300,000 of the funds of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, established as an agency of the Government by Executive Order No. 7139 of August 12, 1935, continued to February 1, 1937, by the act of March 31, 1936 (Public, No. 484, 74th Cong.), and continued further until June 30, 1939, by the act of January 26, 1937 (Public, No. 2, 75th Cong.), shall be available during the fiscal year 1938 for administrative expenses of the Authority, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833); printing and binding; law books and books of reference; not to exceed $200 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, care, repair, and disposition of any security or collateral now or hereafter held or acquired by the Authority, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof."

Amendment no. 13: Page 49, line 19:

"EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF WASHINGTON

"Not to exceed $50,000 of the funds of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, established as an agency of the Government by Executive Order No. 6581 of February 2, 1934, continued until June 16, 1937, by the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), and further continued until June 30, 1939, under the act approved January 26, 1937 (Public, No. 2, 75th Cong.), shall be available during the fiscal year 1938 for administrative expenses of the bank, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833); printing and binding; law books and books of reference; not to exceed $250 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of any real or personal property belonging to the bank or in which it has an interest, including expenses of collections of pledged collateral, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof."

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments nos. 11, 12, and 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire recognition.

Mr. Speaker, the three amendments—nos. 11, 12, and 13—have to do with the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, and the Export-Import Bank. Estimates for those three activities were not before the House when we considered the bill, and, therefore, they were put on in the Senate as Senate amendments. They merely authorize the use of administrative expenses by those three organizations, as they pay their own way. They are on a pay-as-you-go basis and do not require any direct appropriation from the Congress. Therefore, the House is asked to recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer briefly at this point to a matter which I should have referred to in discussing the conference report; that is, to section 4 in the independent offices bill, which provided that no agency could detail personnel to committees of Congress. The Senate struck that provision out of the bill, and in the conference report, which we have adopted a little while ago, we agreed to the Senate amendment.

I want to make this observation in order that the action of the House in receding from its disagreement to the Senate amendment will not be misunderstood. In the hearing before the independent offices subcommittee it developed that one department in that bill had detailed employees to an investigating committee of the Senate, which required the payment of over $400,000 of its salary roll for that personnel.

As was pointed out when this matter was before the House, the Appropriations Committee in providing that that sort of practice ought to stop was in no way undertaking to measure or to value the merits of any investigation. Theoretically, we were not concerned with the investigation or with the merits or demerits of it, but we believed then and we are more convinced now that the practice should stop.

Mr. Speaker, we have the greatest difficulty in undertaking intelligently to recommend to the Congress what should be appropriated for these bureaus and departments if after the money is appropriated and the people are employed we have no control whatever as to what the money is used for or where the people go. So the Appropriations Committee has taken the position, and we propose vigorously to follow that position, that when we appropriate money for a department to employ 100 people, for instance, that we are going to expect the department in good faith and in good spirit to use the fund for that purpose or have it in an unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that as to any investigation made by this Congress, if it is worth while, if it has real merit and is worth spending money for, this House is ready to appropriate a sufficient sum of money to carry out that investigation; and that applies to the other end of the Capitol, too. But when it came to administering this inhibition against the detail of personnel from departments, we ran into great difficulties. We found, for instance, that the Federal Trade Commission and the Federal Tariff Commission are being called upon constantly in the regular run of business to furnish information and sometimes a reasonable number of personnel to standing committees of Congress. We found that the Treasury Department was being called upon periodically to send a few of its personnel to the committees of the House and the Senate. So it seems to be a matter that is very difficult, certainly in an appropriation bill, to pass substantive legislation concerning.

I want to call the attention of the House, and particularly the attention of the department heads, to this provision of existing law, and to say here and now that the Appropriations Committee is going to expect departments to live up to it in spirit:

Section 3678 of the Revised Statutes: "All sums appropriated for various branches of expenditure in public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no other."

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the Appropriations Committee certainly would not be so unreasonable as to expect a department head to deny the use to a standing committee of the House, or an investigating committee, for that matter, of one or two of its employees if the committee desired to consult them, or if they desired to use them for a day or two. The committee would not object to any reasonable or legitimate request; but to go down to a busy department to which Congress has given important public duties and functions and take 75 or 80 of its best men and detail them to investigating committees for 6, 7, 8, or 9 months, to the tune of $400,000 or more, we think is entirely unreasonable.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. GREEVER. Have these expenditures ever been referred to the Comptroller General?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; they have, and so far there has been nothing done by the Comptroller General to stop it. As a matter of fact, when we appropriate money for an accountant to be employed in the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Comptroller General has no way of knowing whether the man is working down there or up here. The trouble is not under the Comptroller General; the trouble is in the department that takes the accountant away from his desk and sends him to Capitol Hill; and I want to say that all too frequently service on Capitol Hill almost disqualifies him for doing effective work down in the department again.

Mr. GREEVER. Has the matter ever been called to the attention of the Comptroller General and has he ever rendered an opinion?

Mr. WOODRUM. It has been referred to the Comptroller General, and he has ruled that they have no right to do that, but that is all he can do about it. The department, of course, is between the upper and nether millstones. Here is an important committee of the House, here are distinguished Senators who send down to the department and say that they want this personnel. The Appropriations Committee now is going to help the departments resist these blandishments from Capitol Hill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman state in a little more detail why it is that assigning these people to an investigating or to a standing committee of Congress for a substantial period of time ruins them for further service in the department?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I will.

Mr. McCORMACK. I ask the question for the reason that I think it ought to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUM. I will tell the gentleman why. In a specific instance an agent was detailed from one of the departments for 6, 7, or 8 months to aid an investigating committee. The committee to which he was detailed needed his services periodically. His bureau then could not keep him. He would report to Capitol Hill instead of to the bureau where he was employed. When asked by his superior in the department: "How about doing a little job for us today?" he would reply:

"Jim"—calling the distinguished Senator by his first name—"said for me to see him about a very important matter. I will see about that, and I will come down later. Tomorrow I have to have lunch with Tom and a crowd of his boys; we have got to consult about an important matter", and so on, and so forth. In other words, if he does not watch out, he gets a little too congressional for departmental work.

It is not fair to the department. What I am saying now is not necessarily leveled as a criticism at any particular department or the personnel of any particular department, but the practice is not fair to them. The point I want to make is that when we appropriate money—and I am speaking as the agent of your committee, the Committee on Appropriations—when we appropriate money we want it used for the purpose for which it is appropriated.

I believe that is what the House wants. There is no other way that we can logically or intelligently represent you on that committee. May I say that so far as worth-while investigations are concerned, I know some of them have been productive of great good. Perhaps the investigation now going on in the Senate, which has caused this matter to be brought to a head, will be productive of great good. I do not wish in any way to pass judgment upon that. But I do plead with the Members of Congress for an orderly, intelligent, and logical manner of handling the funds and personnel for these investigations.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I am a little concerned about what might happen to investigations that are now under way, some of which are perhaps two-thirds or three-quarters completed. In these investigations personnel has been taken out of the departments. Is this amendment going to stop that entirely?

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman the Senate struck the amendment out, and we have agreed to strike it out; so there is no amendment.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I think the gentleman scores a good point, but I also appreciate the fact if in a certain department is located the information that is necessary for the success of an investigation, there is no other way you can get around the matter but to take the personnel from that department and get the records. Take the Department of Justice, for instance.

Mr. WOODRUM. Let us consider the Department of Justice for a moment. Perhaps it will require 25 or 30 of the people of that Department and a month's time to collect certain information and send it to a committee. But there is a vast difference between that proposition and sending up 25 accountants to report and answer to an investigating committee of one branch of the Congress or the other and take that personnel entirely out from under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice for a long period of time to be pursuing whatever inquiries a committee of either branch may send them on. That is the difference. Speaking of these particular investigations, I may say funds have been provided for them, and they are in no way hampered by funds or personnel.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. So this amendment will not affect those investigating committees?

Mr. WOODRUM. The amendment is out. What we are trying to do now is to get something in the RECORD so that the departments will try to curb the evil. I think a great deal has been accomplished by having the matter brought up for discussion.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman give me 5 minutes?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Has the gentleman completed his statement?

Mr. WOODRUM. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I will wait until the gentleman gets through.

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes now. I will complete my statement after he gets through.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not want the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] to go into the RECORD as expressing the sentiment of the House of Representatives because, in my opinion, it does not represent the sentiment of the majority of the Members of this House. Certainly his views on this proposition do not represent my views, as I said previously, when this proposition was before the House for consideration.

The investigations that have been carried on by Senate committees in the past few years have been of inestimable value to the American people. It began with the Teapot Dome investigation, at which time a Cabinet member was being bribed by a crooked oil dealer to sell, in violation of law, the national oil resources of the United States for $100,000, and it was admitted that he said he would make something like a hundred million dollars out of the deal. The only place we can secure an investigation, it seems, is in the Senate. It seems to me the Senate should conduct these investigations. Their investigations have been carried on in a legitimate way.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. May I correct the impression that the gentleman, I know, does not intend to leave. There was an investigation made by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House which involved holding companies. That investigation was of such a character that out of it there came the Railroad Holding Company Act, the Communications Commission, and the Utility Holding Company Act.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, that was an investigation for the passage of legislation; it was hearings on a bill. But whenever it comes to carrying on investigations similar to the ones I have discussed we have depended on the United States Senate ever since I have been a Member of the House. It was the Senate investigation of holding companies that brought about these reforms, and if we had carried out the Senate views, if we had passed the Senate bill, we would have saved this country a great deal of trouble.

Objection is now raised that we ought not to send down to the Department and use those people who are on the Federal pay roll in these investigations. What are they on the pay roll for? We have enough people on the pay roll in Washington, it seems to me, to answer all purposes. If a Senate committee or a committee of the House needs these people, who may be peculiarly informed on questions they are investigating, or peculiarly fitted to secure the information, why should they not be used by the Senate committee or House committee in order to bring these matters to light? To shut the door to these committees and say they cannot use the people who are on the Government pay roll simply means that these investigations in the future will be stopped.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want the expressions of the gentleman from Virginia to go into the RECORD without at least expressing my own views to the contrary. I opposed this amendment when it was first put into the bill. I am glad the Senate knocked it out. I think they did a good job and I hope they will continue the process.

Using these employees to testify before investigating committees of the House or Senate, or to assist in gathering valuable information which was within their knowledge, or which they were peculiarly fitted to secure, has not crippled the service in any way, and I doubt if it has cost the Government an extra dollar. On the other hand, it has saved millions.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not the sentiments I have expressed are the sentiments of the House, may I say that on two separate occasions in connection with two separate bills this amendment was up for consideration of the House, and on at least one of the bills the gentleman expressed his sentiment, I expressed mine, and the House sustained my views.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Less than 100 Members voted on the proposition. There was only a little group present, largely composed of Members of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, it was the majority opinion.

Mr. RANKIN. There was a vote taken without a roll call; therefore it was lost by default.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I hope the gentleman who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations will do his best to see that the law is enforced on this subject.

If the Members of either the House or the Senate have a legitimate desire to investigate, they ought to appropriate the money and set it aside for the investigation, and not try to get it under cover.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the whole point.

Mr. TABER. They ought to come out in the open and act on the square.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes; I yield briefly to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. If we had waited for the gentleman from New York to start the Teapot Dome investigation, it never would have been done.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, that is beside the point entirely. The gentleman says unless we permit subterfuge these investigations cannot be carried on. It is nothing else but subterfuge to have an investigation and let the country think it is not costing anything, when it is costing $400,000 or $500,000. I do not evaluate it. Let the gentleman evaluate it himself. However, if it is worth a half million dollars, then honesty and legislative integrity ought to make us willing to let the country know how much we are spending on the investigation. [Applause.] However, I am not undertaking to evaluate it.

My friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, says if we do not permit this departmental subterfuge the investigations will stop. Is anyone going to say this Congress is not ready any day that any legitimate evidence or any reasonable grounds are brought here showing there is any serious matter which should be investigated to go forward with such investigation?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. I realize there may be differences of opinion, but in the opinion of some of us a very vital matter was up for consideration during the past week, the matter of investigating sit-down strikes, and the House refused to investigate because, it was stated by majority leaders on the floor, that it might embarrass somebody.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman knows we operate here by majorities. What is done by a majority in a democratic government, or what a majority of this House does, should prevail, whether I like it or whether the gentleman likes it.

Mr. MICHENER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM. We have to bow to what the majority says. However, I still say that any day any Member of Congress can come here and show any great need for an investigation, he will have the investigation, not only in this House but in the Senate. The Senate has a contingent fund on which it can operate, and so has this House. If it is necessary to take $400,000 worth of personnel from the Interstate Commerce Commission and use such people on an investigation, then I say, in order to safeguard the integrity of our appropriations and the budget system, let us credit the Interstate Commerce Commission with the salaries of such personnel and charge the expense to the investigation, and not have it shown that the money has been spent by the Interstate Commerce Commission when it has been diverted to another cause.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The investigation of Teapot Dome, according to the statement of the main person criminally involved, saved the American people $100,000,000. If these experts are already on the pay roll, have the information, and are able to testify, appropriating additional money to get somebody else to come in and do similar work is simply adding to the Federal Budget and not reducing it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact we are appropriating money only for such personnel to do the legitimate work of the departments and the bureaus, and that is all we are supposed to appropriate for in the regular appropriation bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is all.

Mr. TABER. If an investigation is to be made, the money for it is supposed to come out of the contingent fund of either House by resolution of that House.

Mr. WOODRUM. The money for the Teapot Dome investigation was appropriated by the Congress time and time again.

Mr. TABER. Certainly.

Mr. WOODRUM. There was no trouble about getting the money.

Mr. TABER. They did not resort to subterfuges and monkeyshines to get the money.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. We had it to do, because at that time the crowd in charge of this Government did not want Teapot Dome investigated. If we had had access to the people on the Federal pay roll as we have now, we would have saved a great deal of money by using such people, who were already being paid by the Government.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. May I correct one impression the gentleman from Michigan has given us, that is, that we voted down the resolution to investigate sit-down strikes because we were afraid to be put on the spot? We voted it down overwhelmingly, because it was a vicious bill which ought to have been voted down.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In answer to what the gentleman has stated, I quote the gentleman from North Carolina, who sits near him, and another distinguished leader, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], a Democrat——

Mr. KELLER. They lost.

Mr. MICHENER. These gentlemen said the Democrats should vote against the resolution because it might be embarrassing to the administration. In view of the fact they followed suit and did that, I do not think I am going far afield in surmising that the majority followed the leaders and did what they were asked to do.

Mr. KELLER. I just want to know who was the leader. I happen to be one also.

Mr. MICHENER. I concede that the gentleman from Illinois is one of the Democratic leaders. Unfortunately, they do not always follow the gentleman, however.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman is mistaken in his viewpoint.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the House receded from its position and agreed to the Senate amendment concerning the providing of funds for the investigation?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is correct. Largely what we have been saying here is academic. However, I do want to go on record for the Committee on Appropriations by saying that what we are trying to do is to perform the job you have given the committee. It is not a small job and it is not an easy job, but we are trying to do it the best we can. We are trying to watch appropriations, to curtail expense wherever that can be done. We are going to expect the departments and we are going to expect the Comptroller to assist in carrying out this job.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CORRECTION OF AN ENROLLED BILL

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Concurrent Resolution 8, which is now on the Speaker's table, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 8

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1455) to authorize certain officers of the United States Navy, officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the United States Army, and officers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps to accept such medals, orders, and decorations as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered; that if and when the said bill is returned by the President, the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the said bill be deemed to be rescinded; and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed, in the reenrollment of the said bill, to make the following correction, viz: In the language inserted by the engrossed House amendment no. 4, on page 2, at the end of line 11 of the engrossed bill, strike out the word "lieutenant" and insert the words "lieutenant colonel."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Georgia give us a brief explanation of why the passage of this resolution is necessary?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a concurrent resolution to correct an error in the enrollment of the measure in designating a certain officer as having the rank of lieutenant instead of lieutenant colonel.

Mr. SNELL. It affects just one officer?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is all.

Mr. SNELL. That is all the resolution does?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a list of non-Federal projects approved by the Public Works Administration where bond elections have been held and carried.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON and Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to ask the majority leader a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the majority leader inform the House what measure will be called up on Wednesday next, which is Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is my understanding the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which will have the call, will bring up the so-called long-and-short-haul clause revision or repeal bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is the so-called Pettengill bill?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the Legislature of the State of New York, by concurrent resolution adopted April 6, memorialized the Congress to initiate legislation having to do with remedial works for the preservation of Niagara Falls. In this connection I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point by including therein a copy of the resolution adopted by the New York State Legislature, together with a copy of my letter reviewing the situation having to do with this proposal as addressed to the author of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Whereas it is generally conceded that the Niagara Falls constitute the epitome of scenic beauty which is one of the wonders of the world; and

Whereas the force of erosion in the past several years has caused several rock slides which have seriously damaged the falls and brought to the attention of New York State and the Nation the need of taking steps to preserve the beauty of the Falls; and

Whereas these authorities have stated that corrective measures could be taken by man which would not only allay the action of erosion but would insure more permanent existence of the falls in their present beauty, and have declared plausible construction of weirs which would (1) control the flow of water to prevent concentration at the Horseshoe Falls, where erosive action has been speeded by the increasing volume of water, and (2) equalize the flow over the Horseshoe and the American falls so that the latter would carry an increased volume of water and would not be left nearly dry at certain times of the year, as at the present; and

Whereas such measures would entail the engineering project which would require action of the Federal Government leading to an immediate survey and preparation of plans for the weirs; and

Whereas discussion of preventive measures is now occupying the attention of the Congress of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the senate concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same hereby is, respectfully memorialized to enact legislation or take such other steps as would lead to correction of the present undesirable conditions recited therein to grant benefit to the Nation and of nature lovers in all parts of the world; and be it further

Resolved (if the senate concur), That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives elected from the State of New York, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such Federal legislation as will accomplish the purpose of this resolution.

APRIL 12, 1937.

Hon. HARRY D. SUITOR,
Member of the Assembly of the State of New York,
Albany, N. Y.

DEAR ASSEMBLYMAN SUITOR: This will acknowledge receipt of the copy of the concurrent resolution dated February 18, memorializing the Congress having to do with the proposed remedial works for the preservation of Niagara Falls. This is a subject in which I have been very much interested for the past 2 years and in which connection I have conferred with the President at the White House and exchanged with him a number of communications in regard to this proposal.

You will realize, no doubt, that following an extended survey made by the engineers several years ago a treaty having to do with this project was negotiated with the Canadian Government. This was submitted to the Senate for approval and referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The treaty provided for remedial works in the river on both Canadian and American sides in accordance with the survey initiated by the engineers under the commission formed for this purpose, but included an additional diversion of water power for private interests on both sides. The Senate committee reported unfavorably on this treaty, as a result of which the treaty was never ratified. Some 2 years ago I reopened the subject with the President, when a great deal of public attention directed itself to the necessity for improving the Falls because of landslides or fall-ins, both in the American and Canadian crests. There was considerable sentiment for the introduction of legislation in Congress having to do with this matter.

At his request, following my first conference with President Roosevelt, I withheld the introduction of any legislation inasmuch as he informed me that at his request the State Department had initiated negotiations with the Canadian Government for a new treaty which would provide for the necessary remedial works without any additional water diversion on either side of the river for private interests.

It is a fact, of course, that no legislation by the Congress is necessary in the premises. The engineering needs to remedy the situation are established and known as a result of the previous surveys. All that is required is completion of a new treaty with the Canadian Government and its submission to the Senate for ratification by a two-thirds vote. The treaty would provide that the expense of the undertaking will be borne jointly by the two Governments, the American share of this expense would probably be taken care of out of Public Works funds or by special appropriation for the purpose to be provided for following the ratification of a treaty.

The President is very much in favor of the project and according to written advice which I have received from him the negotiation are still pending and it is at his specific request that I have not introduced a bill for this purpose.

I have written you rather fully in this matter so that if you see fit this information may be given to the assembly or to those particularly interested in the proposal.

Sincerely yours,

W. G. ANDREWS.

COMPENSATION TO PERSONS SERVING AS POSTMASTER AT THIRD- AND FOURTH-CLASS POST OFFICES

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 77) for payment of compensation to persons serving as postmaster at third- and fourth-class post offices, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the proviso, following the appropriation for compensation to postmasters, contained in the act approved March 1, 1921 (41 Stat., p. 1151; U. S. C., title 39, sec. 39), is hereby amended by adding after the words 'unnecessary delay' at the end thereof the following: 'A person who, upon the occurrence of a vacancy and pending the appointment of a postmaster or the designation of an acting postmaster, assumes and properly performs the duties of postmaster at any third- or fourth-class post office shall be allowed compensation as postmaster for the period of such service: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States, in the settlement and adjustment of accounts and claims for compensation for service heretofore rendered, but subsequent to June 30, 1930, is hereby authorized and directed to allow compensation as postmaster for service rendered under the circumstances and conditions hereinbefore prescribed.'"

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this takes care of those cases that now exist where an acting postmaster was named and the Comptroller has refused to pay for the service because the persons so acting were not properly designated by the Postmaster General.

Mr. MEAD. Yes; they are really emergency postmasters, usually a member of the postmaster's family.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I think I understand the situation. I had a case last year where a fourth-class postmaster died suddenly and the person who had previously acted as a clerk in the office was directed by the inspector to take charge of the office. He was in charge of the office and ran the office for 3 months before an acting postmaster was designated, and at the end of the 3 months he received no pay and has not received any pay as yet, because he did not have proper technical authority from Washington to act as postmaster. I take it then that this bill will make it possible for this postmaster to get his money?

Mr. MEAD. That is a correct illustration of the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. This bill will take care of such cases; in other words, it is retroactive.

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman explain the difference between the bill passed by the House and the amendment now before us?

Mr. MEAD. The House bill had a restrictive clause of 60 days and the Senate removed that limitation. The Senate bill is more in keeping with the recommendation of the Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from Mr. Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE, BOGOTÁ, COLOMBIA (H. DOC. NO. 217)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $5,000 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Tenth Pan American Sanitary Conference to convene at Bogotá, Colombia, in August 1938.

CIVIL-SERVICE POSITIONS PROMISED BY CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I think what I shall say will be of interest to the membership. On a trip over the district several months ago my attention was called to the fact that a number of correspondence schools throughout the country are actively soliciting students upon the implied promise that upon the completion of the course they offer, these young men and women will be given a Government position. Under date of March 25, the Civil Service Commission wrote me suggesting that an article that I had prepared upon the subject and which appeared in a number of newspapers should be inserted in the RECORD so as to give publicity to the activities of these correspondence schools, some of which are actually taking what might be said to be the blood money out of our young men and women.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I am very glad the gentleman has brought this question before the House, because I have found, particularly in Minnesota—and I assume it is true in other States—that men from correspondence schools in Detroit and other places are going over the country in pairs claiming they represent the Civil Service Commission, and upon the payment of $60 to $75 they are promising these boys and girls jobs in the Government service.

Mr. KNUTSON. My attention has been called to a case where a widow had gone to a bank and borrowed $80 and given a mortgage upon chattels to get money enough to pay for the course for her son, and after he had taken the course he was unable to secure a position. Undoubtedly she is out her $80 and probably has lost the chattels by this time.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. HAINES. I think the gentleman is making a distinct contribution. I found in my own district where they not only advertise and promise jobs to individuals on the payment of a certain sum but they follow it up with representatives calling on these people. I am glad the gentleman is bringing this to the attention of the country.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks the letter from the Commission and the article they refer to, and also to insert a communication that the Civil Service Commission recently prepared upon this subject which is in the nature of a warning to the young men and women of the country not to permit themselves to be defrauded by unscrupulous promises of Government positions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1937.

Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. KNUTSON: The Commission has noted your article appearing under "Public Forum" in the January 21, 1937, issue of the Park Rapids Enterprise, Park Rapids, Minn. This article is in regard to so-called civil-service schools.

Your reference to the Commission's advice in regard to such schools indicates that you are familiar with what has been done by the Commission in endeavoring to protect the public against misrepresentation by schools. Warning notices, such as that enclosed, have been posted in first-, second-, and third-class post offices throughout the country. Many newspapers have also published these notices.

In spite of these measures, inquiries and complaints in regard to schools are still being received from all parts of the country. The Commission, in appropriate cases, refers any actual evidence of fraud or misrepresentation to the Post Office Department or to the Federal Trade Commission, according to the nature of the complaint. In response to every inquiry received, whether a complaint or not, the Commission sends information regarding so-called civil-service schools, contained in Form 2814, a copy of which is enclosed.

It is believed that much may be done by increasing publicity through all appropriate official agencies situated to contact the public. Inquiries received from Members of Congress indicate that all are not familiar with this matter. Accordingly, the Commission suggests that desirable results might be accomplished by publishing your article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If you think a more comprehensive statement, setting out the efforts against the schools, the nature of the complaints received, and conditions respecting examinations generally, would be preferable, please so inform the Commission and it will give you the pertinent facts.

By direction of the Commission:
Very respectfully,

WM. C. HULL, Executive Assistant.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1937.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION ISSUES WARNING

It will be recalled by my readers that last fall I issued a warning through the newspapers of the Sixth District against such correspondence schools and mail-order training courses as prepare for Government service and promise jobs. Some of these schools and their field representatives have made very extravagant promises with regard to Government employment. My attention was very forcibly called to this matter when I visited the village of Dassel last fall. A joint statement just issued by the Civil Service Commission and the Social Security Board warns persons against subscribing to these courses in the hope of securing Government positions with the Social Security set-up. There is now on file more than 35,000 applications for positions with the Social Security Board. Then, too, there are thousands and thousands who already have a civil-service status which entitles them to preferential treatment. I am informed that there is now available many more eligibles than there are positions. The same holds true with the Railway Mail Service, as I called attention to some weeks back. My purpose in again bringing up the subject in this letter is to warn my readers against paying out good hard-earned money for a correspondence course in the vain hope of securing a Government job. It is the unemployed and low-income groups that are being victimized by these fraudulent activities.

Yours truly,

HAROLD KNUTSON.

[(Please post conspicuously.) United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.]

CIVIL SERVICE SCHOOLS

The United States Civil Service Commission receives numerous complaints regarding the activities of so-called civil-service schools, and is taking this means of informing the public of their true status. Many of these schools grossly exaggerate opportunities for employment in the Federal civil service and give the impression that they are connected with the Government.

1. No civil-service school has any connection whatever with the Civil Service Commission or with any other branch of the Government.
2. The Commission has no agents who solicit applications for civil-service positions or who sell "civil service" courses.
3. No school can properly "guarantee" Government employment.
4. No school has advance information regarding the need of civil-service employees or the announcement of examinations.
5. No school is given information regarding examination questions or any other information which is not available to the general public.
6. The Commission does not recommend any school.
7. It is not necessary to take a course with any so-called civil-service school in order to compete in any of the Commission's examinations.

Information regarding examinations for the Federal civil service may be obtained at any time, without cost, from the Secretary of the United States Civil Service Board at any first- or second-class post office, or from the United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me advise those who are interested in securing Government employment that they write the Civil Service Commission before paying out any money.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, during the last few days we have had some exceedingly disturbing things happening, and the financial situation especially is very jittery. Yesterday I tried to make a rather careful survey from the financial reports of the week. I earnestly urge Members to study them at the present moment. Open-market operations, freezing of reserves, buying of inactive gold to the tune recently of about $361,000,000. Are these proving as effective as hoped? We do not dare reduce the price of gold for fear of what may happen in the financial world. We are certainly in a very serious situation, and should give careful heed. My earnest request is that those who are so besotted with their own schemes for the betterment of a few, to the ruination of the country's credit, should pause. I earnestly ask you to study the last week's performances in the financial centers of the country.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. What remedy does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GIFFORD. Stop spending money. That is the remedy.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. What would be the result of the stopping of the expenditure, and where would the gentleman stop expenditure?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think if we should balance the Budget and not spend more than we have and not borrow any more, it would be reassuring, because we are told that further use of the borrowing power at the moment may prove very dangerous. We have reached the point where we should stop, and I for one have the courage to join with you, even in the imposition of more taxes, rather than continue to jeopardize the Nation's credit by further borrowings.

Mr. KELLER. What would be the result upon the men who are now at work for the Government?

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not know, but we should at least stop needless and extravagant spending.

Mr. RANKIN. I have listened to the gentleman's remarks and I am wondering just where he would begin. I should like to have him lay down a program for the curtailment of expenditures showing what expenditures he would eliminate.

Mr. GIFFORD. I spoke plainly on this floor for half an hour last Friday and made many suggestions. I call the gentleman's attention to my remarks at that time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let them start in on the Florida Canal.

Mr. RANKIN. What else?

Mr. GIFFORD. I am very earnest about the matter. If you study, as I have tried to, the financial reports; if you will procure the various financial sections of the papers of yesterday and study them, you may be shocked enough to see and recognize the danger signals.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we hear a great deal of complaint from men whose sympathies seem to be largely with that element of our population who have their money invested in tax-exempt securities. They seem to be afraid we are going into a boom of commodity prices. They seem to be very much afraid that wheat and corn and cotton and lumber and those commodities that have been for years below the cost of production, will rise to their normal value. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] that I do not entertain those fears. When we made the debts we are now paying, the debts we are now trying to wring from the masses of the American people, wheat was selling at around $2 a bushel and cotton at 20 cents a pound. You attempted to pay those debts by wringing from the people of the United States money on the basis of 8-cent cotton and 60-cent wheat, and even when wheat dropped down lower than 40 cents a bushel. The farmers out in the country do not get excited, the masses of people, the small merchants who do not own tax-exempt securities, the shop owners, the great masses of people who support the Nation, do not get excited when commodity prices gradually rise. But I notice it always creates great excitement among the ones who have their money invested in tax-exempt securities, or their representatives.

I stood on this floor in 1929 and stated that we were in a money panic at that time; that we were going to have to have currency expansion to bring commodity prices back to something like normal levels, or the administration then in power would be swept into the discard. They declined, with the result that their party was swept out of power, and they have opposed at every turn every movement we have made, from cutting the gold content of the dollar to giving the President power to issue $3,000,000,000 of United States currency, if necessary, to keep this same element from forcing us into a panic at a time when the country was trying to struggle out from under the burden they had placed upon us.

It may be that some men who had sold their property and some who coined their millions from the blood and tears of the people during the war and invested in tax-exempt securities or bought watered power stocks, watered railroad stocks, watered telephone stocks are getting excited because, forsooth, commodity prices are gradually rising. But that is not going to hurt this country. We must have further expansion, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts. We will have to have further rises in commodity prices if the farmers ever pay their debts, feed and clothe their families, and meet the obligations that have fallen to their lot. Did you know that they have been selling farms under the hammer, the best land in the United States, for years? We need more expansion instead of curtailment of expansion. We need to expand until we raise the price of wheat to something like $2 a bushel and cotton to 20 cents a pound. Until that time comes, I am not interested at all in this argument that we are in a boom. Are we in a boom because some men who got rich out of the war, because some men who got rich out of manipulating railroad stocks, because some people who own watered power stocks are not able to continue to wring their money from the helpless masses of American people? No. We are not in any boom. There is no danger, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts; but the time has come when the American people are being treated as a whole by an administration that has sympathy for the toiling masses of this Republic.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I quite agree with the gentleman's feeling for the wheat farmer and the cotton farmer, but will he explain to the House what would happen tomorrow if, because of the gold pouring into this country, particularly from Russia, we put its price at $30 rather than $35? What would happen to the family income and the thrift and savings of our people?

Mr. RANKIN. I can tell you one thing that would happen; it would have a tendency to raise commodity prices and hearten the farmers of this country and the small merchants of this country, the producers of raw material, those who pay the Nation's taxes in time of peace and who fight its battles in time of war.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does not the gentleman know——

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I know what the gentleman from Massachusetts wants. His party wants a continuance of those exorbitant tariffs which, according to the best authorities, wrung $4,000,000,000 a year from the unfortunate consumers of America.

Mr. GIFFORD. But are not cattle and peanuts and your other products now protected by a tariff?

Mr. RANKIN. They raked it into their coffers and invested it in tax-exempt securities. Then clouds lowered upon the horizon and the Hoover depression broke. They closed their factories and turned their workmen upon the streets to fill the breadlines and the soup kitchens from Mississippi to Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RANKIN. I know those men would like to see the dollar squeezed so that their tax-exempt securities would buy more of what the toiling masses in the South, the West, the Middle West, and the North produce. But that day is not coming back, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I asked the gentleman a question. He is getting away from it splendidly. I compliment him.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes? [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Only last week when it was merely rumored that the President had it in his mind to lower the price paid for gold, how quickly he acted to deny it. I ask the gentleman again if he can visualize what would happen if he lowered the price of gold? What would that do to the farmers?

Mr. RANKIN. If it raised the price of "gilt-edge investments", the gentleman from Massachusetts probably would not kick. But when it raises the price of what the other fellow has to sell you see the Old Guard from Massachusetts kicking. Whenever you see that happen you may know good and well it is something that would benefit the mass of the American people but would not help them hang onto their already accumulated wealth. I see the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HEALEY, looking at me. I am not referring to him. I am talking about the Republican Old Guard from Massachusetts. [Laughter.]

But I want to give the gentleman something to chew on while he is on the floor. I am talking about the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GIFFORD, for whom I have always entertained an abiding affection. At a later time I hope to be able to make a speech on power rates, but I do not want to let this opportunity pass without calling his attention to the fact that the people in his district are almost in revolt over the exorbitant power rates that are being charged the helpless consumers of electric energy in Massachusetts. I did not believe it when I first read about conditions in Nantucket. The gentleman voted for the antilynching bill today. His own people are being "lynched" by the Power Trust. The power interests are lynching the people in Nantucket, in his district, through the exorbitant rates they are charging for light and power.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman mentioned that I voted for the antilynching bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to ask a question.

Mr. RANKIN. Ask it, but I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. GIFFORD. Do they not, in the gentleman's State, take people into the Federal courts for shooting ducks?

Mr. RANKIN. We are not shooting ducks now; we are not considering the Supreme Court or any member of it; this is not a duck hunt. But does the gentleman know what they are doing in Nantucket? Let us not get away from Nantucket, because that is in the gentleman's district. [Laughter.] Instead of worrying about inflation he ought to join in and help the administration to reduce light and power rates.

I saw the other day where they were charging 17 cents a kilowatt-hour—$4.25 for 25 kilowatt-hours of electric energy in Nantucket. I did not believe it until I looked up the record and found that it was correct. In the gentleman's district they are selling for $4.25 electricity that should cost not more than $1. [Applause.]

THE SPEAKER'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I know that I express the feeling of every Member of the House of Representatives and of numberless millions outside whom we represent when I take this moment to congratulate you, sir, upon this, your birthday [applause, Members rising] and to express the hope, which is also unanimous, that your life may be lengthened many years in order that your great service to the people of the country whom you have so well served in the past and whom you so much love may continue. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute. [Laughter]

Of course, I recognize the fact that this is the anniversary of my birth, but I did not know it had been sufficiently bruited around the cloak rooms to call for its declaration openly by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

I imagine that birthdays have their uses; but when we get along and put a good many milestones behind us, although it is a very happy and felicitous thing to be congratulated, it sometimes makes us conscious of the fact that possibly our best days are behind us. But I am nevertheless exceedingly grateful to my good and warm friend, with whom I have served in this distinguished body for so many years, for the very kindly and complimentary things he has said in connection with this very happy day, and I am very much obliged to him for his reference to it. [Applause.]

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory. O send out Thy light and Thy truth: let them lead me.

We pray Thee that more and more we may practice self-denial and zeal for doing good. Thou who art our refuge and strength, shield us from the power of temptation and help us to bring into subordination every passion and every weakening tendency. By Thy grace may we be aided in emulating the good in others and be able to make the world a little brighter because of Thy gift to us this day. May we grow larger and larger in things right. With humbleness of mind and with a sense of unworthiness help us to do our part in the great field of human life in overcoming evil and in pursuing that which is good. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, today, beautiful spring day that it is, with the birds singing, the flowers blooming, and all nature turning again to a new year, is the birthday of that illustrious American statesman, Thomas Jefferson, author of the famous Declaration of Independence and third President of the United States. Thomas Jefferson blazoned a path in American history which no one from his time to the present day has been able to equal.

The birthday of Thomas Jefferson, April 13, as I have stated, is at the threshold of the spring when all things in nature return with renewed life. This is symbolic. For Jefferson is as much a living force today as he was in his own day, a century and a half ago.

Why is it that Jefferson is a vital force today, whereas most of his contemporaries survive only as names in biographical dictionaries or have disappeared altogether? Why is it that he remains an inspiration to our whole country in these troubled times? Why is it that his name is a word to conjure with?

It is not because he was a scholar, lawyer, philosopher, and author. We have had many scholars, lawyers, philosophers, and authors who were as great or greater than he. It is not only because he was a great statesman, diplomat, and President. We have had statesmen, diplomats, and Presidents as great as he. It is not even because he was a great nation builder.

Jefferson is alive today partly because he was all these, of course, but above all because he was a great democrat; because throughout his lifetime he fought for democracy with steadfast faith and singleness of purpose. Many of the problems that we are struggling with today he met and solved with the ease of a master.

Democracies of a kind had existed before his time in Greece, in Rome, and elsewhere. They flourished for a day and were gone. It was Jefferson's purpose to help establish a democracy on this continent that would endure forever. How well he has succeeded in his purpose we can best judge today.

Our democracy has survived many vicissitudes, including a great civil war, and is flourishing today. Many attacks have been made upon it, and many more may be expected in the future. But that it will survive the attacks of its worst enemies we have no doubt.

Jefferson was a statesman, and as a statesman he was obliged from time to time to sacrifice the lesser to the greater good. He was forced to compromise now and then in accordance with Anglo-Saxon tradition and practice. But on one subject he never yielded. He refused to compromise on democracy.

To him democracy was not simply a philosophy of life; it was a practical system to live by. It is worth noting that his democratic principles took root very early in life and remained with him to the end.

He was admitted to the Virginia House of Burgesses at the age of 26, and his very first proposal, soon after he entered, was an act for the emancipation of the slaves. At the age of 33 he wrote the Declaration of Independence.

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker. A young Virginian, only 33 years of age, traveled over the poor roads, rough as they were at that time, consuming many days in the trip, to the city of Philadelphia. The only accommodation he could find in that city was a small furnished room. There, without assistance of any kind, without even books or documents to which he might refer, with his own hand and in his own handwriting he wrote the Declaration of Independence. We who from time to time have to prepare addresses know how difficult the work seems to us; yet this man, without help of any kind, in a small furnished room in the city of Philadelphia, wrote that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence. No one in the history of the world has ever produced a greater political document. It is comparable to Pericles' celebrated funeral oration, made during the dark days of the Peloponnesian War, which has helped to perpetuate not only the name of Pericles but also the great Athenian democracy of his day. The Declaration is a mightier document, wider in its appeal, more solid in its fundamental principles. It is immortal because it has a meaning and signficance to people everywhere who suffer under despotic rule.

Every word of this great paper is Jefferson's own, and it reflects the character of the man even more than it does the character of the revolutionary times. If Jefferson had done nothing else, his place in American history would be secure.

But the Declaration was but one small, although important, contribution of this great man to the principle of democracy. Even in these early days he was no dreamer or vague experimenter. He put aside ideals which could not be put into practice. He set before himself a five-point program to further democracy in Virginia.

First. To abolish the aristocracy of wealth and birth which then existed, and "to make an opening for the aristocracy of virtue and talent which Nature has wisely provided for the direction of the interests of society, and scattered with equal hand, through all its conditions."

Second. To liberalize the laws relating to religious freedom.

Third. To do away with slavery.

Fourth. To make education universal.

Fifth. To humanize the criminal laws.

An ambitious program for a young man—for any man—but not beyond the scope and ability of this great nation builder, as future events have amply demonstrated.

He set to work at once to carry out his program. In his native Virginia an aristocracy of privilege consisting of a few families was being nurtured, similar in all respects to the aristocracies of Europe, except that titles of nobility did not exist.

This aristocracy was based upon extensive landholdings which, under the laws of primogeniture and entail, descended from father to son. It was by means of these simple legal devices that the powerful feudal systems of the world had been built up, and Jefferson was determined to abolish them in Virginia and to prevent them from getting a foothold elsewhere in this country.

After a hard fight, Jefferson won. He made many enemies in the course of his fight, but that fact never diverted him from the path that he had chosen.

The next step in his struggles for democracy was the establishment of religious freedom in Virginia. The laws of this Colony were extremely intolerant on religion and set a bad example for the rest of the country. Others had done much for freedom of thought and religion, but no one had done more than Jefferson. He succeeded in forcing the enactment of a law, the spirit of which was later embodied in the first amendment to the Constitution:

Be it, therefore, enacted by the general assembly, That no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be forced, restrained, molested, or burdened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in nowise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities.

Clear and to the point, as all great utterances are, Jefferson had done in this brief document as much for freedom of thought as the great men who had fought before him on the same line—Roger Williams, Penn, and Calvert.

In his fight to free the slaves in Virginia he failed. But it was a noble failure, which bore fruit many years later. What he started another great President finished.

He proceeded to extend the free-school system in Virginia to the poor as well as the rich along the broadest democratic principles. It was the pride of his life that his work in this field was consummated before his death with the establishment of the University of Virginia.

His great work for democracy along practical lines in Virginia was completed when he revised its criminal law by injecting humane principles into them.

I have purposely emphasized Jefferson's work for democracy in a limited sphere—his home State. For in a single drop of water the whole ocean is reflected. From his aims and ambitions here, we get a good idea of the heroic stature of this enduring revolutionary figure. He built not only for his own State but for the entire country; not only for his time but for ages to come. It is unnecessary to dwell upon Jefferson as a statesman, diplomat, and President. Every schoolboy is familiar with his glorious record.

It is good to remember in these troubled days that ingratitude, the bitterness of party strife, and failure never caused Thomas Jefferson to waver in his faith in the people, and that he remained to the end of his days the leader of democracy against aristocracy.

I know that you will be pleased to learn that I have introduced a joint resolution, which is now on the Consent Calendar of the House, authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim the 13th day of April of each year Thomas Jefferson's Birthday. I hope this resolution will be enacted into law at the present session of Congress in order that for all time, as the years roll on, our countrymen shall have vividly brought to mind the name and the fame of this illustrious American. When you think of Jefferson and his accomplishments you are thinking of virtually a dozen men. When you read of the life of Jefferson you think you are reading of the lives of a dozen men, all prominent in their particular spheres. We today cannot do too much to perpetuate and immortalize the name of that distinguished American patriot, author of the Declaration of Independence, third President of the United States, and author of the statute of religious liberty in Virginia, Thomas Jefferson. [Applause.]

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, early yesterday morning I drove to Mount Vernon, that place which to the world is a place of pilgrimage, where the grand and the simple folks come to reverence the memory of a man who was great not because he was brilliant but because in a critical time he was level-headed and brave, a soldier, and a statesman, an American, farseeing and self-forgetting, strong in body and spirit, true to his country and himself—Virginia's first citizen, George Washington. Kings come to his grave to learn of him.

ROBERT E. LEE

I drove back up the Potomac to Arlington. There I stood under the white-pillared portico of an old southern mansion on that historic hill which overlooks the Potomac. As I looked toward the Capitol I thought of the passions which were raging under the dome dedicated to liberty and the preservation of democratic institutions back in those days when Robert E. Lee made his momentous decision to take no part in any invasion of any of the Southern States. I thought of him not as a southerner but as that greatest of all military strategists and leaders, as an American whose rare ability and whose devotion to a cause are the heritage of all his fellow citizens, north and south, east and west, in Oregon and Texas, and in Vermont as in Virginia.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

On my way to the Capitol I stopped and looked once again at that classic memorial where sits the marble statue of Abraham Lincoln, who needs no monument. The rugged, honest, steadfast perseverance and staunch Americanism of this man stand as examples and objectives which the Nation, and all of us as individuals, may well try to emulate. Unwavering in his loyalty to the fundamentals of the American Government, his genuine respect for the Constitution, and his grave concern for the destiny of the Republic ended only with his death.

I looked down the river toward Mount Vernon, and across the river at Arlington, and once more at the Lincoln Memorial, and I thought and said, and say again, these three—Washington, Lincoln, and Lee—are three of our greatest Americans.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Then I started for the Capitol around the Tidal Basin. My attention was attracted by those who are engaged in making soundings for the tentative location of the foundation of a memorial to Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson thought I, that man who was, and still is, the greatest and most influential exponent of both liberalism and Americanism.

He, too, needs no memorial, for his memory is enshrined in the heart of every American. He it was who formulated the creed of Americanism. He stands out, and forever will stand out, as the most integrally and truly American among his contemporaries. Thomas Jefferson was, and is, the greatest political philosopher of America, and one of her greatest sons. He who as one of the founders of the Republic, at 33 years of age wrote the Declaration of Independence, third President of the United States, and as the statesman he was, added Louisiana to the Union, will never be forgotten. Right it is that he take his place with Washington and Lincoln and Lee.

It is an historical fact that during the formative period of our national life he stood second only to Washington in power and influence, and for 25 years after the death of Washington the will and the word of Jefferson were supreme.

EXPOUNDER OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Justly has it been said of him that he was the greatest prophet of government and expounder of human rights that the world has ever produced. His extraordinary influence on the development and growth of liberalism and democratic ideas throughout the world cannot be overestimated, nor can the extent of his contribution to the growth of democracy be measured or comprehended. For such ascendency as was his there is no parallel in English politics. "To match Jefferson you would have to roll Bentham and Cobden and Gladstone into one", says Hirst in his Life and Letters of Thomas Jefferson.

Be that as it may, it is true, as said Randall in 1857, in his three-volume edition of the Life of Jefferson, that—

> His ideas have been transmitted to succeeding generations without any apparent diminution of their influence. We are, however, presented with the remarkable spectacle of a reputation more assailed by class and hereditary hate than any other, and all others, belonging to our early history * * * scarcely defended by a page, where volumes have been written to traduce it—yet steadily and resistlessly spreading until all parties seek to appropriate it—until not an American man between the Atlantic and the Pacific dare place himself before a popular constituency with revilings of Jefferson on his lips.

Two great names are embalmed before all others in the hearts of the people. One belonged to the sword and the other to the pen of our country.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-FOURTH ANNIVERSARY

I wondered as I watched the men working to find the rock foundation on which to erect the suitable memorial what Jefferson, the "living Jefferson", would do and say were he here today in this year—the one hundred and ninety-fourth anniversary of his birth.

STRICT CONSTRUCTIONIST

I wonder what Jefferson would do if he were President today?

I recall the fact that he believed in a strict construction of the Constitution, although favoring such changes as might be necessary to meet changing needs, but always insistent that such changes be made after careful consideration and by orderly amendment. While he would place power in the hands of the people, he was opposed to individual or group usurpation; though he was a staunch proponent and defender of State's rights, he was for the Nation first.

SOUND CURRENCY

He believed in decentralization rather than centralization; and favored only such a government as would insure the necessities for the times. He would not tolerate the incurring of unnecessary governmental expenses or the growth and establishment of a vast body of Government officials. He insisted on maintaining the credit of the Government, on balancing the Budget, and on sound currency, and he was forever opposed to any repudiation of obligations.

Sometimes we forget these things for which he stood, but we never can be unmindful of the fact of his constant and never-changing devotion to liberal ideas, to freedom of speech, thought, action, press, and religion. We should not forget, and we will not forget, the liberalism and devotion to fundamental human freedoms and liberty of Jefferson. "Without such freedom and without such liberty", as has been well said, "the American people will find themselves fed and clothed, perhaps, and perhaps not, but spiritually in chains which will bite into their flesh and sear their souls." I still wonder what Jefferson would do.

CIVIL REVOLUTION

Whether we like it or not, and whether we know it or not, we are in the midst of a revolution which up to date is civil in character, but no man knows what may happen as of tomorrow. Insidiously, surreptitiously, an attempt is being made to make over and to change the entire social and economic life of this Nation. The game is not being played according to the rules. When either the Executive or Congress undertakes to change, alter, or amend the Constitution in any manner or by any method not provided for by that document itself, then constitutional government is a mockery, and we will eventually, as Lincoln predicted, arrive at either anarchy or despotism.

The number of Federal officeholders has increased by hundreds of thousands; bureaucracy is already a dangerous element, for it feeds and grows on itself and its tentacles reach out into every field of endeavor; and by reason of the centralization of strength and power, and by refusing to submit to either increased taxes or to reduce salaries threatens the continued life of the Republic.

Over 16 percent of the people of America are today on the Government pay roll. If we may believe what we hear, and predict the future from the present, we may state, without fear of contradiction, that, as measured by the expressed desires of those now in charge, the regulation of the economic life of this country and the Government's direct participation in it as principal or partner has just begun. The intent, purpose, and desire of those who would bring about governmental regulation of all business so as, according to their theory, "to bring about a balance between supply and demand, production and consumption, do away with crises, and bring a comfortable scale of living to all, regardless of individual ability or energy", admittedly disregards the fact that even their unsuccessful attempt to do this has already initiated and involves a fundamental change in our form of government, in Government organization, and in the theory of the established order in America.

THE ROAD TO ECONOMIC CHAOS

So I am opposed to any extension of governmental bureaucratic tentacles and to the appropriation of one cent for the purpose of putting the Government into business in competition with the individual; opposed to the attempt of the Government to control and coordinate all business and to put the small private businesses out of business. I believe that such a plan as is contemplated can have but one conclusion, and that is a complete economic catastrophe. No one can successfully deny the statement that the policies and the plan and the program which is being pursued both economically and constitutionally lead down that road; lead toward a loss of liberty, toward inflation, ruin, and economic chaos.

JEFFERSON, THE MAN

Jefferson felt and believed, so his biographers tell us—and it is confirmed by his speeches and letters and by his public and private acts—that here in America there would be a chance and an opportunity to try out the possibility of such a liberal government as the world had never seen nor had yet been attempted.

His masters, and the only ones he had, were the Greeks of old—Homer and Euripides, then Cicero and Horace, finally Bolingbroke—and, above all, the historians of the English law, in whose works he studied the principles, development, and degeneration of free institutions.

He was a persistent student and an omniverous reader of historical, legal, and philosophical disquisitions, with an extraordinary capacity for absorbing knowledge and a most remarkable independence of thought.

He saw America unhampered by hoary traditionalism, free to shape her destiny and to preserve and extend already existing liberties, fulfilling her duty to mankind.

Notwithstanding this, he was for certain reasons anathema to the New Englanders of his day, and by his own Virginians he was then considered as attempting to undermine an established social order. He has not altogether been forgiven by many Virginians as yet, who still consider him a renegade.

THE LATE HON. JAMES M. BECK

It is my great good fortune, as it is also that of some of you, to have been associated with and to have known intimately our former colleague and great American, the late Hon. James M. Beck, of Pennsylvania. We all recall his uncanny and outstanding ability to foresee and prophesy trends in American life, changes in the character of American political institutions, and to make wise suggestions in connection therewith. None more or better appreciated than he the fact that the force which sustains all these and the source of their vitality is the intelligence and political conscience of the people. With him the Constitution was the "law of the people", and he believed that until the people had decided to change it, "it should be observed in spirit as well as in form by those into whose keeping it was committed."

NEITHER PURSE NOR SWORD

He was "alarmed by the present-day readiness to sacrifice the protection it affords for the passing advantages of the hour."

At the time of his death he was engaged, in collaboration with the Honorable Merle Thorpe, editor of the Nation's Business, in preparing for publication an authoritative work, which has been completed and published since his death under the title "Neither Purse Nor Sword."

Mr. Thorpe is authority for the statement that in the early discussions which led to the writing of the book Mr. Beck referred again and again to the disturbing tendencies of the times. Of them he said:

Is it not true that the present generation of Americans, to gain some immediate and practical advantage, are willing to sacrifice essential principles of the Constitution until that noble edifice is in manifest danger of becoming, like the Parthenon, beautiful in its ruins, but nevertheless a vacant temple of liberty?

Even lip service to the Constitution, he pointed out, ceased a few years ago. Today the Congress, notwithstanding the oath that every Member takes to defend it, passes any legislation it thinks expedient without concern as to its constitutional power to do so. He added:

FALSE SENSE OF SECURITY

The American people have been lulled into a false sense of security by the fixed belief that the Supreme Court will automatically and effectively preserve the Constitution through judicial decisions. This is the great illusion of our political life. It has impaired the spirit of vigilance, which still remains the price of liberty. The American people would have been more vigilant in preserving the Constitution if they had not placed undue reliance upon the power and disposition of the Supreme Court to do so.

Recalling that Alexander Hamilton had said that the Supreme Court has neither purse nor sword, he pointed out that its authority is purely moral and is circumscribed by the willingness of the people to accept and abide by its decisions as a guide for governmental action. He said:

THE SUPREME COURT

It was therefore natural that the Court, from the beginning, decided that it would not invalidate any law, even in a litigated case, unless its repugnance to the Constitution was clear beyond a reasonable doubt, and few constitutional questions have such admirable certitude of result. This has meant that the Court is deliberately astute to preserve an act of Congress, if by any ingenuity of reasoning it can conscientiously do so. * * * The Supreme Court has rendered an invaluable service to the Nation in protecting Federal power against the encroachment of the States, but it has been less effective in protecting the States against the encroachment of the Federal Government. I know this is not the accepted view of the bar, which contemplates the Constitution in a filiopietistic spirit and regards the Supreme Court as both omniscient and omnipotent. The Supreme Court cherishes no such illusion. Its high integrity of purpose and its valorous effort, when occasion arises in a litigated case, to preserve the form of our Government is clear, but it knows full well the limitations of that power in a country whose spirit is essentially that of a democracy.

There are certain statements in the book which challenge and compel one's attention, and especially so on this anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. I make them my own and direct your attention to the following:

COORDINATION UNDER THE CONSTITUTION

In the field of government, as in mechanics, there is always a centripetal and a centrifugal tendency. The real problem, both of mechanics and government, is to coordinate and counterbalance them. The greatest merit of the American Constitution is that above every other political frame of government it did coordinate the two tendencies. The real question in the minds of the founders was whether the American people would have sufficient genius for government to carry out the theory. This gave rise to two schools of thought.

On the one hand, Patrick Henry is too commonly regarded as only an orator, but in his speech in the Virginia ratifying convention he clearly foreshadowed the centralization of today and his fears were emphasized by Jefferson and Madison.

On the other hand, Washington, Hamilton, and Marshall were fearful that the centrifugal tendency would be so great that sooner or later the central government would become as impotent as the old confederation. In their own day, their fears were justified.

The distinguishing merit of John Marshall, as Chief Justice, was that he, more than any other American, coordinated these conflicting tendencies. If he asserted in one opinion the authority of the central government, he asserted, with equal force, the rights of the States. The fears of Washington and Hamilton were justified when the centrifugal tendencies resulted in the Civil War, but the tragic consequence of that fratricidal conflict was that, in defeating the centrifugal tendencies, it gave such an impetus to the centripetal tendencies that today the fears of Henry, Jefferson, and Madison are fully justified. There is now no centrifugal tendency to counterbalance the centripetal. The two historic parties vie with each other in centralizing the Government with the result that the centripetal tendency has wholly destroyed the centrifugal tendency. We have today in fact, although not in theory, a totalitarian socialistic state.

The framers claimed neither omniscience nor omnipotence. Therefore the Constitution provided for such additions of Federal power, through the amending clause, as the future might require. Freely conceding that the portentous changes of a mechanical civilization require widening of the Federal channel, the fundamental truth is even truer today than it ever was, that a nation of 48 States, spanning a great continent from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf, cannot be wholly governed by a distant center. Here the analogy of the Roman Republic suggests itself with undiminished force, for it was the centralization of the Roman Empire in the Imperial City that caused the final collapse of that vast political structure.

Mr. Speaker, the pendulum has swung away from the individual citizen as the political unit toward the social group or class. The vigilance with which the American of the Revolution guarded the freedom which he had won has, after 150 years of unexampled prosperity, given way to apathy. Those who have gained little by it have been willing to sacrifice it for the promises, somewhat illusory, of social benefits, and to merge their political identity with a class. The more fortunate have taken for granted that liberty is so securely safeguarded by political institutions that there is no need of defending it. The one hoped to gain by political effort what he had not achieved by his own. The other looked all too complacently upon the expansion of governmental functions to fulfill rosy promises.

This was not unforeseen. As has been well said:

Conditions have changed but not principles. The men who established the Republic had more misgivings over its permanency than the people who came after them. They foresaw the storms that would assail it, the clamor for privilege it would have to endure, and the demands of majorities and minorities to which it would be subjected. They sought by the device of a written charter and written law to protect government against the people and to protect the people against the aggressions of government, but neither they nor many men who long preceded them had any illusions as to the duration of democracy. Twenty-two hundred years ago Aristotle forecast the dangers it would face.

He said:

ARISTOTLE FORECAST THE DANGERS

Everybody receives pay when pay is to be had. * * * When they are paid the common people have the most leisure, for they are not hindered by the care of their own property, which often fetters the rich who are thereby prevented from taking part in the assembly or in the courts, and so the state is governed by the poor, who are in a majority, and not by laws.

More than 2,000 years later DeTocqueville, examining the progress of the new Republic in America, said:

The disastrous influence which popular majority may sometimes exercise upon the finances of a state was very clearly seen in some of the democratic republics of antiquity, in which the public treasure was exhausted in order to relieve indigent citizens or to supply the games and theatrical amusements of the populace. It is true that the representative system was then imperfectly known, and that at the present time the influence of popular passion is less felt in the conduct of public affairs; but it may be believed that the delegate will in the end conform to the principles of his constituents and favor their propensities as well as their interests.

Montalembert, one of the stanchest defenders of democracy, foresaw the same dangers in the "increase of functionaries" and "deluge of officials." About the same time Herbert Spencer wrote:

Each generation is made less familiar with the attainment of desired ends by individual actions or by private combinations and more familiar with the attainment of them by government agencies, until eventually government agencies come to be thought of as the only available agencies.

PATERNALISM

Public officials were not loath to play the paternalistic role. They began "to favor the propensities" of the social groups which had become more clearly differentiated as time went on. The neoliberal economist, the "progressive" politician, the social engineer united in launching the doctrine that the end of politics is to make the world a better place to live in, not to enable the individual to make it a better place for himself. The generation which achieved freedom, for itself and its children, did not delegate to government the task of rearranging conditions under which that freedom was to be exercised. The farmer was left to his own devices. The merchant followed his own bent. Governing, which had played a relatively unimportant part in the lives of the citizens, eventually became the principal American occupation. Established governmental units broadened their activities and new units were created in reckless profusion to exercise specific functions. A committee of Cabinet members reported to President Franklin D. Roosevelt that there were in the United States 175,000 units altogether in 1936. Other estimates are much higher. The fact that the number has never been accurately compiled is an illuminating commentary upon the diligence of the politicians and upon the indifference of the people to the expansion of political administration.

Let me remind you that behind the increase in governmental functions and the shifting of the exercise of them from the smaller to the larger political units is the melancholy fact that the system established by the founders is decaying at the roots.

The individual citizen is less concerned about his rights and more disposed to shift his responsibilities to government. He looks with equanimity upon political invasion of the domain of private enterprise, the absorption of local functions by State governments and upon the greater encroachment of the Federal Government upon the political jurisdiction of the States. Having managed badly the affairs of his own neighborhood, he is only too willing to have them managed by a government the seat of which may be a thousand miles distant.

It is not to be forgotten that the approach to political paternalism was paved with benevolence. The Federal Government, for at least a hundred years, did not covet authority. It merely extended a helping hand. It paid out money to the States, and, indirectly, to their citizens without attaching strings to it. It left them free to work out their own salvation. The fact that public generosity was a step in the substitution of collective political responsibility for personal responsibility and that it put the beneficiary in the position of paying for what the Government gave him, rather than of buying what he wanted when he wanted it, was not brought home until the burden of expenditure for this assistance began to be reflected in mounting taxes and increasing public indebtedness. By giving to the States public lands, then the money derived from the sale of public lands, and, finally, from the General Treasury, the Federal Government purchased the acquiescence of the citizens and their local governments allaying any misgivings that might have arisen.

The centripetal tendency, as is so well pointed out—

Has subjected to unprecedented strain the American political structure of which government is the framework. Both the individual citizen, upon whom it rests, and his local government have been overshadowed by the expansion of Federal powers. Individual responsibility has been weakened. Self-government, to which local government is the nearest approach, has been undermined. With increasing momentum Federal Government has gone on accumulating authority and assuming new functions, with the acquiescence of the citizen, until it has acquired the characteristics of a self-actuating and self-sustaining state. The Constitution still exists in form, but the "ethos", the spirit of the people, which sustains it is ebbing.

The serious problem that confronts us is how long the established political system can withstand this strain lies with the future. Resilient as it may be, it cannot be made to conform to shifting demands indefinitely. The American people must decide whether they will change their system of government or whether they will change themselves. The differences between a political system based on the liberty and responsibility of the individual citizen and a system based on the idea of the supremacy and responsibility of the State, which shall rule supreme over their activities and their possessions, are irreconcilable.

ENCROACHMENT OF EXPANDING GOVERNMENT

Mr. Speaker, little by little the individual citizen has been induced to yield ground to the steady march of expanding government, welcoming its encroachments upon his "natural and inalienable" rights under the guise of benevolence. Ill-considered reforms through the centralization and expansion of political authority are attended by grave dangers.

What is needed is an intelligent appraisal of the state of the Union, a spirit aroused to the active support of our institutions, the citizen awakened to the realities that he alone is the custodian of his own destiny, and that this responsibility has not been, and cannot be, delegated to his political agents. This responsibility is, indeed, great. If he fails, the American tradition of ordered liberty under law, the culmination of man's greatest effort to be a free spirit, will in very truth be homeless; it will be a tradition without a country. New life and meaning must be given to the admonition that "eternal vigilance still remains the price of liberty."

ANTAGONISTIC PHILOSOPHY OF GOVERNMENT

I am sure that the freedom and toleration for which Jefferson struggled are seriously threatened today by a philosophy of government which is as antagonistic to his own as was Hamilton's; as different as is the day from the night; a political theory and movement as diametrically opposite and opposed to the plan of Jefferson as are the poles from one another; a movement, in short, which involves the political, moral, and intellectual slavery of the individual and of mankind. Reduced to its least common denominator, the fight between Jefferson and Hamilton was to determine "who is to rule; why are they to rule; what is the object of their rule." Jefferson stood then for freedom and for toleration of the individual. I wonder what Jefferson would stand for now? I wonder what he would say with respect to the plan and the program to erect and to establish here in these United States a centralized, authoritarian, economic, totalitarian, collectivist state, and all at the sacrifice of that liberalism, individualism, and Americanism for which he so valiantly fought? I wonder?

We hold—

Said Jefferson—

these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; and among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

He persistently emphasized the fact that to be really and truly independent is to support one's self by one's own exertions.

Is life so dear or peace so sweet—

Asked Patrick Henry—

as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?

And I add to the query—no matter how softly the chains of regimentation may have been fastened around our ankles, or how soporific the ease we enjoy, because of the condition of servitude and dependence in which we find ourselves?

These are troublesome days in which you and I are living. The burden of our responsibility is heavier than we like to admit. We are recreant to the trust imposed on us and to our duty to ourselves and to posterity if we do not take the necessary time to think through the problems that confront each one of us and make them our own. We shall all, and each, and every one of us best honor these men and days of old by signing our own declaration of independence from all and everything that makes us seem so selfishly interested in ourselves and in material things, and apparently as indifferent to the future welfare of our country.

If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

A DEADLY PARALLEL

In conclusion, let me remind you that the situation in which we find ourselves today has its deadly parallel. One hundred years ago, or thereabout, all over the globe the forties and fifties registered the impress of the industrial revolution upon man's economic and social patterns. Not only did the changes born of Watt's singing kettle and Stephenson's iron horse fashion a new economic world of laissez faire, but also it loosed the leash upon emotions, and the ensuing ferment had vast consequence.

Within a single decade Darwin disturbed the scriptural story of man's genesis; Marx questioned the social value of private ownership; Britain abandoned her corn laws and her old parties; nationalism flamed across the face of Europe; and there was fighting in the streets of Paris and revolution in Budapest.

While America escaped bloodshed at the barriers, thought and feeling waged an increasing struggle to control her development. From the middle forties forward the concepts of the founding fathers were increasingly neglected, while emotional currents excited the feelings of her people and rendered them susceptible to the ministrations both of zealots urging abstract causes and of manipulators who knew what they wanted and employed the tools needed to secure it. This sharpening duel between emotion and intelligence marked the real beginning of the great American crisis, that constitutional debate which ended in a war of brothers and a peace of desolation and despair.

In the language used by that distinguished statesman from your native State of Alabama, Mr. Speaker, the Honorable William L. Yancey, in 1860, as he addressed that historic and memorable convention in Charleston, I am constrained to say:

Perhaps even now the pen of the historian is nibbed to write the story of a new revolution.

[Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a letter which I received from Secretary Perkins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCLAUGHLIN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE INIQUITOUS TAX ON UNDISTRIBUTED PROFITS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, last year, under the lash of the President, but, as I believe, against its better judgment, the Congress passed what is known as the tax on undistributed profits. This alleged tax, which is imposed in addition to a normal corporation income tax, is levied against that portion of the current net earnings of corporations not distributed to stockholders in the form of dividends during the taxable year. The rates are graduated from 7 to 27 percent, depending upon the ratio of undistributed earnings to total net earnings.

I am particularly pleased at this opportunity of speaking upon this subject following the extension of remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] last Tuesday, in which he set forth a number of reason for repealing this tax. I recall that during the consideration of this measure in the House last year the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] made an able and effective address in which he set forth a long list of reasons why the tax should never have been enacted. Both these gentlemen have views similar to my own. Thus the opponents of the measure can be classed either as bipartisan or nonpartisan.

Mr. Speaker, I give it as my deliberate judgment that never was a more unsound, unjust, or oppressive piece of legislation ever passed than this so-called revenue measure. In truth it is not a taxing act at all, but rather is an injudicious penalty imposed on current earnings used for the building up of necessary reserves, for the payment of debts, for business rehabilitation and expansion, and for other legitimate and economically desirable purposes. Not only does it constitute an uncalled for, unjustified, and dangerous meddling with the management of private business, but in effect it becomes a burden, not on corporate income, but on prudence, honesty, and enterprise.

MEASURE CRUCIFIES FINANCIALLY WEAK CORPORATIONS

Let me illustrate how the measure applies to a few everyday situations. Take, for example, the case of a corporation which since the onset of the depression has been struggling to keep its head above water. Recurring deficits have impaired its capital structure. For the first time in many years it now has a small net income. Instead of distributing to the stockholders the current earnings remaining after payment of the ordinary corporate income tax, it desires to follow the dictates of sound business policy and use the money to restore its capital structure. But if it does so, it will be subject to the maximum penalty tax.

Why this should be I am unable to say. Certainly a corporation in financial straits is in no position to distribute all of its earnings to its stockholders. Yet the law which this Congress only recently passed completely ignores this plain and uncontrovertible fact. It lays down a mandate to the corporation either to distribute these earnings or pay a heavy penalty. Whichever course the corporation pursues it will suffer.

Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, I ask this question: Is it the object and purpose of this law to crucify financially weak corporations—drive them to the wall—and give the field over to their larger, well-financed competitors, who by virtue of their strong financial position can distribute all their current earnings and thereby avoid the penalty tax? I had thought that it was supposed to be an act to r-a-i-s-e revenue—not to r-a-z-e business.

Many years ago the eminent jurist, John Marshall, laid down the dictum that the "power to tax involves the power to destroy." No better illustration of the truth of this statement could be given than the present undistributed earnings tax, which, whether this be its purpose or not, will unquestionably have the effect of crippling or destroying many corporate enterprises whose only sin is that they are struggling to exist in the face of financial difficulties.

In his message to Congress in 1935 in connection with the so-called "share the wealth" tax bill, President Roosevelt said:

The drain of a depression upon the reserves of business puts a disproportionate strain upon the modestly capitalized small enterprise.

This undoubtedly is true; but what does the undistributed earnings tax, which was only enacted because the President insisted upon it, do for the "modestly capitalized small enterprise"? Does it relieve this strain? Most certainly not. Instead, it piles a crushing additional burden on small businesses—and the more modest the capital, the greater the burden.

STATE LAWS FORBID DECLARATION OF DIVIDENDS IN CERTAIN CASES

In nearly every State there are laws forbidding a corporation from declaring dividends so long as its capital is impaired. The tax on undistributed earnings, therefore, gives rise to an anomalous situation, which results in a great hardship to a corporation in these circumstances. It cannot distribute its earnings in compliance with the arbitrary mandate of the Federal tax law wthout breaking the law of the State. And if it complies with the law of the State, it is compelled to pay a heavy penalty to the Federal Government. Again I ask, Why should this be?

TAX NOT BASED ON ABILITY TO PAY, BUT ON INABILITY

One of the cardinal principles of taxation is that a tax should be based on "ability to pay." The President of the United States has many times stated his belief in this doctrine. Speaking at Worcester, Mass., during the last election campaign, he said:

Here is my principle: Taxes shall be levied according to ability to pay. That is the only American principle.

As he so often does, the President, in insisting upon the enactment of the so-called tax on undistributed earnings, has once more failed to live up to his stated principles. This tax, instead of being based upon ability to pay, is measured by inability to pay. It taxes the weak and exempts the strong, and is retrogressive in every sense of the word.

TAX PENALIZES BUILDING UP RAINY DAY RESERVES

Another instance in which the so-called tax on undistributed earnings operates to penalize prudent business management is in connection with the building up of "rainy day" reserves. Every dollar of current earnings used for this purpose is subject to the penalty tax, the amount increasing with the proportion of net earnings set aside.

Mr. Speaker, it surely is unnecessary for me to dwell at any length upon the necessity for reasonable corporate reserves. They have been very appropriately termed "the life insurance policies of business." Those business enterprises which have weathered the storm of the depression have been able to do so only because they had built up adequate reserves during the prosperous years. According to Department of Commerce figures, American business paid out some twenty-seven and one-half billions of dollars more than it earned during the years 1930 to 1935, inclusive. Think how much worse the depression would have been had the present tax policy been in effect prior to 1929 and business had been discouraged and prevented from creating the reserves out of which this tremendous payment was made, which not only enabled business to continue operations but at the same time sustained employment and the continuity of dividends. I shudder to think of the havoc that will be wrought by the next depression if American business is forced to enter upon it stripped of all reserve funds.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is the gentleman able to make any computation of what the national debt would be today if American industries had not had twenty-six and a half billion of reserves to pay out?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman certainly presents a very interesting question, but, possibly, one that would require very deep study. The Government would probably have had to assume the tremendous obligation that industry itself bore, resulting in an increase in the national debt by that amount. But I am wondering whether, under such circumstances, there would be any business transacted in the country today. It seems to me it would have been fatal to business if there had not been such a reserve at the time of the great depression. Does the gentleman agree with that?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I agree with the gentleman.

TAX CONTRIBUTES TO INSTABILITY OF BUSINESS

Mr. TREADWAY. Nothing ever contributed more to the instability of business than this iniquitous tax on undistributed earnings. By forcing corporations to follow a loose dividend policy the tax will have the inevitable effect of accentuating the peak of the boom years and the valley of depression years. Business will skyrocket higher, but it will likewise have further to fall. Instead of keeping on an even keel, it will go from one extreme to the other, and go a lot further than it has ever gone before.

We have already seen evidence of this contribution to business instability in the unduly large and improvident declarations of divdends at the close of 1936. This flood of dividend payments was not justified by the recovery thus far achieved, and would not have occurred except for the coercive influence of the undistributed earnings tax. While they may provide a temporary illusion of prosperity, they merely foreshadow the financial chaos that in the end will surely result.

LABOR HAS AS GREAT A STAKE IN BUSINESS STABILITY AS CAPITAL

When it is said that reserves are the life-insurance policies of business, this does not mean that they inure solely to the benefit of capital. Labor has as great a stake in business as has capital. If a business goes to the wall because of inadequate reserves, the workingman who is employed therein suffers as much, and probably more so, than the stockholder. There has been increasing evidence of late that labor leaders are awakening to the obvious fact that while this law is supposedly aimed at capital, the workingmen of the country will be the greatest losers. There can, of course, be no question but that instability of business means instability of employment.

EXEMPTION OF BANKS AND INSURANCE COMPANIES AN ADMISSION THAT TAX IS WRONG IN PRINCIPLE

In enacting the undistributed earnings tax at the insistence of the President Congress very properly exempted banks and insurance companies from its operation. They are required by law, as a matter of sound public policy, to maintain an adequate reserve. Consequently it would be unfair, and detrimental to the interests of bank depositors and insurance policyholders, to penalize banks and insurance companies for setting aside the portion of their earnings required by law.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is just as essential for other business enterprises to have adequate reserves as it is for banks and insurance companies. If the undistributed earnings tax is not good for one, it is not good for another. The same considerations which caused Congress to exempt these two classes of corporations should have caused it to reject the whole fantastic and crippling scheme of taxation as applied to all business. The exemption of these groups is but a tacit admission that the tax is wrong in principle and operation, and should be repealed outright.

MEASURE CONSTITUTES DANGEROUS MEDDLING WITH SOUND BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

I have already said that this tax constitutes an uncalled-for, unjustified, and dangerous meddling with the management of private business. I would like to enlarge a little on that statement.

In the ordinary course of business taxes are one of the factors to be taken into consideration in determining business policy. But they are not the controlling consideration. Other factors are the necessity for reasonable reserves to meet contingencies; the necessity for reinvesting a portion of the earnings in repairs, replacements, new machinery, plant extensions, and the like; the amount of outstanding indebtednes for which provision must be made; the amount of available cash; and numerous other considerations.

UNDISTRIBUTED EARNINGS TAX BECOMES CONTROLLING FACTOR IN CORPORATION'S DIVIDEND POLICY

By virtue of the undistributed earnings tax the tax factor becomes a major if not the controlling factor in the determination of a corporation's dividend policy. Sound business judgment, which should largely govern this matter, becomes secondary—in fact, in most cases it will be crowded out of the picture altogether. When a corporation is faced with paying a tax of as much as 27 percent for pursuing a prudent course it is practically compelled to capitulate to the seductive and insidious alternative of tax exemption which the law offers to corporations which pursue an improvident policy by distributing all current earnings.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion it is not only a perversion of the taxing power for the Federal Government to thus interfere with the internal management of business, but it is a practice which is to be strongly condemned from the economic standpoint. It can have no other effect than to undermine the financial stability of the whole business structure. It would be bad enough if the Government tried to regulate each business individually, but when it lumps all business in one category and attempts to govern dividend policy under a single formula, irrespective of the varying needs of individual concerns, we have a classic example of rash and ruinous regulation running riot.

PENALTY ON PAYMENT OF CORPORATE DEBTS

Another unfortunate and oppressive feature of the undistributed earnings tax is its application to debt-burdened businesses. One would never suppose that the taxing power of the Government would ever be used to discourage and penalize the payment of honest debts, yet that is precisely what this measure does. Since current earnings which are applied to debt payment cannot be distributed as dividends, they automatically become subject to the penalty tax.

In enacting the statute Congress attempted to afford some measure of relief to debt-burdened corporations by a so-called cushion, which suspends the imposition of the penalty tax in cases where the payment of dividends is prohibited by a written contract entered into with creditors prior to May 1, 1936, or where under such a written contract a portion of the earnings of the current year is required to be set aside for amortization of the debt.

ALLEGED CUSHION A COLOSSAL JOKE

This alleged cushion is a colossal joke. One eminent taxing authority has estimated that not one contract in a thousand will comply with the technical limitations of the exemption as set forth in the law. This means that most of the debt-burdened corporations, even when they have such contracts, will obtain no relief, though the contracts effectively operate to restrict them from paying dividends. The fact should not be lost sight of that these debts were contracted in good faith at a time when there was no indication that before they were paid the corporation would be subjected to a heavy penalty for complying with its contractual obligation.

Where the contract is entered into after May 1, 1936, no relief whatever is granted, even though the contract complies with the other limitations of the statute. Regardless of the fact that such contracts are effective to restrict corporations from paying out dividends, corporations will nevertheless be subject to the penalty tax for complying with their obligations.

Here are just a few of the reasons why these so-called cushion provisions are a joke:

First. The contract not to pay dividends must not only be written, and entered into prior to May 1, 1936, but it must expressly deal with the payment of dividends and operate as a legal restriction upon the corporation as to amounts which it can distribute.

Second. The contract must prohibit dividends of all forms, both cash and stock.

Third. According to the Bureau's regulations, the requirement that the contract exressly deal with the payment of dividends is not met where a corporation is merely required to set aside periodically a sum to retire its bonds or where the contract merely provides that while the corporation's bonds are outstanding the assets shall not be reduced below a specified amount.

Fourth. Contracts to set aside a portion of the earnings must expressly deal with the earnings or profits of the particular taxable year before they will be recognized.

Fifth. According to the regulations, a corporation having outstanding bonds is not entitled to a credit under a provision of a contract merely requiring it to retire annually a certain percentage or amount of such bonds; to maintain a sinking fund sufficient to retire all or a portion of the bonds by maturity; to pay into a sinking fund for the retirement of such bonds an amount equal to a certain percentage of gross sales or income; and so on.

Sixth. A contract is not regarded as expressly dealing with the earnings or profits of the taxable year merely because it deals with such earnings in terms of "net income", "net earnings", or "net profits" (see Bureau regulations).

Seventh. Amounts set aside in pursuance of a preferred-stock issue for the retirement of such stock are not considered as being set aside "for the payment of a debt."

BUSINESS DEBTS MUST NECESSARILY BE PAID OUT OF EARNINGS

Whether there is a contract requiring the corporation to do so or not, it must necessarily set aside a portion of its earnings and profits to pay its obligations no matter when entered into. Why should the date May 1, 1936, make any difference? Why should any contract be necessary? Certainly a corporation is no less obligated to set aside a portion of its earnings for debt payment simply because it has not contracted to do so.

Mr. Speaker, it is a strange philosophy of taxation which punishes honesty and integrity and encourages dishonesty and irresponsibility. Aside from penalizing businesses which have existing obligations, the tax will operate to restrict corporate credit in the future by making it more difficult for corporations to pay their debts. It would seem that business loans are already difficult enough to secure without the Federal Government stepping in with a bungling policy which creates further restrictions on corporate credit.

PENALTY ON EARNINGS USED FOR REHABILITATION AND EXPANSION

Another major objection to the undistributed earnings tax is that it discourages and prevents the use of current profits for business rehabilitation and expansion. Earnings plowed back into the business for this purpose are classed as undistributed profits and hence made subject to the heavy-penalty taxes. No relief provisions of any kind are set up in this connection.

Mr. Speaker, I need not remind the House of the blighting effect this feature of the tax has on business recovery and the reemployment of idle men. The President of the United States has issued a challenge to business that it must either give work to the unemployed or else the Government must continue to do so. But what chance has business to create jobs if it cannot use its current tax-paid earnings for expansion purposes? What opportunity is there for plant enlargement, for research and development, for the installation of improved machinery if earnings used for these purposes are to be made subject to confiscatory penalties? Enlarged plants would mean more jobs both in their construction and operation. The modernization and rehabilitation of existing plant facilities would create still more jobs. But the iniquitous undistributed-earnings tax puts a penalty on industry for creating jobs in this way. Hence it is in the interest of labor that this tax should be repealed or modified.

SMALL CORPORATIONS HANDICAPPED IN BORROWING FUNDS AND SELLING STOCK

It is no answer to say that the necessary funds for business expansion and rehabilitation can be obtained through borrowing or the sale of additional stock. The old established corporation, with adequate financial backing, can go into the money market and borrow funds or sell stock, but what chance has the small inadequately financed corporation which is struggling for its existence? It can neither borrow money nor sell stock. The only way it can possibly expand is by plowing back its earnings. If it is not allowed to expand by this method, it will not be able to expand at all.

Aside from the effect this will have on recovery and reemployment, it means that business enterprises will tend to become frozen at their present size. This, in turn, is conducive to monopoly by allowing large business enterprises to continue unmolested in their present dominating position. No better device for the perpetuation of monopoly has ever been conceived than this indefensible tax on undistributed earnings.

TAX CREATES UNFAIR COMPETITIVE SITUATIONS

The foregoing objections to the undistributed earnings tax all contribute to a situation which in itself constitutes another grave objection to the tax, namely, that it causes an unfair competitive condition between corporations in the same line of business, and applies unequally to corporations in different lines of business.

For example, let us consider the case of two corporations in the same line of business. Corporation A is a large, well-financed company with large accumulated reserves. It has no debts, does not need to add to its surplus, and has all the plant facilities it needs. It can therefore escape the undistributed earnings tax by distributing to its stockholders all current profits.

Corporation B, we will assume, is a small, newly organized company, which has outstanding debts which it must meet, which must, as a matter of sound policy, set up a reserve for contingencies, and which needs to make certain plant enlargements. Let us suppose, further, that it must retain its entire current earnings, after payment of the normal corporate income tax, for these purposes. If it does so, it is penalized to the maximum extent. It may have to pay a tax of as much as 27 percent on the earnings thus retained, while its competitor—the large, well-financed company in the same line of business—goes scot-free so far as the undistributed earnings tax is concerned. The competitive advantage that the latter company will have is obvious. Under these circumstances, it will not be long before the large well-to-do corporation has the field to itself.

TAX DISCRIMINATES AMONG CORPORATE TAXPAYERS IN DIFFERENT LINES OF BUSINESS

In the same manner the tax discriminates between corporations in different lines of business. Although two corporations may have the same income, one will pay a crushing tax and the other will escape entirely because it is in a financial position which enables it to distribute all its earnings. A tax which has this effect cannot be defended. The purpose of taxation is to raise revenue and not to discriminate unjustly between taxpayers, particularly when the discrimination is in favor of businesses with the greatest taxpaying ability and against those with the least.

I call attention to the well-known fact that some businesses, such as public utilities, have a fairly stable income and do not need much of a surplus. They are enabled to escape the tax by making a complete distribution of their current earnings, which they can do without in any way jeopardizing their financial position. On the other hand, businesses which involve great risks and hazards, and which have an unstable income, must necessarily maintain large reserves. The greater the risk involved and the more unstable the income, the greater the reserves that will be needed. This means that the tax will be highest in the case of businesses in which the risks and hazards are greatest. Hence the effect of the tax is to favor the business with a steady, assured income and to discriminate against the business with the unstable income.

BUSINESSES FORCED TO GUESS AT YEAR'S EARNINGS TO GET CREDIT FOR DIVIDENDS PAID

A still further major objection to the tax has to do with the method of assessment. Under the law the penalty tax applies to all current "undistributed net income" remaining after payment of the regular corporation income tax. While the statute sets up a technical definition of such income, in general it may be said to be the portion of the net earnings not distributed to and received by the stockholders before the close of the taxable year. It is the requirement that the dividends must be declared by the corporation and received by the stockholders prior to this time that causes the difficulty.

Normally a corporation has 2½ months at the end of the year in which to ascertain its income and make up its return. It still has this period in which to make the return, but in order to get credit for its dividend distributions it has to attempt the impossible task of determining its financial position before the close of the year so that it will be in a position to know how much it can or ought to distribute, keeping in mind the various purposes for which all or part of the earnings should be retained and the tax penalties that will attach for failure to distribute. Everyone with any practical business experience knows that this cannot be done within this time limitation with any degree of accuracy, and it should be remembered that any errors in computation or judgment may be costly, viewed either from the standpoint of the tax where the dividend distribution is too small, or from the standpoint of the needs of the business where the dividend distribution is too great.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Business takes care of whatever employment there is, and when more people are employed business will do it. Business also carries the tax load of relief. However, I want to encourage the gentleman, who is making a great contribution on this subject. The gentleman, I am sure, is aware that history has already recorded this legislation under the title "The Asinine Tax of 1936."

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank my colleague.

The undistributed earnings tax very definitely puts a corporation "on the spot." If it pays out less than the statutory earnings, as technically defined, it becomes subject to the penalty tax, which it may have tried to avoid by making a complete distribution. Likewise, if it errs in the other direction and pays out more dividends than it should, it may injure its financial position. In this connection it may be pointed out that frequently it takes years before the actual amount of the statutory income is adjusted to the satisfaction of the Government. It is possible for a corporation to have made every effort to distribute all its earnings to avoid the penalty tax and then a few years later find that certain deductions have been disallowed by the Treasury, which have the effect of giving it an "undistributed net income" subject to the penalty tax. It is then too late for it to make a distribution of this amount.

The determination of the "undistributed net income" is not only complicated by the fact that the law is extremely technical, but by the further fact that the statutory definition of income seldom if ever coincides with the net income as determined by the corporation's own practical accounting methods. Hence, from the accounting standpoint, a corporation may not be in a position to declare a dividend, while from the standpoint of the tax law it has a technical "net income." One reason is that a corporation's earnings very frequently are not entirely in the form of cash, but consist of inventories, accounts receivable, fixed assets, and so on, which cannot very well be distributed. The result is that the penalty tax is imposed upon a fictitious undistributed income which is larger than the corporation's real undistributed income.

MEASURE VIOLATES ALL RULES OF TAXATION AND IS PRODUCT OF SOME MUDDLED MIND

Mr. Speaker, if this so-called tax on undistributed earnings is really a tax measure—which I, for one, deny—it violates every sound and fundamental rule of taxation. As I have previously indicated, it is not based on ability to pay; it is unreasonable and unequal in its application and excessive in amount; it interferes with sound and prudent business management; its liabilities are uncertain, and its administration complicated. The objections to the measure, from the standpoint of tax theory, are endless, as are the objections from other standpoints.

Where did this novel and revolutionary tax originate? Who is responsible for it? Quite obviously this hybrid monstrosity is the illegitimate brain child of some muddled mind. It could never have originated with anyone of experience or ability in the field of taxation, or who had any knowledge of the practical workings of business. Of course, it may be said that taxes on undistributed earnings have been proposed before, but the answer is that they have been consistently rejected by the Congress even though in every instance they were much less drastic in form than the present law.

The measure to which these remarks are addressed was recommended to Congress in a message of the President on March 3, 1936, but I do not charge the President with having originated the plan. He merely passed on someone else's idea, apparently without much consideration of its probable effects. The chief sponsor of the bill before the Ways and Means Committee was the present general counsel of the Treasury Department, Professor Oliphant. This gentleman, who has heretofore had much to do with the tax policies of the Treasury Department, falls in the category of one of my pet aversions—impractical college professors with no business experience. He admitted during the hearings that he had not had much experience in the field of taxation, and that his knowledge was gained mostly from books. When asked about the origin of the proposal for taxing undistributed earnings, he said that it had been worked out by a group of "experts" in the Treasury, of which he, of course, was the leading one.

He denied that Professor Tugwell had been consulted with regard to the plan, but Professor Oliphant had undoubtedly been reading his book wherein he advocated a tax on undistributed earnings as a means of forcing their distribution. The fact that Professor Tugwell was an advocate of the plan should be enough to cause it to be regarded with suspicion.

TAX HAS COMMUNIST SUPPORT

As evidence of the philosophy underlying the plan, I point to the fact that it was strongly advocated before the Ways and Means Committee by an accredited representative of the Communist Party, one Max Bedacht, whose testimony may be found on pages 383 and following of the hearings. Only two other witnesses, outside of Treasury officials, appeared before the committee in support of the proposal. One was a young lawyer just out of school who had some novel ideas of his own about how the tax laws ought to be written, and the other was a Government employee, masquerading as a private citizen, who had been secretly invited to appear by the Treasury Department and whose identity as a Treasury lobbyist was only ascertained after cross-examination.

Not a single witness, aside from these few I have mentioned, appeared before the committee to advocate this revolutionary measure. It was universally opposed by businessmen, strictly on the basis of its unsound and unorthodox philosophy and not because they were averse to paying their fair share of the tax burden. In justice to them it should be said that they even went so far as to say they would be willing to accept a corporation income-tax rate of 25 percent, or approximately double the then existing rate, rather than be subject to the uneconomic and inequitable plan suggested.

MINORITY MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE OPPOSED MEASURE

When the bill was reported to the House, the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, of whom I am proud to be one, filed dissenting views in which we set forth a long list of objections to the measure which were expounded in some detail. A summary of these objections, as set forth in our report, follows:

1. It will discourage and possibly prevent the accumulation of adequate rainy-day reserves and constitutes a direct threat to the security of business, employment, and investments.
2. It will cause corporations to restrict the distribution of their existing tax-paid reserves, which can only be rebuilt under penalty.
3. It will discourage business rehabilitation and expansion and have a retarding effect upon recovery and reemployment.
4. It will hamper the growth of small corporations, impede the development of new enterprises, and foster monopolies.
5. It puts a penalty on prudence and a bounty on improvidence and constitutes an unwholesome interference with the exercise of sound judgment in the management of business.
6. It will accentuate the extremes of future booms and depressions.
7. It will oppress businesses burdened with debts and will result in a restriction on corporate credit.
8. It will drive capital out of productive enterprise into tax-exempt securities.
9. It violates every sound principle of income taxation, is arbitrary and oppressive in its application, and will be unequal and discriminatory in its operation.
10. It will crucify financially weak business enterprises while permitting the strong to minimize or entirely escape the tax.
11. It will create inequities and unfair competitive situations which are far greater and more real than the imaginary ones it purports to correct.
12. It will result in the double taxation of all dividends paid out of reserves, whether accumulated in the past or in the future.
13. It will cause untold confusion and add bewildering complexities, both in the computation and administration of the tax.
14. It abandons an assured revenue of $1,100,000,000 annually for one purely speculative and uncertain, and which promises to be most disappointing in amount, thereby further jeopardizing the Federal revenue.

It now appears that our analysis of the measure was correct. The first year's experience under the law has proven that it is at least as iniquitous, if not more so, than we said it was in our report. Doubtless every Member of the House has received letters from his constituents protesting against this unsound measure. It has been condemned editorially throughout the country, and at least one State legislature—that of Georgia—has unanimously passed a resolution asking for its modification.

TAX CRITICIZED EVEN BY ADMINISTRATION OFFICIALS

It is worth noting that objections to the tax have been raised even by administration officials. Some objections have been directly stated; others by inference. For example, when the measure was pending before the other body, the Honorable Jesse H. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, wrote to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee as follows:

> I have not had time to study the bill carefully, but if substantial concessions could be made that would encourage modernization, new plant construction, and new buildings to replace old ones, new equipment for railroads, and industry of all kinds, including allowances for new debts created for these purposes, the employment situation and business generally would in all probability be greatly helped and society much better served.

The changes suggested by Chairman Jones were not made. Hence, neither the employment situation nor business generally was helped, nor was society better served.

VIEWS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

The Interstate Commerce Commission in their annual report for 1936 expressed their views, with respect to the law, as follows:

> Recently our attention has been called to certain provisions of the Revenue Act of 1936, namely, those imposing a surtax on undistributed profits, and to the effect that these provisions will have upon sinking funds and additions and betterments funds to be set up out of income.
> The revenue act exempts from the surtax amounts paid out or reserved for retiring funded debt, or withheld from stockholders, under written contracts of a certain kind executed prior to May 1, 1936. The exemptions do not apply in such cases if the contract was entered into subsequent to April 30, 1936. This means that the amounts used or irrevocably set aside under contracts entered into after that date last mentioned will be subject to the surtax and that companies that do not so use their income or set up such funds, but distribute all their net income will not be subject to the tax. This also means that those companies which have weak financial structures and should use their income to improve their property, retire funded debt, and build up a liquid surplus against a day of future trouble will, if they undertake to do so, be subject to a penalty, whereas railroad companies with strong financial structures, and able to finance their requirements through the issue of stock may distribute all their income and thus escape the surtax.
> It is our view that railroads with weak financial structures, and those just emerging from receivership or reorganization proceedings under section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act, should be encouraged to use their earnings, to the extent authorized or approved by us, to build up and improve their property, retire their funded debt, and create corporate surpluses in amounts sufficient to meet their emergency needs, support their borrowing powers, and afford insurance against their obsolescence.

The foregoing statement, which the Commission necessarily confines to railroads, is equally applicable to business generally, and the same concessions should be extended. The views of this impartial Commission with respect to this tax constitute a strong indictment against its injudicious and discriminatory application and clearly point to the dangers to which it leads.

VIEWS OF HON. JOSEPH KENNEDY

Hon. Joseph Kennedy, former Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and only recently appointed to a new position of responsibility in the administration, set forth a number of objections to the law in a recent article. He pointed out that corporations which had been able to accumulate a surplus in prosperous times were thereby enabled to continue operations and the payment of dividends during the depression, despite substantial operating deficits. He went on to say that if corporations distribute their earnings, under the coercion of this tax, they will not be adequately prepared to weather any future depression. The tax would therefore have the effect, he said, of accentuating the peaks and depressions of business. Pointing out that the tax penalizes the small and new concern which has not developed sufficiently to accumulate an adequate surplus, he expressed the opinion that the few abuses of the old system of corporate taxation were not sufficient justification for a tax which adversely affects all business. Previously, in a book which he wrote, Mr. Kennedy referred to the measure as a "new and unexpected theory of taxation", which, he said, was "premised upon a fallacious economic principle."

CONGRESSIONAL TAX EXPERT POINTED OUT OBJECTIONS TO TAX

Mr. Speaker, one of the leading authorities in the country on the subject of taxation is our own congressional tax expert, Mr. L. H. Parker, who heads the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. In a report published by that committee in 1927, Mr. Parker had occasion to refer to various proposed methods of taxation, one of which was a tax on undistributed earnings. Here is what he had to say with respect to such a tax:

> The most obvious objection to such a tax is the burden which it places on legitimate and proper business expansion. As a business expands, not only does its plant and property increase but a larger working capital is required, and it is desirable that reasonable accumulations of profits necessary for the expansion and stability of corporations should not be unduly burdened. * * * It is believed that a tax on the total accumulation of profits by corporations is not desirable, because in many cases it might cause the making of unwise distributions and prevent the accumulation of reasonable and proper surplus.

This, of course, is exactly what has happened, just as Mr. Parker predicted. I might say that proposals of one form or another for taxing undistributed corporate earnings have repeatedly been suggested, but in each instance in the past, Congress, after careful and thorough consideration, has rejected each one. These previous proposals, I may add, were very moderate in comparison with the harsh and drastic measure now on the statute books.

TAX INCONSISTENT WITH OTHER ADMINISTRATION OBJECTIVES

Having referred to some of the outstanding objections to this measure, I would like to point out some of the inconsistencies between it and other administration policies. The administration professes to be interested in the suppression of monopoly, but as I have indicated, the undistributed earnings tax breeds monopoly by crushing small business and relieving the tax burden on large business.

The administration professes to be interested in the promotion of fair trade practices, but the undistributed earnings tax operates to give a well-financed business a competitive advantage over its weaker competitor.

The administration professes to be interested in promoting the stability of business, of employment, and of investments, but the undistributed earnings tax, by preventing the accumulation of necessary reserves and by encouraging a loose fiscal policy on the part of corporations, destroys the very foundation of business stability, sustained employment, and the continuity of dividends.

The administration professes to be interested in a revival of construction and the reemployment of idle men, but the undistributed earnings tax, by putting a penalty on earnings plowed back into the business discourages expansion and stifles the growth of new enterprises.

And so it goes. No matter what administration policy one may name, the undistributed earnings tax will be found to operate at cross-purposes with it. This is convincing evidence of its unsoundness, of its undesirability, and of its destructive effect.

TAX FAILS TO ACCOMPLISH ANY OF INTENDED PURPOSES

But before we condemn the tax altogether let us see what it was intended to accomplish. Looking to the President's message of March 3, 1936, we find that it was put forward to "effect great simplification in tax procedure", to prevent tax evasion, and to equalize the tax burden.

As a matter of actual fact, the tax fails to accomplish any of these ends, but on the contrary aggravates the very evils it was intended to correct. Instead of simplifying the tax structure it builds a complicated and complex superstructure upon the old one, which begins where it left off. Moreover, instead of preventing tax evasion it opens up new opportunities for evasion. A former tax adviser to the Government has said on this point:

> It hardly behooves me to suggest methods by which the undistributed profits tax may be avoided by the taxpayer. For years I have participated in the fight to prevent avoidance. But never has the inducement for tax avoidance been so strong. The rewards are substantial within the confines of the law. The avenues are broad and inviting. They will be well traveled.

So far as equalizing the tax burden is concerned, the undistributed earnings tax, as I have shown, merely makes the tax burden more unequal. Not only does the tax discriminate as between different corporate taxpayers, but it soaks the poor corporation and exempts the rich.

REPEAL OF TAX DESIRABLE BUT APPARENTLY IMPOSSIBLE OF ACHIEVEMENT AT THIS TIME

Mr. Speaker, in this analysis of the undistributed earnings tax, I have not attempted to cover all its patent objections and defects. But I believe I have pointed out enough of them to prove conclusively that the tax is unsound and uneconomic and ought to be repealed or radically modified. Personally I would like to see it repealed outright and the corporation income tax increased, if necessary, to make up the revenue. This unwise measure should never have been enacted in the first place, but it is now on the statute books, and the President has given no indication of admitting that he made a mistake in recommending it to Congress, as he did in the case of the graduated income tax on corporations, which was repealed before it ever went into operation.

I am a practical man and believe in facing the facts as I find them. The most that we can apparently hope for is to secure some modification of the law at this session of Congress. We should not hesitate to assume our legislative function under the Constitution and correct the evil effects of this monstrous measure. It is the duty of the House of Representatives to originate revenue bills. We do not have to wait for instructions from the White House.

THE LEAST WE CAN DO IS TO MAKE CERTAIN AMENDMENTS TO THE LAW

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, there are a number of amendments that we must make to this law if we are to preserve the soundness of our business and economic structure, upon which the stability of the whole Government depends. First, provision should be made for the accumulation of reasonable rainy day reserves without penalty. Second, provision must be made so that debtor corporations will not be unjustly penalized for paying their honest debts. Third, corporations with impaired capital structures must be allowed to regain financial stability without incurring heavy penalties. Fourth, a reasonable allowance should be made for the plowing back of corporate earnings for purposes of rehabilitation and expansion. Fifth, a reasonable time should be allowed after the close of the taxable year for corporations to ascertain as nearly as possible their true financial condition and declare dividends accordingly. Doubtless there are a number of other modifications that ought to be made if repeal cannot be obtained.

WHAT ARE WE WAITING FOR?

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign President Roosevelt, in his address at Worcester, Mass., said of the undistributed earnings tax which he had suggested:

> If in its application imperfections are discovered, they must be corrected for the good of American business.

This statement places the President squarely on record as willing to accept modifications in the tax if imperfections are discovered. In these remarks I have pointed out a few of them, and many more are known to exist, even to the Treasury officials.

Since the President has shown a willingness to have the tax modified, and since many compelling reasons exist why this ought to be done, what are we waiting for, Mr. Speaker? Why do we not go ahead and do the job that ought to be done?

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in a letter to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], dated April 8, 1937, has expressed the view that the law ought to be amended "to give some relief to corporations with little or no surplus and those which are heaviest in debt." The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON], according to press accounts, has indicated an interest in easing the burden on debt-ridden corporations and making allowances for plant expansion and improvement. But, in view of the total lack of activity toward these ends, it must be that the so-called impractical experts who sponsored this iniquitous law are more powerful than the whole Democratic organization.

My good friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has offered the excuse that sufficient time has not elapsed "to secure the necessary information with which to proceed wisely in the matter." That is pure bosh. The gentleman did not hesitate to jam this unwise legislation through the House without knowing what it was all about and without regard to the warnings sounded by practical men who foretold the dangers to which it would lead. If the gentleman would call the Ways and Means Committee together for the purpose of holding hearings on this measure we would get plenty of information as to its imperfections, its inequalities, its hardships, and its destructive operation, not only from businessmen and representatives of labor, but from our own staff of experts on the Joint Committee on Taxation.

As a matter of fact, there is a thousand times more information now available as to why this law ought to be repealed or amended than there ever was as to why it should be passed. It is no excuse to say we need further facts. If we wait too long to act irreparable damage may be done.

If the gentleman from North Carolina is waiting for information and facts from the Treasury Department, he might just as well act now, because we all know the kind of facts that will be furnished—they will all be prejudiced in favor of this legislation. The gentlemen who will furnish the alleged facts from the Treasury will be the same group of so-called "experts" who are said to have originated this iniquitous law in the first place. The chief "expert" is that eminent but impractical college professor, Mr. Oliphant. Does this Congress want to act on any more of his wild suggestions? Certainly we have learned our lesson in taking advice from this man. We do not want any more of the prejudiced and academic views of Professor Oliphant or any of these experts who know nothing about the practical workings of business. Let us get our information from those who come in actual contact with the law as applied to their own businesses. That is the only kind of information on which we can legislate with any degree of intelligence and safety.

Mr. Speaker, normally the Ways and Means Committee is one of the hardest-working committees of the House, but we cannot make this claim so far as the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress is concerned. Never in all my 20 years' experience on the committee have I seen such inactivity. Out of over 300 bills and resolutions pending before us, we have acted on only two major bills. In January we reported out the resolution to continue the Trade Agreements Act, and in February we reported out the Vinson-Guffey coal bill. Since that time we have done nothing. Hence there is absolutely no excuse for not taking up the undistributed-profits tax measure. Eventually we must take it up, so why not now? Do not let us put it off until the end of the session, when there will not be adequate opportunity for consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, let me say that I have only touched the high spots in respect of this iniquitous legislation. I wish I had more time to go into more of the details of the measure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Referring to the practical phase of the gentleman's life, does the gentleman think it would be practical to put into a revenue bill, in the form of an amendment, a proviso which would set up a formula saying what reserves different corporations should have?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that is a practical suggestion, but, of course, that has never been given any consideration so far as I know. We were simply told to take this bill from the Treasury and put it on the statute books and let business take care of itself.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will permit another question, at the present time commodity prices of all kinds are advancing. This means a corporation must have more money with which to operate its inventories of raw material, unprocessed goods, as well as finished stocks and even accounts receivable; and while this advance is in process the Government comes along and indicates that measures will be taken to prevent prices on the stock exchange from advancing. If this holds true, then the companies would be unable to finance themselves through the selling of additional stocks.

Mr. TREADWAY. I believe I covered that point in my remarks.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order, the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the addresses this morning by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] I almost feel like asking forgiveness for what I am about to do. However, I cannot let personal admiration for those two gentlemen and for the statesman about whom they addressed the House interfere with what I think should be done. Perhaps I should call on that phrase so often used by Members of the House, that I feel I would be "derelict in my duty" if I did not pursue the course that I have undertaken.

DESTRUCTION OF CHERRY BLOSSOMS

Tens of thousands of men, women, and children from many parts of the country have visited the magnificent Japanese cherry-blossom display around the Tidal Basin in the past few days.

Press and police estimates say that between 250,000 and 450,000 out-of-town visitors jammed Washington streets over the week end. Read an account of the crowds in your own paper.

Every year increasing numbers come here to view this unique monument to international friendship which helps draw this country into closer friendly relations with our great Pacific neighbor—Japan.

The Japanese Ambassador always plays a leading role in this annual celebration. This year Miss Sakiko Saito, the present Envoy's daughter, was queen of the cherry-blossom festival. Some of you probably saw her crowned Saturday evening. The Ambassador and Mrs. Saito gave a large reception after the festival.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these beautiful trees lining the verdant banks of this lovely bit of water in our Capital City constitute a real symbol of friendship between two great nations.

We have hundreds of blossom festivals of all kinds throughout the country. But the one here is the only one I know of that has international importance. This annual festival is of far more than mere local District celebration.

But these thousands of visitors, probably including some from most of the congressional districts represented here today, may have viewed this beautiful symbol of international friendship for the last time.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Does the gentleman contend that these cherry trees cannot be moved?

Mr. SCOTT. I expect to touch upon that subject in a moment.

I must warn this House that this unusual monument is about to be disfigured, marred, probably destroyed. Already Army engineers are at work drilling and boring, seeking bedrock some 100 feet below the earth, on which to erect a pile of marble that is to be called a memorial to Thomas Jefferson.

I am informed only this morning that 500 of the 700 cherry trees, including almost all of the mature ones, must be moved under present plans. Many of these will be destroyed in this transplanting. Can any replacement be effected without long interruption of the blossoming? It is doubtful.

The Japanese are a sensitive people. If their good-will gesture, symbolized by the circle of beautiful trees around the Tidal Basin, is to be brushed aside for a purely national memorial, one can hardly blame them if they feel slighted and aggrieved.

And, gentlemen, the Commission plan calls for dividing that lovely little bay into two or three small lakes and relocating of more than 70 percent of the trees.

BOYLAN'S FOLLY

At the outset I wish to make it clear that I am not casting any personal reflections on the esteemed gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN], whose long-cherished dream of a suitable memorial to one of America's greatest spirits is about to be realized. I do not wish to deny him the fruits of his long labor of love. I agree with him that the Nation has been too long recognizing its obligation.

But just as sincerely do I believe that if the Commission can be forced, in the interests of public policy, to review its choice of site, design, and type of memorial, I may be sparing the gentleman, whom we all love, the anguish in his old age of having people refer to the thing he is about to create as "Boylan's folly."

CHARGES

I do charge, however, that though their motives may have been the highest and their zeal unquestioned, the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, entrusted by Congress with spending $3,000,000 of public funds, has acted in a high-handed, star-chamber manner and evidenced a state of mind that must cause the great spirit of the man they seek to revere many uncomfortable moments in its sepulchre at Monticello.

I charge, furthermore, that the Commission acted arbitrarily in selecting an architect to execute this work of national importance, not even considering a resolution for a national competition that was pending in the House at the time.

I charge that in keeping its proceedings secret and denying access to its records, even to Members of this House, the Commission has not acted in the best interests of its own objective.

Finally, in ignoring the tremendous public opinion that has risen with increasing force to oppose both site and design of the proposed memorial, and in refusing to allow both sides to be heard on this important issue, the Commission has discredited itself and this House.

THE SITE IS BAD

The gentleman from New York tells us that President Roosevelt has given his blessing to the plans of the Commission. Has he told us that the only drawings submitted to the Chief Executive were two designs, differing only in detail, both prepared by the Commission's architectural consultant, John Russell Pope?

After 10 minutes' study the President chose the plan calling for marble columns in a circle instead of marble columns forming a cross.

The President also approved the Tidal Basin site. In this the President appears to have been moved by the argument of all the former planners—that it was the fifth cardinal point in the famous plan of Maj. Charles l'Enfant. With the Capitol, Washington Monument, and Lincoln Memorial forming one line and the White House at the north side of a cross axis drawn through the Monument, the slaves to perfection shout that the only other spot suitable for a major memorial is the south end of this axis, which happens to plop right down in the Tidal Basin.

These same planners, represented in part by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission and its predecessors, such as the McMillian Commission, seem to ignore the fact that when George Washington's friend drew his plans this area was a muddy swamp adjacent to "Foggy Bottom."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for information?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman speaks of the possibility of the Commission answering the demand of public sentiment and reconsidering its findings. I ask the gentleman whether there is not another way to prevent the execution of the plan of the Commission, and that is to refuse to make the appropriation to build the monument where it is suggested?

Mr. SCOTT. That is right, and I thank the gentleman. I shall touch on that later.

Mr. MAPES. Can the Commission obligate the Government to go ahead with this plan now?

Mr. SCOTT. Not without the appropriation.

Mr. MAPES. And the appropriation has not yet been made?

Mr. SCOTT. No. And these same planners, who attach magical significance to the name of l'Enfant, have, incidentally, done much to mar his famous plan, such as smashing Constitution Avenue across it and destroying the original Eighth Street axis.

But I concede, whether a part of l'Enfant's plan or not, this site is a good place for a monument. And, gentlemen, we already have have a monument there in the Japanese cherry trees, a monument enjoyed and appreciated by hundreds of thousands. Even if not a tree were lost in transplantation—an impossibility—erection of a gigantic monument here would—pardon the pun—put the trees in the shade.

The Commission would go into an already completely and beautifully developed area, Potomac Park, and scramble up a lay-out that is a joy and treat every time you drive through there, block off a vista of the stately Lincoln Memorial, and, in fact, set up a competing interest to that distinguished monument.

Practical considerations also place an emphatic veto on this side. When the Potomac Park area was reclaimed, the natural boundaries of the Washington Channel were narrowed and the Tidal Basin was created to help flush this channel—a function vital to the sanitation and efficient operation of Washington's water front.

We have no assurance as yet that the cutting up of this basin as contemplated under the commission plan will not impair this function. Then there is the traffic hazard. If any of you tried to drive by there last Sunday, this needs no further explanation. But the blossoms last only a week.

The main flow of traffic from the South, including thousands of Virginia commuters, moves around the Tidal Basin on its way to lower Fourteenth Street. The north side drive is a main artery by which part of this traffic stems over to Constitution Avenue and Government buildings in that area. A bridge spans the west and east sides. Only on the short south drive would there be parking space—space entirely inadequate for the millions that would be expected to visit any Jefferson memorial.

Contrast this with the Lincoln Memorial, which is off the main lines of traffic, and which has ample parking space around it.

Finally, gentlemen, in making a major addition to Washington's beauty, why does not the Commission undertake to create new values. We have many unpleasant spots in our Capital City to clean up before we can honestly call it one of the most beautiful cities in the world. As the distinguished junior Senator from Utah, who called himself a "minority of one" on the Commission, said, "You can never hope to raise the artistic level of the entire city by concentrating all your efforts in one part."

Senator THOMAS of Utah pleaded that the Commission choose the site right down here at the eastern terminus of East Capitol Street, called the Anacostia site. Here, notwithstanding National Capital Park and Planning Commission and all the other high-hat commissions, is a spot that in time would vie with the Lincoln Memorial in scenic beauty.

A $7,500,000 reclamation and park project on the Anacostia River is approaching completion. The Government already owns a large part of the ground. The Supreme Court, the Library of Congress, and the Folger Shakespeare Library already begin a magnificent march eastward toward what could become a rival to Pennsylvania, Constitution, and other historic thoroughfares.

The planners plan to use this spot for a stadium or an armory or both. I submit these structures may well occupy less imposing locations. The argument that visitors would not see it if "stuck off" there sounds silly.

The imposing National Cathedral is raising its gothic beauty atop Mount St. Alban out on Wisconsin Avenue, but no visitor to Washington thinks of leaving until he has seen it, and also made the 16-mile pilgrimage to Mount Vernon. Does the Commission think the sightseeing concerns would omit any Jefferson memorial from their itinerary? Not for a minute, even if they had to run a cog railroad up some mountainside to reach it.

All the Senate members of the Commission opposed the Tidal Basin site and one member of the Commission made an attempt to get the Commission to take note of the rising tide of criticism and hold public hearings. To that extent, the charges I have made fall less heavily on their shoulders. In the end, the Commission, in its secret sessions, overrode all objections and announced "unanimous" decisions on all phases of its work.

The Anacostia site is proof that there are other locations available. I might mention western Massachusetts Avenue and several sites in Rock Creek Park as others. And it might be pointed out that Mr. BOYLAN for years thought the apex of the Government triangle just west of the Capitol would make an appropriate site.

Supporters of the present plan claim it is fitting that the memorial face the White House and command a view of Jefferson's native State of Virginia. Jefferson's greatness does not rest on his days in the Executive Mansion. In some respects they were among the unhappiest of his life. His epitaph, written by him, tells us what he considered his greatest accomplishments. It reads:

> Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

In his native State, this great university stands as a living memorial to his genius. His carefully restored home, Monticello, near Charlottesville, also honors his memory. The university library, with its famous rotunda and the stately Old Dominion capitol at Richmond, preserve his architectural contributions.

Finally, the question of engineering feasibility has arisen. Engineers are now making borings in the Basin to see how far they must go. The first one went down 93 feet before reaching bedrock. If anything like this foundation depth proves necessary, it will take far more than the authorized $3,000,000 to erect this kind of memorial on this site. It has been estimated already that, under present plans, the total outlay will exceed $5,000,000.

So I submit that the Basin site must be dropped because, first, we already have a wonderful monument there to Japanese-American friendship in the form of the cherry trees now in their full glory, which would be eclipsed if not destroyed by the gigantic marble pile proposed; second, that traffic and parking problems make it unavailable; and third, engineering considerations probably will make the cost prohibitive and may damage the Washington Channel.

THE DESIGN IS BAD

Now, we come to the design of the memorial, against which I wish to lodge several objections.

I have no grudge against John Russell Pope. He has been and is one of the Nation's leading architects. It is possible that in a national competition his design might have been selected above all others, although I do not think so. His "school" has had its heyday and is passing.

Washington is full of the works of Pope and his ilk—so full of them that we have an awful architectural monotony. He designed the Archives Building and the Scottish Rite Temple. He has designed the $10,000,000 Mellon Art Gallery to be built in the Mall. These drawings look very much like those for his proposed Jefferson Memorial. In fact, one of the local newspapers ran them, one under the other, and it was difficult to tell them apart at first glance.

Pope and his contemporaries have created in the Nation's Capital what has been aptly described as a "petrified forest of marble columns." Pope's temple design for the memorial would add another platoon of marble columns to the endless regiments of columns that now ornament our expensive Government structures. So my first objection is that it would only add to the monotony approaching drabness that has been imposed upon us by the same groups that now approve the proposed Jefferson Memorial.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. Does the gentleman have any information with reference to the statement that Mr. Pope, the architect, is to receive 6-percent commission on this monument when the customary rate is 5 percent?

Mr. SCOTT. I shall touch on that later also.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes; but I am short of time.

Mr. RANKIN. There is another consideration that the gentleman apparently has overlooked. That territory was flooded last year by the flood in the Potomac River.

Mr. SCOTT. That is true. There was a hopeful sign in week-end press accounts that the design had not met with full approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

My second objection to Pope's design is its utter lack of originality. That once useful and stately relic of Rome, the Pantheon, has been the "theme song" by which many an architect has drawn his way to fame and fortune. Its very massiveness impresses many unthinking people.

Pope has used the "Pantheon motif" over and over again and now brings forth another exasperating variation on the same theme. Jefferson already has left his tribute to the Pantheon in his Virginia capitol building at Richmond and in the university library. It was a good idea, but has been overworked until it is banal.

It surely did not cost Mr. Pope any great creative effort to nab this $180,000 job. And that would be his minimum fee. If the cost of the memorial construction doubles the $3,000,000 figure, as many experts think it will, Mr. Pope would draw $360,000 at the 6-percent rate set by the Memorial Commission.

All Mr. Pope had to do was pull out of a drawer a picture of one of his previous buildings, say, for example, the Hendricks Chapel at Syracuse University, add a column here and there and presto, a completely hackneyed, unoriginal, and trite design that is to be translated into a memorial to a man who had one of the most liberal, progressive, and versatile minds America has ever produced.

I do not yield even to the beloved gentleman from New York, who was laboring for his ideal long before I came to Congress, in my admiration for the life and philosophy of Thomas Jefferson. This memorial is long overdue. But now that we have decided to pay deserved homage to this outstanding figure, in his own name, let us create something that will reflect his ideals and spirit—not a cold marble mausoleum that imitates one phase of his many-sided genius, his skill in architecture.

We think of Washington and Lincoln as somber, austere heroes. The stately shaft and heroic loneliness of the Lincoln memorial bring us something of their spirit. But Jefferson was a different kind of man.

He was an adventurer, as witnessed by his sticking out his neck to grab the Louisiana Territory while the grabbing was good. His interests were cosmopolitan and varied. He trusted the people far more than did either Washington or Lincoln. His spirit was revolutionary. If a national competition had produced some radical idea in design for a memorial to him, I cannot conceive that Jefferson would object.

Now comes the Commission seeking to embalm that spirit in a tomb which might well cause the ghost of Emperor Hadrian to say, as pictured by a cartoonist recently:

That's my temple; and if you'll pardon me for saying so, I think somebody is nuts for moving it to Washington and putting your name on it. Jefferson, old boy, it isn't a bit like you.

So, gentlemen, I think this design should be scrapped, because it is absolutely unoriginal, is an imitation of something Jefferson himself has done far more effectively, and fails entirely to catch the spirit of the man it seeks to honor.

THE TYPE IS BAD

This leads me to the most fundamental objection of all—the type of memorial selected by the Commission. The gentleman from New York said recently, in dismissing the idea of a "living memorial", that—

Universal experience with utilitarian memorials is that the utilitarian side soon dominates the commemorative, even to the extent of completely effacing it.

I agree that a purely commercial project, such as a stadium, is out of place. But I challenge the accuracy of the gentleman's observation.

Does anyone think the magnificent hospital being built in memory of Will Rogers will ever be known other than the Will Rogers Hospital, or that ceremonies held there annually in his honor will "efface" its commemorative value? Does anyone think that the many churches named for famous religious leaders, the many college buildings, parks, foundations, hospitals, schools, and other "living memorials" have effaced the names of the men and women they honor? Can one seriously contend that their commemorative value is lessened because they are useful?

WHY NOT AN AUDITORIUM?

Another distinguished gentleman from Mr. BOYLAN'S own State of New York, Mr. SOL BLOOM, has given us a vision of a practical, utilitarian memorial to Jefferson that would serve through the years not only to perpetuate his name but actually inculcate the great statesman's ideals of liberty and democracy in the minds of millions yet unborn. I quote from an article in the Washington Daily News of last December 12:

A beautiful memorial hall, illuminated at night, in which conventions, operas, pageants, inaugural balls, and all manner of public gatherings could be held, is the ideal tribute to Thomas Jefferson as envisioned by Representative SOL BLOOM, of New York.

We must design something fitting that would be serviceable and useful, Mr. BLOOM said. To attempt to duplicate or rival another work of art means failure.

He, BLOOM, would have murals depict the outstanding events in Jefferson's career. In 48 memorial rooms or niches each State could make its contribution to a permanent exhibit of Jeffersoniana.

He foresees great events being broadcast from Thomas Jefferson Memorial Hall to millions of radio listeners.

The distinguished Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, also has endorsed an auditorium "dedicated to free speech" as a most fitting Jefferson memorial. And the recent dismal and dangerous inauguration demonstrated the need for such a structure.

We are going to have a national auditorium. The legislation has been passed. I suggest the practical thing to do would be to repeal the Jefferson Memorial Commission Act and then amend the auditorium law to convert that project into a Jefferson memorial.

This is just one suggestion. There were many others. But the all-wise Commission ignored them all, ignored even Members of this House who wished to present their views on a utilitarian memorial. Now we come to the practical question of how to avoid this "monumental" error—pardon the pun again.

LET US NOT APPROPRIATE FOR THIS

The Commission has complete authority to go ahead with the present or any other design without any further action of Congress except one important item—the actual appropriation of the $3,000,000. The Commission also has complete authority to reconsider its decision and let the public be heard on this important public issue, in which a large lump of public funds are to be spent.

The deficiency bill expected in the next few weeks may contain a $500,000 item to begin work on the proposed marble mausoleum. The estimate was submitted by the President only yesterday.

Right now I call upon the Appropriations Committee to withhold this money in view of the high-handed manner in which this Commission has conducted its affairs, and continue to withhold it until the Commission at least considers other viewpoints on this important question.

Failing that, I call upon the House to knock out such an appropriation when it comes to the floor. Then let this Commission consider some other site that will not require destruction of one of the most beautiful spots in our Capital. Then let the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission consider holding a national architects' competition to secure an original design for this great and deserved tribute to a great American. And let this Commission at least hear arguments for translating this design into a "living memorial."

I may appear to be rebelling against something that already is decreed and ready to become a part of the static and hidebound established order of monumental ornamentation of our Capital. But I rest my protest on Jefferson's own words:

I hold it that a little rebellion now and then is a good thing and as necessary in the political worlds as storms are in the physical.

Gentlemen, let us stop this thing while there is yet time. Let us rescue the beloved gentleman from New York from his own folly. Let us give the Nation that kind of a memorial that in its form and use will hand down from generation to generation the torch of liberty and freedom of conscience that Jefferson exemplified in his own life and works. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein in the Appendix excerpts from certain letters that I have received in connection with this same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN (reading):

I should like to have it said of my first administration that in it the forces of selfishness and of lust for power met their match. I should like to have it said of my second administration that in it these forces met their master.

These words of the President, spoken at Madison Square Garden on November 1, 1936, were a mild and restrained statement of what he had accomplished during his first administration; they are now a fulfilled prophesy of an achievement of his second administration.

Assuredly, he did not refer to the Congress, for he became master of this body shortly after his inauguration in 1933.

It was commonly accepted that those to whom he referred by the use of the words "the forces of selfishness and of lust for power", were the industrialists of this country, those who conducted big business.

Presumably, by the term "master", he meant himself or others of his administration.

No doubt much to his surprise his policies, although carefully conceived and adroitly administered, have placed others in the position of masters of the economic and business world.

Whether with intent or unwittingly, the President has created a situation which has enabled certain labor leaders to assume a position where they add to unemployment, presume to fix wages, retard recovery, and delay prosperity, to become persons of special privilege. Who is the master his policies have established? It is the gentleman who probably, if he lives that long, in 1940, will be a rival candidate of the President for the Presidency of the United States. I refer to the Honorable John L. Lewis, who today exercises more power over industry than does the President himself.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I decline to yield.

There is no question but that the Wagner Act and the support of the administration given to labor enabled John L. Lewis to drive into his organization, the C. I. O., many, many men who otherwise would not be there. The letters which I have received from Flint, from Detroit, and from other points in Michigan, as well as from other places throughout the country, indicate that were it not for the acts of the C. I. O.—and I mean acts of violence and intimidation—and the approval given to these acts of violence by the President's silence and Governor Murphy's activity, the membership of that body would not today be what it is. We all know that Lewis collected almost untold sums of money from the United Mine Workers. We know that he used, as he had a right to use—and with that procedure no one finds any fault, as far as I know—a portion of that money, hundreds of thousands of dollars of it, for the reelection of the President. We all know that the day after the President took the oath of office John Lewis demanded payment of the political debt which he considered the President owed to him. Having served notice of this demand for payment, to enforce payment of that demand, sit-down strikes, which had been called in anticipation of it, were continued. We all know that the President, through Madam Perkins and through the Governor of Michigan, by preventing action of the law-enforcing agencies which would have protected the property of the men of Flint who owned the factories, which would have protected those men who wanted to work in their jobs, paid that debt, in part, at least.

What was the excuse for those strikes? We know that there was no question of wages, of hours, of working conditions. Then what was the issue, and what was the issue after the Flint strike was settled in the Chrysler plant, and what is the issue today in Canada?

About what are they fighting? Not wages, not hours, not working conditions. Then, what is it? Whether John Lewis and his C. I. O. should be acknowledged as the sole bargaining power for labor. That is the issue, and there is no question about that. That is the statement of C. I. O. organizers. Why do they demand that? Because these "masters of labor" lust for power. The letters which I have received from the workers indicate that since the agreements with General Motors and others were made, after the 8-hour day was established, the workers themselves are complaining because they are not permitted to work overtime so that they may earn more money. The workers themselves are attempting to speed up production so that they may earn more money. So it was not the speed-up system. It was not the rate of wages per hour. It was, as said a moment ago, the demand of Lewis that he be recognized—as the duly elected head of a union? No. Because he is not elected by the membership. He established himself as head of the auto workers. He wants the authority. Authority to do what? Men sell coal. Men sell steel. Men sell rubber and fabrics for the automobile industry. Lewis wants, and he has obtained by violence, not the right but the power to sell labor.

Ostensibly these strikes were called to aid labor. Actually they were called to establish the supremacy of Lewis and his lieutenants; to demonstrate to the individual workingman that Lewis could give employment, that he could withhold it; to demonstrate to the factory owner that only through Lewis or his organization could the labor necessary to operate industry be obtained.

Cannot the workingman see far enough into the future to realize that in the days to come, if the C. I. O. is successful, either the Government will operate all factories or Lewis will sell labor to the bargaining agent of the factory, as the mine owner, the smelter, sells coal and steel?

Once firmly established as the dictator of labor, Lewis, through his check-off, will collect millions of dollars each month—dollars which, as he said, are stained with sweat—and then having absolute authority, and the workers will have no choice, he will sell labor as a commodity is sold.

Visualize for just one moment the situation. Lewis, by means of a threatened or an actual strike, forces Knudsen, Sloan, Chrysler, or Ford to negotiate. Is there any assurance that he will not demand from these actual employers of labor his (Lewis) commission, his (Lewis) fee for a settlement of the strike, for the execution of a favorable bargain, for the return of the men to work? Absolute power in the hands of any man spells potential danger.

The President, as has been stated, paid the political debt to Lewis by remaining silent while laws were violated, while violence and anarchy reigned in the State of Michigan and elsewhere throughout the Nation, except as it was controlled by courageous governors and law-enforcement officials.

Do not forget that, during all this time, while C. I. O. membership was in the minority in Flint factories, no demand was made for the enforcement of the Wagner labor law. Do not forget that the President's personal friends, one a Cabinet officer, Perkins; the other the man selected by him to be Governor of a great State, ignored the Wagner law and openly, persistently, and actively backed Lewis in his unlawful program.

By means of this Presidential support and this active assistance rendered by the President's friends and supporters, Lewis was enabled to establish himself as the bargaining agent for labor in the motor industry.

What has been accomplished? There has, throughout the country, been an increase, among certain classes, in the rate of pay. There will undoubtedly be other increases. Some of this, but not all, can be credited to Lewis' activities.

Be that as it may. The increase in wage has been added to the cost of production and the consuming public, of whom the laboring man constitutes a major part, will pay a large part of the cost of the wage increase. Everything the laboring man eats, wears, and uses bears a portion of the cost of the increase of his wages.

There is another cost which is too often ignored. Millions upon millions of dollars were lost in wages, in profits, which would otherwise have been paid; in lost production, none of which can ever be recovered.

The increase in wages was so slight that it will require several years before the direct losses to some of the individual workers can be recouped.

As stated, one of the achievements of these strikes was to establish the supremacy over labor of Lewis, Martin, Frankensteen, Mortimer, Reuther, Kraus, and Thompson.

As a result of these activities, today workers in the factory, instead of being dependent upon factory owners and factory operators for employment, are dependent upon these labor bosses, none of whom, so far as the record shows, ever created employment, ever gave jobs in productive or merchandising industries.

Whatever may have been said of the factory owner, he had at least a mercenary interest in the worker. Self-interest, selfishness and greed, if you choose, forced him to see that the worker had at least enough to eat, enough to wear, to provide conditions which kept him in physical condition, so that he might aid in production.

These labor dictators lack even this self-interest. Their concern, as demonstrated by the record, consists largely in the collection of dues, in the establishing of themselves in positions of authority.

And what manner of men are they? Note the utterances since they have come to this new-found authority, since they have been established as masters over labor, over industry. Listen again—you have heard and read it often—to this statement of Frankensteen made about Henry Ford:

> Henry will either recognize the union or he won't build automobiles.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a question.

Mr. BOILEAU. My question is this: The gentleman is criticizing these men for making statements that are contrary to law. Is it not also contrary to law for Mr. Ford to make the statement that he will never recognize a union?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I will answer the gentleman. With the law now upheld by the Supreme Court, certainly it would be contrary to law for Mr. Ford to adhere to that settlement, and Mr. Ford being the kind of man he is, being a law-abiding man, being the man who first established a minimum wage, who first said that $5 was a minimum wage for common labor in factories, undoubtedly Mr. Ford having learned what the Supreme Court has said will say that he will recognize a union. And God grant that when that time comes and he must recognize a union, that it will be a union of workers and not a union of C. I. O. [Applause.]

No one has any objection to a union if the members of the union elect the officers thereof. What reasonable men object to is the imposition of a leadership upon the membership of a union.

Many thinking people hope and pray that Ford workers have the intelligence and the foresight to establish a union of their own, and to deal directly with Ford, rather than through the medium of self-constituted leaders.

If the Ford workers do this, doubtless all will be harmony. If they yield to Lewis and his lieutenants, Ford can either submit or he can abandon his industry. He and his children and his grandchildren can live in comfort and in luxury on the proceeds of the property which they now own. And if this result be brought about, if he closes his factories, how many jobs will the C. I. O. leaders provide for the workers so thrown out of employment?

Go one step farther and listen to these statements.

Thompson said on April 9:

> The American union has told General Motors there that as soon as you send one car across the line to Canada to help break the Oshawa strike, you'll never make another car in the United States.

He also declared:

> Not a car will be built in any General Motors plant in the United States if an attempt is made to break this (Oshawa) strike.

Thompson also warned General Motors that it must recognize the U. A. W. A. and "sign an agreement before it builds another motor car in Canada."

The utterances of these men prove beyond question that they are more interested in being recognized as representatives of the Canadian workers, as well as masters of United States workers, of being the ones through whom negotiations shall be conducted, than they are in the substance of the agreements made between the employee and the employer. Benefits to the workers, under their theory, must come through them or come not at all. A more arbitrary, un-American proposition can hardly be stated.

Masters, Mr. President? Perhaps it was your idea that you, as Chief Executive, or the officers of the Government, would be the masters. As a matter of fact, you have created new masters, who now state that the motor industry shall not exist in the United States unless the union reigns supreme in the Dominion of Canada.

With all of the unemployment—and we are now told that some 9,000,000 are out of jobs—with Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, demanding immediate employment of 3,000,000 unemployed, the creature which you have created, the men whom you have raised to power, have recently, without a word of protest from you, Mr. President, increased this unemployment, retarded recovery, violated the law of the land, and ignored all legal restrictions. Your policies have created a monster which you are either unable to or will not control.

With two premiers of Provinces of Canada bending every effort to make it possible for those who desire to work to work in peace, in order that American industries may be induced to emigrate to Canada, it is well that American labor exercise restraint in its demands, so that our factory owners and operators be not forced to abandon as unprofitable their vast humming factories which now give employment to so many.

Listen to this statement from the New York Times of April 13:

> Premier Hepburn, of Ontario, told this reporter 2 weeks ago that his chief motive in opposing the entry of C. I. O. organizers into Ontario was to make labor conditions so peaceful in his Province that they would persuade sorely harassed American industries to emigrate.

To the gentlemen of the South, where capital is being invested, where industries are being developed, where prosperity is being created by industrialists, I say, take note and act before the cause of this new danger goes beyond all control.

Many have sat idly by, sympathizing with our troubles in the North, but refusing to lend aid to solve them. When similar trouble comes to you, you will not find us backward in giving assistance.

To those who are solicitous about the welfare of labor, let me point to the self-evident truth that there can be no jobs, there can be no wages, except as they are created and supplied by capital combined with executive ability.

Let me call your attention to the fact that industry must live; it must make a profit in order to exist; that if it does not exist, labor will have nothing except the land from which to draw its subsistence.

And who is there now working in the factory at from 50 to 90 cents—yes, at a dollar—an hour who wishes to exchange his hours of employment, his working conditions, and wages for the wage earned by the average farm hand, or, for that matter, by the farmer himself?

Who is there in the factory who will change his hours of employment for a day which reaches from sunup to sundown, where man works—not in a clean, sanitary factory, but following a plow or a harrow through the dust and the dirt of a field, or behind the blower of a threshing machine, or in the mow of a barn, or up to his ankles in filth in the barnyard loading and drawing out fertilizer in the springtime?

John L. Lewis may have been a workingman; I doubt that he ever was a farmer. Had he been, he would have known that in order to milk the cow you must give her food, permit her to live. Not only that, but, if the milk is to be large in quantity and rich in cream, she must be well fed, well kept.

If he knows of some way to extract an ever-increasing wage with a shorter hour from industry without permitting it to lay up a surplus for the future or a profit for the owner, he has discovered something heretofore unknown to man.

What does the C. I. O. propose to do with industry? Does it intend to continue, through the activities of men who know nothing about business—a Lewis, a Mortimer, a Martin, a Frankensteen, a Thompson—to fix wages and hours? Continue to prevent the piling up of surpluses; to prevent the owner making a profit?

If they do, then not only Ford but these other men who either own or operate factories can either turn the management of their plants, of their business, over to the C. I. O., to Lewis, to Frankensteen, to Mortimer, to Martin, to Kraus, to Reuther—three of whom have by their own organization, because their activities were destructive in their tendency, been ordered out of the Detroit area—and let them operate the factories and give employment to the members of the union.

Who, then, will meet the pay rolls? How many jobs have ever been created, how many pay rolls have ever been met, by any of these men who now talk so loudly and so persistently about the rights of the workingman?

The Wagner Act is good so far as it goes. It is vicious in its shortcomings. If it creates the arbitrary power, under guise of collective bargaining, to hire and to fire, then it has destroyed the authority of industry to insist upon efficiency, upon production, in return for a living wage.

That law should therefore be amended. For that purpose I have introduced a bill requiring labor organizations to register, requiring that their officers be elected by the vote of the members, and requiring the making and the filing of financial statements showing the sources from and the places to which financial dues are collected and disbursed.

Fair-minded men realize that labor, as it seeks and obtains authority, in and over industry, must also submit to responsibility. That is the purpose of the bill I have offered.

While giving to labor the right of collective bargaining, which very, very few deny, while granting to it a fair wage under an American standard of living, I would insure that industry shall not be destroyed. I ask labor to review the history of the past and to decide whether, on the whole, jobs have been created, wages have been paid, homes have been built, automobiles, radios, and those things which in days gone by were considered luxuries, have been purchased because of the activities of labor agitators and radicals, or whether these things have been the result of the foresight, the industry, the thrift, and the employment of capital, of American individualists.

Add up the wages, figure the number of homes, the sum total of the luxuries of life, which the working man has purchased out of the wages paid him by those now so roundly denounced, and compare the result with that which has been given by organizers.

Organizers, no doubt, have their purpose, but there are, within their ranks, those who would unjustly and excessively profit out of the earnings of the workers, just as there are others of like ilk within the ranks of the employers.

Add to the Wagner Act provisions which will prevent the destruction of industry; protect the laboring man not only from his employer but from the professional organizer.

Complete the legislative program begun by the Wagner Act and complete it by giving to industry the same right, that is, the right to a living profit that is given to the laborer—legislation which will permit—yes, which will require—labor and industry to live in peace and which will prevent strife between them—strife which is destructive, not only to both labor and to industry but to those who must live with them in this land where industry has paved the way for labor to seek and to attain a greater measure of the good things of earth.

[Here the gavel fell.]

There was no objection.

ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1507) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1507, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the resolution adopted yesterday, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] is recognized for 3 hours, and under the designation by the Speaker the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 3 hours.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

H. R. 1507

A bill to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act the phrase "mob or riotous assemblage", when used in this act, shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert without authority of law to kill or injure any person in the custody of any peace officer with the purpose or consequence of depriving such person of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, and to the end that the protection guaranteed to persons within the jurisdictions of the several States, or to citizens of the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, may be secured, the provisions of this act are enacted.

SEC. 3. (a) Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof having any such individual in his custody, who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual from being so injured or being put to death, or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty of apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person participating in such mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of such State all persons so participating, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof, acting as such officer or employee under authority of State law, having in his custody or control a prisoner, who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person who is a member of a mob or riotous assemblage to injure or put such prisoner to death without authority of law, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer such prisoner to be taken or obtained from his custody or control to be injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine, or confederate with such officer or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment of not less than 5 years or not more than 25 years.

SEC. 4. The district court of the United States judicial district wherein the person is injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall have jurisdiction to try and to punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the injury is inflicted or the homicide is committed, any and all persons who participate therein: Provided, That it is first made to appear to such court (1) that the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending, prosecuting, and punishing such offenders under the laws of the State shall have failed, neglected, or refused to apprehend, prosecute, or punish such offenders; or (2) that the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offense are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty of the offense will not be punished in such State court. A failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict the person guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall be sufficient to constitute prima-facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal described in the above proviso.

SEC. 5. Any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representatives of such person for a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages, which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county in the United States district court of the judicial district wherein such person is put to the injury or death. Such action shall be brought and prosecuted by the United States district attorney of the district in the United States district court for such district. If such amount awarded be not paid upon recovery of a judgment therefor, such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof by levy of execution upon any property of the county, or may otherwise compel payment thereof by mandamus or other appropriate process; and any officer of such county or other person who disobeys or fails to comply with any lawful order of the court in the premises shall be liable to punishment as for contempt and to any other penalty provided by law therefor. The amount recovered shall be exempt from all claims by creditors of the deceased. The amount recovered upon such judgment shall be paid to the injured person, or where death resulted, distributed in accordance with the laws governing the distribution of an interstate decedent's assets then in effect in the State wherein such death occurred.

SEC. 6. In the event that any person so put to death shall have been transported by such mob or riotous assemblage from one county to another county during the time intervening between his seizure and putting to death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the forfeiture herein provided. Any district judge of the United States district court of the judicial district wherein any suit or prosecution is instituted under the provisions of this act, may by order direct that such suit or prosecution be tried in any place in such district as he may designate in such order.

SEC. 7. If any provision, sentence, or clause of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this act and the application of such provision to other person or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, of the time allowed the proponents of this bill, I have yielded 1 hour to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER], to be yielded as he may see fit.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half hour.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important piece of legislation. I personally do not wish to be discourteous, but it is very seldom that I take this floor, and on the occasions I do I desire to express my thoughts in sequence and with logical relation one to the other; so I shall therefore refuse to yield to anyone during the 30 minutes I expect to consume.

Yesterday during the debate on the adoption of this resolution the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] had this to say:

> I agree with him absolutely—
> The "him" being myself—
> and point to the activity in behalf of this bill as proof of that assertion. For he is just as certainly leading a mob and doing mob violence to every principle of constitutional right and justice and honor as anyone who ever participated in the mob murder of a human being in the wilds of darkest New York or elsewhere.

As a native of New York I respectfully take exception to that remark. I realize that some of us at times like to use a pretty metaphor. As used by the gentleman from Alabama, it is an unsound metaphor. As a native of New York, I know of no dark places there. I was born and reared in that great city and am very proud of it. My only hope and ambition is that as a native son of New York I may be loyal and true to her traditions and that my activities in this House may be worthy of the illustrious sons of New York who were my predecessors here. [Applause.]

Referring to the remark of "leading a mob", if you know anything whatever of history, you know that that epithet has "in history" been flung against history's greatest personalities; with all due religious respect, it is the very epithet that was flung into the face of the Savior of mankind, the gentle man of Nazareth. It is the same epithet that was flung by the Bourbons of France against those who wished justice and equality there. In our own native land, it is the same epithet that was hurled against the great Washington by the Tories of old. It is the same epithet that was hurled at Jefferson when they called him the greatest demagogue of his time.

I say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], "I thank you for the company in which you place me."

The principle on which an antimob or antilynch bill is predicated was well and ably expressed the other day in this House by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], and I can as a lawyer—I hope a fairly able lawyer, one who in the battles of the legal arena has won and lost cases—rest my case upon the principle enunciated by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] as set forth in the RECORD of April 8.

This is what he said:

> Mr. Speaker, this resolution rests upon the assumption that the sit-down strike, which involves the holding of other people's property without their consent and against their will, is unlawful.

I say that the principle of lynching is unlawful.

The gentleman continues:

> But, aside from all this, a moral responsibility rests somewhere and upon somebody to speak up and condemn this form of lawlessness that threatens the peace and security of the Nation, and it might as well be here and upon this body as any other.
> This talk about being against the resolution because of a lack of power in the Congress to legislate with respect to the evil is a mere pretense of concern in the maintenance of State rights.

With that I thoroughly agree. The hullabaloo of "States rights" against H. R. 1507 is exactly described by the gentleman from Georgia in his reference to the sit-down strikes.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] continued further:

> Mr. Speaker, the resolution presents an opportunity to the membership of this House to stand up and be counted either on the side of law and order or on the side of a government by lawless mobs.

With that statement, Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree, and I use it as a sound argument and a valid reason for the passage of this legislation.

Much has been said about the constitutionality—or, rather, taking it in a negative sense, the unconstitutionality—of this bill. I ask any good lawyer to tell me what type of legislation passed by this Congress is constitutional beyond the peradventure of a doubt today, in view of the fact that you have four members of the Supreme Court of the United States charging four other members with voting according to their predilections and not the law in holding acts of Congress unconstitutional.

In view of this state of affairs I say to any honest lawyer, How can you dare stand here and proclaim ex cathedra, if you will, that this bill is unconstitutional?

Furthermore, the distinguished leader of our party, the President of the United States, in a letter to the chairman of a subcommittee considering a bill in the previous Congress, urged the chairman and the members of that committee not to allow any doubts as to the unconstitutionality of the then pending legislation, no matter how reasonable, to deter them from voting out that bill and passing it.

Further, in view of the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States handed down yesterday in the five cases involving the constitutionality of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, four of the cases being decided by 5-to-4 decisions, I ask any honest lawyer who has not a preconceived notion or a preconceived prejudice against this bill, how can you say the bill is unconstitutional?

Let me cite also the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States reversing its decision of 15 years ago in a case involving maximum hours and minimum wages for women and children in industry. In one week the Supreme Court held the New York State act unconstitutional, and in the next breath held the Washington State law constitutional. Tweedledee and tweedledum; that is the answer.

Let us now consider the constitutionality of the pending bill. The advocacy of passage by Congress of so-called antilynching or antimob legislation is predicated on the principle that in localities where lynching takes place law and order break down, and that because of State inaction the Federal Government has the power to protect itself against the consequences of the break-down of due process of law and the failure of the State to assert its power to effectuate the guaranty of equal protection of the laws.

The phrase in section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution which particularly pertains to the subject matter of the pending bill is:

> Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 5 of the fourteenth amendment—and this refers to our part as a functioning lawmaking body—provides:

> The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

This is not the tribunal, Mr. Chairman, wherein the laws of this great Nation are declared unconstitutional. In the last Congress I wrote a treatise on that very point, and showed that such power undoubtedly resides in the Supreme Court of the United States, which is the tribunal for the declaration of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of any law. This is the legislative branch.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I refuse to yield. I am sorry, but I made the statement that I refuse to yield. This is the legislative branch and not the judicial branch of the Government. It is the function of the judiciary, not ours, to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional.

The advocates for passage of antilynching legislation contend that these sections of the Constitution deserve a liberal interpretation in favor of the rights they were designed to protect; and that though the precise words of the amendment are prohibitory, they imply, and by implication confer, positive immunities and rights which cannot lawfully be invaded by the prohibited acts.

The Supreme Court of the United States in Strauder against West Virginia, One Hundredth United States Reports, page 303, at page 307, said:

> The words of the amendment (fourteenth amendment), it is true, are prohibitory, but they contain the necessary implication of a positive immunity, or right, most valuable to the colored race—the right to exemption from unfriendly legislation against them distinctly as colored—exemption from legal discriminations, implying inferiority in civil society, lessening the security of their enjoyment of the rights which others enjoy, and discriminations which are steps toward reducing them to the condition of a subject race.

By implication, as well as by the express mandate of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, Congress has not only the power but the duty to protect the rights conferred or guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, either by express declaration or by implication.

The Supreme Court has uniformly held that the National Government has the power, whether expressly given or not, to secure and protect the rights conferred and guaranteed by the Constitution (Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303).

Congress, in the absence of a positive delegation of powers to the State legislatures, may, by its own legislation, enforce and protect any rights derived from or created by the National Constitution.

In Prigg against Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Sixteenth Peters, page 539, Mr. Justice Story said:

> That a clause in the Constitution conferring a right should not be so construed as to make it shadowy, or unsubstantial, or leave the citizen without a remedial power adequate for its protection, when another construction equally accordant with the words and the sense in which they were used would enforce and protect the right granted.

Congress is not restricted to legislation for the execution of its expressly granted powers; but, for the protection of rights guaranteed by the Constitution, may employ such means, not prohibited, as are necessary and proper, or such as are appropriate, to attain the ends proposed.

In United States v. Reese (92 U. S. 214), Chief Justice White, at page 217, said:

> Rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and the manner of the protection may be such as Congress in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion shall provide. These may be varied to meet the necessities of the particular right to be protected.

The protection which the Constitution throws around the rights it guarantees is a protection not only against their violations by a State but is an equal protection against individuals acting in any official capacity derived, directly or indirectly, from the State.

> A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it (Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S.).

In Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278), the Supreme Court, through Mr. Chief Justice White, said (p. 286):

> The provisions of the amendment as conclusively fixed by previous decisions are generic in their terms, are addressed, of course, to the States, but also to every person, whether natural or judicial, who is the repository of State power. By this construction the reach of the amendment is shown to be coextensive with any exercise by a State of power, in whatever form exerted.

In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) it was said (p. 318):

> It is doubtless true that a State may act through different agencies, either by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities; and the prohibitions of the amendment extend to all action of the State denying equal protection of the laws, whether it be action by one of these agencies or by another. Congress, by virtue of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right—that is, enforce its recognition—by removing the case from a State court, in which it is denied, into a Federal court, where it will be acknowledged.

In Raymond v. Traction Co. (207 U. S. 20) the Supreme Court said (p. 36):

> The provisions of the fourteenth amendment are not confined to the action of the State through its legislature or through the executive or judicial authority. Those provisions relate to and cover all the instrumentalities by which the State acts, and so it has been held that whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of any right protected by the amendment against deprivation by the State violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name of the State and for the State, and is clothed with the State's powers, his act is that of the State.

Likewise, the provisions and prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment are binding and apply equally to local officers, i. e., of counties or local subdivisions of government (Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356).

The provisions of the fourteenth amendment apply to mere matters of administration by local officials, even though the municipal or State law under which they act contains, in itself, no arbitrary discrimination and no denial of due process or equal protection of the laws.

In Tarrance v. Florida (188 U. S. 519), Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the Supreme Court, said (p. 520):

> The contention of plaintiffs in error is that they were denied the equal protection of the laws by reason of an actual discrimination against their race. The law of the State is not challenged, but its administration is complained of * * *.
> Such an actual discrimination is as potential in creating a denial of equality of rights as a discrimination made by law.

Again, in Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356), an ordinance of the city of San Francisco which made it unlawful to maintain laundries without first having obtained the consent of the board of supervisors was so administered that Chinamen were denied the right to maintain laundries solely because of their race and nationality. In holding that this administration of the ordinance was violative of the fourteenth amendment the Supreme Court said (p. 373):

> The facts shown establish an administration directed so exclusively against a particular class of persons as to warrant and require the conclusion that whatever may have been the intent of the ordinances as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the State itself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the State of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners, as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution. This principle of interpretation has been sanctioned by this Court in Henderson v. Mayor of New York (92 U. S. 259), Chy Lung v. Freeman (92 U. S. 725), Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), Neal v. Delaware (103 U. S. 370), and Soon Hing v. Crowley (113 U. S. 703) * * *.
> The fact of this discrimination is admitted. No reason for it is shown, and the conclusion cannot be resisted that no reason for it exists except hostility to the race and nationality to which the petitioners belong, and which, in the eye of the law, is not justified. The discrimination is, therefore, illegal and the public administration which enforces it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws and a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. The imprisonment of the petitioners is, therefore, illegal and they must be discharged.

The Supreme Court has consistently sustained the principle that even when a State officer acts without authority of the State or its subdivisions in enforcing an arbitrary discrimination or denial of the equal protection of the laws, his conduct is embraced by the fourteenth amendment and can be dealt with accordingly.

In Neal v. Delaware (103 U. S. 370) it was held that the exclusion, because of their race and color, of citizens of African descent from the grand jury that found, and from the petit jury that was summoned to try, the indictment, if made by the jury commissioners, without authority derived from the constitution and laws of the State, was a violation of the prisoner's rights under the fourteenth amendment, and his motions to quash the indictment and the panels of jurors should have been sustained. The Court, quoting from its earlier opinion in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), said (p. 397):

> The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are executed, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty without the due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition.

In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) the State officer charged with the duty of selecting prospective jurors directly violated the State law prohibiting racial discrimination. The Supreme Court, while acknowledging that the officer had thereby made himself punishable at the instance of the State, went on to say that nevertheless "his act was the act of the State and was prohibited by the constitutional amendment" (p. 321).

A striking illustration of this principle occurs in Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278). There the State constitution of California contained guaranties of due process and equal protection of the laws, identical with those in the fourteenth amendment. Certain municipal officers, in their administration of a local ordinance, were guilty of arbitrary discrimination. Notwithstanding that their acts violated the constitution of their own State, the Supreme Court held that their action could be nullified and corrected through the Federal courts, acting under the fourteenth amendment, without waiting for a State court to declare that their acts also violated the State constitution. The Supreme Court declared that inasmuch as local officers were acting or purporting to act "by virtue of public position" their conduct was embraced by the fourteenth amendment. The Court took occasion, in effect, to overrule (p. 294) its earlier decision in the case of Barney v. City of New York (193 U. S. 430) that where the local officer's act was forbidden by State statute it could not be said to be the act of the State within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment. The Supreme Court, speaking by Chief Justice White, expressly rejected the proposition that "the terms of the fourteenth amendment reached only the acts done by State officers which are within the scope of the power conferred by the State" and said that on the contrary (p. 287):

> The settled construction of the amendment is that it presupposes the possibility of an abuse by a State officer or representative of the powers possessed and deals with such a contingency. It provides, therefore, for a case where one who is in possession of State power uses that power to the doing of the wrongs which the amendment forbids, even although the consummation of the wrong may not be within the powers possessed, if the commission of the wrong itself is rendered possible or is efficiently aided by the State authority lodged in the wrongdoer. That is to say, the theory of the amendment is that where an officer or other representative of a State in the exercise of the authority with which he is clothed misuses the power possessed to do a wrong forbidden by the amendment, inquiry concerning whether the State has authorized the wrong is irrelevant, and the Federal judicial power is competent to afford redress for the wrong by dealing with the officer and the result for his exertion of power.

So, likewise, in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339) it was urged that Judge Coles, who had kept men off the jury for no other reason than that they were colored, was not acting on behalf of the State but was acting against the State, and, therefore, his act was not that of the State. The Supreme Court held otherwise, ruling that his action was not a private act but one made in the course of official conduct and by virtue of his public position.

Denial of due process, or the equal protection, of the laws may be accomplished by nonaction quite as well as by action.

A public official may, by negation, violate the constitutional safeguards against discrimination and the guaranty of due process.

Hence, inaction or nonaction of a State officer is reached by the provisions of the fourteenth amendment as much so as if he acted positively and directly. Indeed, the nonaction of an officer is as much the act of the State as the direct and positive act of the officer and may be reached under the fourteenth amendment by appropriate legislation by Congress. Otherwise the fourteenth amendment may be nullified in any State by wholesale nonaction of the State or local officers.

This bill is expressly limited by its own definitions to official action or nonaction resulting in the denial of due process or the equal protection of the laws. It applies only to persons injured or killed through mob violence on account of race, creed, or color, or with the purpose or consequence of depriving the victim of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws where such person was suspected, accused, or convicted of any crime or offense or in the custody of any peace officer.

In other words, this bill does not seek to reach all cases of assault or murder through violence or all cases in which human rights have been denied or destroyed by public anarchy. It in no sense attempts to set up a Federal criminal code in the several States or to give to the Federal Government a regulatory, supervisory, or concomitant power in connection with the administration of the criminal laws of the State. It deals only with those instances where the personal rights guaranteed to all American citizens by the fourteenth amendment have been invaded by mob violence with the active concurrence or through the nonaction of State or local officers, or where such rights cannot, by reason of local conditions, be properly vindicated in the local courts.

The fourteenth amendment not only prohibits certain action or nonaction by the several States through local officers but also, by necessary implication, confers upon every American citizen and guarantees certain rights which the Congress may protect by all appropriate means in the exercise of plenary police power.

In a proper sphere, Congress possesses a Federal police power quite as complete as any police power possessed by the States.

In Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 308), speaking expressly of the power of Congress over interstate transportation, the Supreme Court said (p. 323):

> The power is complete in itself and Congress, as an incident to it, may adopt not only means necessary but convenient to its exercise and the means may have the quality of police regulations.

In Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat.) Chief Justice Marshall said (p. 202):

> It is obvious that the Government of the Union in the exercise of its express powers * * * may use means that may also be employed by a State in the exercise of its acknowledged powers.

In Hamilton v. Kentucky Distillers Co. (251 U. S. 146) the Supreme Court said:

> When the United States asserts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, no valid objection can be based upon the fact that such exercise may be attended by the same incidents which attend the exercise by a State of its police power, or that it may tend to accomplish a similar purpose.

THE RECIPROCAL DUTY OF THE STATES UNDER THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT SUSTAINS THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

The fourteenth amendment is as much the law of the separate States as it is of the United States. The individual rights which it confers upon American citizens and guarantees are rights existing under the law of the land and hence are rights entitled to recognition and protection by the law and jurisprudence of the several States.

By ratifying the fourteenth amendment the several States have bound themselves to perform and discharge the duty of affording to all persons within their respective boundaries the equal protection of the laws, and the Federal Government has guaranteed this performance. The duty to perform is a positive, affirmative duty of equal protection.

Wherever this duty is not performed, regardless of the excuse, there is a breach by the State of the contract, and the obligation falls on the guarantor, the Federal Government, to assure performance and to redress whatever wrongs have been suffered by reason of the breach of the guaranty. In the case of private corporations, it is well settled that where an obligation rests upon such corporation as a positive duty in favor of third persons the failure of an officer or agent to discharge that duty is actionable, even though the failure may have been merely an incident of wrongful conduct on the part of the officer or agent for which the corporation is in no way responsible as a principal. In other words, the rule is well established that where misconduct or nonaction of an agent causes a breach of the obligation or contract of a principal there the principal will be liable in an action, whether such misconduct or nonaction be willful, malicious, or merely negligent; and the form of the action, though undeniably in tort, is treated virtually as an action in contract and governed by the same rule of damages.

The analogy seems obvious. If State or local officers may in one sense be regarded as acting outside of their employment or authority in not preventing a lynching, nevertheless, such conduct may constitute a neglect or default on the part of the State to afford the equal protection of the law. Against such neglect or default Congress is authorized by the fourteenth amendment to adopt all appropriate remedial measures in order to vindicate and protect the rights possessed by all American citizens under that amendment. Such action by Congress is in no way an invasion of State rights but should be welcomed by the States as an additional protection to fundamental privileges which they, too, are equally bound to guarantee.

CONGRESS HAS THE POWER AND DUTY UNDER THE CONSTITUTION TO GUARANTEE A REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT WITHIN THE STATES

The right to due process of law and the equal protection of the laws are fundamental conceptions of justice and inherent in the very idea of republican or free government. In Powell v. Alabama (287 U. S. 45) the Supreme Court, quoting from its earlier decision in Holden v. Hardy (169 U. S. 366, 389), said concerning the right to due process of law and the equal protection of the laws (p. 372):

> There are certain immutable principles of justice which are inherent in the very idea of free government which no member of the Union may disregard.

In United States v. Cruikshank (92 U. S. 542) the Supreme Court said (p. 555):

> The equality of the rights of citizens is a principle of republicanism. Every republican government is in duty bound to protect all its citizens in the enjoyment of this principle if within its power. That duty was originally assumed by the States, and it still remains there. The only obligation resting upon the United States is to see that the States do not deny the right.

Obviously the substitution of mob rule for free government and the obstruction of the immutable rights of private cititzens by mob violence, where the objective or consequence is the overthrow of due process of law or the equal protection of the law, is a violation of the right of the injured citizen to enjoy the advantages and privileges of a republican form of government. In the exercise of the police power expressly conferred upon Congress to preserve the republican form of government in the several States and to vindicate the right of the private citizens thereof to enjoy the protection of free government, Congress may enact all appropriate remedial measures and may set up machinery for the enforcement thereof by the Federal courts.

Such police measures may obviously be both preventive and remedial—may seek to prevent a destruction of constitutional rights by the substitution of mob rule for free government and may provide remedies for wrongs suffered by reason of such substitution.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL FOR PENALIZING A COUNTY WHERE A LYNCHING OCCURS ARE CONSTITUTIONAL

The policy of imposing liability upon a civil subdivision of government is familiar to the common law. A State may, in the exercise of its police power, impose absolute liability upon a city to be collected by an injured individual (City of Chicago v. Sturges, 222 U. S. 313). In the earliest English statutes there are repeated instances of communities being fined or mulcted in damages for robberies and assaults occurring in their midst, the theory being that the taxpayers would in consequence hold their local officials to greater vigilance (Reeves' History of English Law, vol. II, p. 340; Coke, 2 Inst., ch. 17, p. 369; 31 N. Y. 189; 62 Ohio State, 318, 333, 340).

A recent application of these principles in an identical case is to be found in People v. Nelliss (249 Ill. 12). There a statute of Illinois imposed against a county where a lynching occurred the sum of $5,000 as damages recoverable by the victim's heirs. In upholding the validity of this statute the Supreme Court of Illinois said (p. 19):

> It is, we think, too clear for argument that those provisions of said act which provide that persons engaging in mob violence shall be guilty of a felony and subject to imprisonment in the penitentiary will tend to prevent men from joining mobs when assembling and will tend to the suppression of mob violence, and it is, we think, equally clear that the imposing of a liability for damages upon the county or city in favor of the victim of a mob whenever mobs are permitted to assemble, or, in the case of his death, in favor of his widow or heirs or adopted children, will cause the taxpayers of such county or city to discourage the assembling of mobs within such municipalities and will cause all law-abiding men residing in such communities to condemn and denounce mob violence, the result of which must be to create respect for the law and its enforcement and to discourage the assembling of mobs.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL FOR PROCEEDINGS IN THE FEDERAL COURTS ARE CONSTITUTIONAL

The provisions provide that, if the United States district court is satisfied, by proof, that prosecution of lynchers cannot be had in the State courts, it may entertain a prosecution of them before itself.

The assumption of jurisdiction by the Federal courts would constitute a vindication of Federal rights by civil and criminal processes. This is as old as the Constitution itself. In Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) the court said:

> Congress, by virtue of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, may enforce the prohibitions wherever they are disregarded by either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right—that is, enforce its recognition—by removing the case from a State court in which it is denied into a Federal court where it will be acknowledged. Of this there can be no reasonable doubt. Removal of cases from State courts into courts of the United States has been an acknowledged mode of protecting rights ever since the foundation of the Government. Its constitutionality has never been seriously doubted.

PREVIOUS JUDICIARY COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS HELD A SIMILAR BILL CONSTITUTIONAL

The Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate of the Sixty-seventh Congress had before them a bill identical with H. R. 1507 and both committees, after lengthy hearings and discussions, held the bill constitutional and reported it favorably to their respective Houses. The House of Representatives, acting upon the favorable report of its Judiciary Committee, passed the bill. The Senate, in spite of the favorable report of its Judiciary Committee, failed to allow the bill to reach a vote.

Likewise the Judiciary Committee of the other body in the Seventy-fourth Congress again reported a similar bill as constitutional and urged its passage.

The House of Representatives, therefore, has the benefit of prior constitutional rulings in favor of the pending bill, H. R. 1507, and should, it is submitted, pass the same.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] in his opening remarks suggested that I in my feeble utterance of yesterday had classified him with certain distinguished and honorable Americans of the past, yea, even with one whom I and many, if not all, of you worship as God. There are none so blind as those who will not see; there are none so deaf as those who positively decline to hear. There is none so dull as he appears, who misinterprets a plain statement. I know that my friend GAVAGAN knew better than to so interpret my remarks. Personally, I understand that he is a nice fellow and well thought of back home, but in this issue the rules of the House deny me the privilege of classifying him. He seeks to take comfort, constitutionally, from the action of three Judiciary Committees of this House and the Senate which approved this bill as constitutional. I say to the gentleman that declarations of that kind mean little or nothing. In the same year that the first Judiciary Committee of this House approved as constitutional this bill there were 212 mobs in the United States that certified their conviction that their victims should be executed in accordance with lynch law. Did that make their verdicts righteous? No. They were crimes. Does the spirit of mob violence which is driving this bill through this House make it right? No. It is just as wrong as the hinges of hell; it is just as wrong as any action that was ever taken by a mob, judged by the morals of the situation. You have the votes; you have the power, but you have not the right. [Applause.]

So much by way of preliminary. I want to get down now to a discussion of this one point, and that is the unconstitutionality of this bill. The first observation I wish to make is that every State in the Union has an antilynching law.

There is not any question about it; all of us know that lynching is murder—a crime. Injured parties may now sue officers who fail or neglect to do their duty. All of us favor that remedy through State law. The only question is—and I am addressing myself to some of you gentlemen who joined with the proponents of this measure in favoring it—Has the United States Government a right to butt in? As was said within 3 years after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment in the Slaughterhouse case:

> There is no such authority unless it be in the fourteenth amendment.

What does the fourteenth amendment say?—

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

If the authority of Congress to legislate be not found in those words, it is nowhere.

I want to read to you from Corrigan v. Buckley (271 U. S. 329), about as clear a definition with regard to this whole matter as you will find condensed in one paragraph any place:

> Under the pleadings in the present case the only constitutional question involved was that arising under the assertions in the motions to dismiss that the indenture or covenant which is the basis of the bill is void in that it is contrary to and forbidden by the fifth, thirteenth, and fourteenth amendments. This contention is entirely lacking in substance or color of merit. The fifth amendment is a limitation only upon the powers of the General Government and is not directed against the action of individuals. The thirteenth amendment denouncing slavery and involuntary servitude—that is, a condition of enforced compulsory service of one to another—does not in other matters protect the individual rights of persons of the Negro race. And the prohibitions of the fourteenth amendment have reference to State action exclusively, and not to any action of private individuals.

State action of a particular character is that which is prohibited. Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of this amendment.

So much for that clear-cut definition by the Supreme Court of the meaning of the fourteenth amendment.

We know also that the fourteenth amendment affirmatively is declared by the Constitutional Convention not to mean what the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and the proponents of this bill had in mind. I quote from the Congressional Globe, volume 37, part 2, page 1034:

> The resolution which was offered as the original fourteenth amendment and which was voted down by the Convention:
> "Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to secure to citizens of each State all privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several States, and to all persons in the several States, equal protection of the right to life, liberty, and property."

That is what Mr. GAVAGAN and the proponents of this bill contend is the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, but that original fourteenth amendment the Convention declined even to submit for ratification. That is not what the fourteenth amendment means, and the Convention itself so stated.

Cooley, in his Constitutional Limitations, tells us that the police powers were retained to the sovereign States and there reside to this good day, and that the Federal Government has no right in that sphere. That could be backed up by the citation of a thousand authorities. I want to read to you now from the Barney case, a case that it happens comes from the State of the distinguished gentleman who has just concluded. I want to read that because of the fact that it makes the point that is my major emphasis in the few minutes allotted to me here today; that is, that a man occupying a position as a State officer, if and when he violates his oath of office, forgets the law that he is sworn to administer, and acts not for but against his principal, the State, he ceases to be an agent of the State, and the State is not responsible for his acts.

The case of Barney v. City of New York (193 U. S. 430) is a case which has been misunderstood and criticized but never overruled. It is still the law. It sets forth a principle of law which, to my mind, is of significant importance in the consideration of the constitutionality of the pending bill. It holds that an officer deriving his power from a State, who acts not only in violation of provisions of the State law but in opposition to plain prohibitions therein, is not as to such acts an agent of the State. In other words, when an officer acts against a State he cannot be said to be acting for the State. Such a person cannot defy a State, trample upon its laws, violate his oath of office and every principle of agency, and still bind the State by his illegal conduct. This quotation from the opinion of the Court by Chief Justice Fuller is sufficient to give us the essence:

> Thus the bill on its face proceeded on the theory that the construction of the easterly tunnel section was not only not authorized but was forbidden by the legislation, and hence was not action by the State of New York within the intent and meaning of the fourteenth amendment, and the circuit court was right in dismissing it for want of jurisdiction.
> Controversies over violations of the laws of New York are controversies to be dealt with by the courts of the State. Complainants' grievance was that the law of the State had been broken, and not a grievance inflicted by action of the legislative or executive or judicial departments of the State; and the principle is that it is for the State courts to remedy acts of State officers done without the authority of or contrary to State laws.

This opinion goes on to quote from Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313):

> But when a subordinate officer of the State, in violation of State law, undertakes to deprive an accused party of a right which the statute law accords to him, as in the case at bar, it can hardly be said that he is denied, or cannot enforce, "in the judicial tribunals of the State", the rights which belong to him. * * * If, as in this case, the subordinate officer, whose duty it is to select jurors, fails to discharge that duty in the true spirit of the law; if he excludes all colored men solely because they are colored; or if the sheriff to whom a venire is given, composed of both white and colored citizens, neglects to summon the colored jurors only because they are colored; or if a clerk, whose duty it is to take the twelve names from the box, rejects all the colored jurors for the same reason, it can with no propriety be said the defendant's right is denied by the State and cannot be enforced in the judicial tribunals. The court will correct the wrong, will quash the indictment or the panel, or, if not, the error will be corrected in a superior court.

Again the opinion in the Barney case quotes from the Civil Rights cases (109 U. S. 3):

> In this connection it is proper to state that civil rights, such as are guaranteed by the Constitution against State aggression, cannot be impaired by the wrongful acts of individuals, unsupported by State authority in the shape of laws, customs, or judicial or executive proceedings. The wrongful act of an individual, unsupported by any such authority, is simply a private wrong, or a crime of that individual; an invasion of the rights of the injured party, it is true, whether they affect his person, his property, or his reputation; but if not sanctioned in some way by the State, or not done under State authority, his rights remain in full force and may presumably be vindicated by resort to the laws of the State for redress.

The same opinion points out that the case of Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339) is not in point as an authority against the holding then being made.

> Appellant's counsel rely on certain expressions in the opinion in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339), but that was a case in which what was regarded as the final judgment of a State court was under consideration.

It should be borne in mind also that the action of Judge Coles in filling the jury box in the way he did was approved by the State of Virginia in substance and effect by the State's intervention in the proceeding and suing out of a writ of certiorari, in its own name, in an attempt to justify the judge's actions—the case is known not as Ex parte Coles but as Ex parte Virginia.

This clear distinction between the Barney case and that line of authorities which by the undiscriminating are frequently cited as being in conflict with the decision in the Barney case is simply that the alleged agent, the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners for New York, under its power delegated by the State of New York, was authorized to build certain tunnels, but not the easterly tunnel section. The building of that section was not only not authorized but was specifically forbidden. So there was no semblance of authority for the construction of the easterly tunnel section. The board did not exercise authority lawfully granted it, and in the exercise exceeded its authority; it violated the law of the State which it was sworn to uphold, and wholly without authority acted in opposition to plain prohibitions of the law by which it was supposed to be governed. Whereas, in the case of Ex parte Virginia, a judicial officer of that State, whose acts in filling the jury box were fully authorized by the State simply exceeded his authority in the performance of his official duty by excluding the names of all Negroes; and apparently this overreaching of his authority by the judge was approved by the State, he was defended in it by the State, and his action was considered as the final judgment of a State court.

Similarly, in the case of Home Telephone Company v. Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278), while that opinion criticizes the opinion in the Barney case, nevertheless the two cases are not in conflict at all. In the Home Telephone Co. case the State delegated to a commission the right to fix telephone rates, and the commission in the exercise of this authority fixed telephone rates, but the court held that the rates fixed were confiscatory and in violation of the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment. But Los Angeles, through its officers, had perfect delegated authority to fix the rates. This fact clearly differentiates the Los Angeles case from the principle we are asserting. The same thing is true of the other authorities in this line, Ex parte Young (209 U. S. 123), which was a State railway rate case; Raymond as Treasurer v. Chicago Union Traction Company (209 U. S. 20), which was an action of the State board of equalization; Iowa-Des Moines Banks v. Bennett (284 U. S. 239, 246), where the court in explaining its decision again makes clear the distinction between this whole line of authorities and the Barney case:

> Here the exaction complained of was made by the treasurer in the name of and for the State in the course of performing his regular duties; the money is retained by the State, and the judicial power of the State has been exerted in justifying the retention.

So the law of the Barney case still holds good and condemns this bill as absolutely unconstitutional; for, of course, every State has antilynching laws, and any peace officer of any State or county or other political subdivision who would fail to protect and defend to the limit of his power any prisoner within his custody would be violating the law of his State and acting in opposition to its plain prohibitions.

There is one case, however, as to which there has been no misunderstanding, and of which there has been no criticism. It was cited with approval recently by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Two Hundred and Seventy-first United States Reports, at page 639. This case is the Harris case (106 U. S. 629). This case grew out of a lynching in the State of Tennessee, has never been qualified or questioned, and is absolutely decisive against the constitutionality of the pending bill. From the decision of the Court in the Harris case I quote the following exceedingly significant passage:

> In the indictment in this case, for instance, which would be a good indictment under the law if the law itself were valid, there is no intimation that the State of Tennessee has passed any law or done any act forbidden by the fourteenth amendment. On the contrary, the gravamen of the charge against the accused is that they conspired to deprive certain citizens of the United States and of the State of Tennessee of the equal protection accorded them by the law of Tennessee.
> As, therefore, the section of the law under consideration is directed exclusively against the action of private persons, without reference to the laws of the State or their administration by her officers, we are clear in the opinion that it is not warranted by any clause in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

So the Supreme Court has spoken directly and positively on a lynching case and held that the Federal Government had no authority to enact a law of this character. After quoting many authorities, the Court, in the Harris case, concludes:

> These authorities show conclusively that the legislation under consideration finds no warrant for its enactment in the fourteenth amendment.

We might well stop our discussion of the law with this quotation from the Harris case, for it is unanswerable. But there are other cases on the subject of lynching also perfectly in point. The Riggins case (134 Fed. 409), wherein an Alabama judge wrote an opinion setting forth with preeminent clarity and ability exactly the same views which the proponents of this bill are voicing today, only to reverse his position and his opinion after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Hodges case (203 U. S. 1) had been handed down shortly after the publication of his first opinion in the Riggins case. In the companion case of Powell, Two Hundred and Twelfth United States Reports, page 564, this same Alabama jurist, Judge Jones, upon the strength of the Hodges decision, ordered the indictment against Powell quashed and the defendant discharged. The Government appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States from this decision of Judge Jones, but the Supreme Court upheld Judge Jones, saying that the Hodges case was decisive and that the Federal Government had no power, authority, or jurisdiction in such cases, even though they involved lynching.

These cases render further argument a waste of time on the subject of the constitutionality of this monstrous bill. Now, for a few moments let us consider some of the high points of the Gavagan bill. It plainly seeks to punish officers when the only conceivable power of Congress under the fourteenth amendment—if it had any—would be to punish States. It is State wrongs which Congress is authorized to right. Congress has no more power to punish a State officer who violates State law than it has to punish the chief of police of Mars.

Another outstanding feature of the Gavagan bill is that it provides for the punishment of counties by fines of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages wholly without regard to the guilt or innocence of the citizens or officials of the counties. If every officer of a county had been killed by the mob while the officers were trying to protect a prisoner and if no citizen of the county had participated in the mob, nevertheless, such a county would, under the terms of the Gavagan bill, be fined up to $10,000 if that mob, after killing all the officers of the county, lynched the prisoner. Preposterous, but true. Equally abhorrent is the provision of the Gavagan bill punishing a county wherein a victim is seized by a mob and removed to another county before being lynched. This bill says that such a county, although not a one of its officers or citizens knew of the seizure, may be fined up to $10,000.

It so happens that the dearest spot on earth to me, my home county, has had only one lynching within its borders in its long history. There we have 58,000 people living, 14,000 of whom are white. Yet we have no race trouble and no lynchings. The only lynching ever to occur in Dallas County, Ala., took place some 46 years ago, when a mob of infuriated citizens of another county pursued its victim into Dallas County and there lynched him without the knowledge or consent or participation of a single citizen of Dallas County in that crime. Yet, under the terms of the Gavagan bill, Dallas County would have to pay a fine up to $10,000 in such a case.

There are plenty of words condemning lynching, both from the proponents and opponents of this bill. There are none condemning the causes of lynching. I remember the case of Clyde Thomas, who had been a servant in the household of a citizen of Alabama from the time a baby girl was born until she became 16 years of age. He plotted his crime; he prepared the place in a plum thicket. He attempted his crime twice, but was thwarted by the fact that the child had playmates with her. But on the third attempt he raped and killed her. Yet we risked our lives to save him from the noose of the mob for the noose of the law.

After all is said without any extenuation whatever for the crime of lynching—there can be none—when a guilty man is lynched, the mob has done what the law says should be done! It has done it in an illegal and criminal way, but the end is the same. But no law ever said that a child should be raped!

If the proponents of this measure really want to stop crimes of violence, why do they not strike out the seven words in this bill which require that the victim must be taken from the custody of a peace officer and so broaden the scope of the bill to include gangster killings, which disgrace our civilization more often than lynching, and the race riots which are unknown in the South, but in which more victims have been claimed than the number of all the victims of lynching in history?

I repeat that the people of this Nation, through local sentiment, have solved the problem, and are utterly eradicating the crime of lynching. The commission of this crime has been reduced more than 5,000 percent—the greatest reduction in the history of any crime. It is on the way out. I beg of you gentlemen to remember your oaths to respect, uphold, and maintain the Constitution, and that you will not, by the passage of this prolynching bill, set back the splendid progress which is being made constantly toward the complete wiping out of this disgrace to our civilization. Such unwarranted Federal intrusion into the clearly marked province of the States breeds resentment and kills cooperation. This bill may pass, but without the vestige of constitutional right for its passage. With it GAVAGAN and his mob may attempt to lynch the Constitution, but there are many of us who do not join in any kind of lynching and we will look forward to a vindication of the principles for which we joy to fight—State's rights, and a government of law under the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, first I want to take this opportunity to commend the patriotic attitude of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] who has unselfishly offered his support to the Gavagan bill. For this he deserves the thanks of those who favor this legislation. I want too, to congratulate Mr. GAVAGAN, who for some years has sponsored this legislation, upon the evident passage of this bill. He deserves much commendation for the energy and diplomacy with which he has piloted this legislation to a successful conclusion in the House. His fine ability and devotion has very properly been rewarded with evident success and marks no ordinary achievement to his credit.

This bill has for its purpose the effective prohibition of an indefensible crime. There is no difference of opinion in this body regarding the heinous crime of lynching. No matter where it occurs, or what the provocation, it is a relic of barbarism in any organized community where there exist laws and officers of the law.

It is a rather sad commentary upon our civilization in America that we seem to excel in this disgrace of modern organized society. Mob violence is a sort of collective insanity whose contagion spreads and consumes like a prairie fire. In its mad rage reason is dragged from her throne, pity and mercy are forgotten, and only mad delirium of vengeance reigns. Only after the red tide of anger has subsided and the brutal aspect of the outrage is realized, do the people begin to shame themselves for the recession to primitive brutality.

The Negro has been always the greatest sufferer from this barbaric practice here in our country. Their suffering has been most tragic ever since the close of the Civil War. During that period thousands of Negroes have been lynched throughout the South and some in the North.

For this reason many bills have been introduced in the Congress of the United States, the purpose of which was to end this reign of lawlessness. Once, I think about 15 years ago, such a bill, introduced by our former colleague, Hon. L. C. Dyer of St. Louis, Mo., was passed by the House of Representatives, but it never got far enough to reach the White House.

It is encouraging that lynchings have declined in number but it is not yet obliterated, and no one knows when it will entirely cease to blacken our history. The political set-up just at this time is certainly an opportune time for the consideration of such a measure.

Years ago I introduced an antilynching bill in the House which has been introduced from year to year; but at this time it seems that the bill introduced by our colleague, Mr. GAVAGAN, of New York, everything considered, is the best statute to put through; and for that reason I have favored Mr. GAVAGAN'S measure and will do everything in my power to have it crystallized into law.

The crime of lynching not only denies a fair trial, which is guaranteed to every citizen in the Constitution when he is charged with a crime, but it also renders callous the sensibilities of the communities where it is condoned, and brutalizes the sentiments of the community in general where it prevails and breeds a spirit of lawlessness in the people; particularly in the minds of the youth who become familiar with its barbarism.

It is sincerely hoped that the passage of this act will not cause local authorities to relax their efforts to wipe out this blot on our civilization by depending solely upon the Federal Government to enforce this statute. The duty of local authorities is just as important under this statute as it ever was. Both the States and the National Government should under this statute unite to crush this recession to barbarism.

The country is to be congratulated, and particularly the colored race, upon this action, tardy though it may be. After ages of cruelty and barbaric treatment at the hands of the white race, this recognition of equality before the law should encourage the colored people to enhance their prosperity and increase their happiness, secure in their rights as citizens, and worthy of the favors conferred by this act which has been overdue for so long. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I approach this subject with malice toward none and charity for all.

Mr. Chairman, there always has been, and probably always will be, a divided opinion between certain sections of the country on this particular issue; and it is not for me to criticize any section of the land for representing the viewpoint probably of their voting constituents. Today is the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson is claimed by the Democrats as the founder, to a large extent, of their party. I have listened with interest to the many speeches that have been made here today eulogizing Jefferson and his policies. But I would remind both Democrats and Republicans that Abraham Lincoln said that Thomas Jefferson was his political master, that he learned all of his political principles from Thomas Jefferson; and I would remind my Republican friends that in our two first platforms, those of 1856 and 1860, we incorporated the Declaration of Independence written by Thomas Jefferson. In those days we took pride in the fame, in the achievements, and in the liberalism of Thomas Jefferson, who was likewise one of the founders, by adoption, of the Republican Party. It is meet, therefore, and right that on this occasion a Republican should join in doing honor and paying tribute to that great liberal statesman who was far ahead of his time in denouncing slavery. That far-sighted man saw the menace of slavery and the dangers of slavery to America, and he said:

> I tremble for the future of my country when I remember that God is just.

Lincoln likewise not only denounced slavery but denounced lynching as a dangerous example and revolting to humanity. As we go back and look at the record and causes of the Civil War we find that the main factor in causing that bloody conflict was the denial of human liberties to the colored people at that time, which was only righted by the arbitrament of war.

Every time a colored man or woman is lynched or burned at the stake it means that the Emancipation Proclamation has been suspended and that their civil rights and equal rights have been destroyed under the law and under the Constitution. The spirit of Abraham Lincoln still lives and the Federal Government is obliged to take cognizance of the dastardly and cowardly crime of lynching and provide a penalty so drastic as to render it dangerous for future mobs to indulge in. I have few colored people in my own congressional district, but I would be derelict to those colored soldiers who served under my command and who paid the supreme sacrifice on the battlefields of France fighting to make the world safe for democracy and fighting to make America safe for their own people, their families, their sons, and oncoming generations of colored people if I did not raise my voice and do everything in my power to help pass a Federal antilynching bill to wipe out these barbarous and atrocious attacks on the lives of American citizens in certain States of the Union. The time has come to put an end to mob violence and the hideous plague of lynching, which is a black stain upon the honor of our country. If certain States and counties in the South cannot or will not protect the lives of our citizens, regardless of race, color, or creed, then the Federal Government must do it.

The lynching mob is generally armed to the teeth and the victim unarmed. The lawless mob composed of cowardly ruffians armed to the teeth are almost never apprehended and unless drastic legislation is passed and enforced the spirit of lawlessness will continue unchecked throughout the country. Who can tell, if lynching is not suppressed, when it will spread to take in the unpopular employer or capitalist and even public officials enforcing the law.

At the outset of my remarks I want to except the State of Virginia. There has not been a lynching in the State of Virginia for 10 years or more. Why? Because that great Commonwealth has written into the law an adequate antilynching provision giving the Governor full power to prosecute the members of the mob. If this example had been followed by the other States of the southland, this bill would not be before us today.

Mr. Chairman, there is only one justification for this bill and that is that certain States—and it is not necessary to mention them—have failed, or perhaps they are unwilling or unable to protect the lives of colored people from mob violence. These colored victims, sometimes prisoners in the hands of constituted authority, are taken out of the custody of those officials by lawless, barbarous, and bloodthirsty lynching mobs and burned and tortured at the stake, substituting the law of the jungle, of the claw and the fang, and the rule of the rope and the faggot for the law and the Constitution. What surprises me in connection with the consideration of this bill is that a bill such as this has not been enacted into law long ago. Five thousand Americans have been lynched in the last 50 years in this great free country of ours, that is supposed to be the most civilized in the world. The rest of the world laugh at us every time we say we stand for justice and law and order. They bring up that stigma of lynching law and throw it back in our face.

Mr. Chairman, the most remarkable address I think I ever heard in my life, or probably ever will hear, was the one delivered in Carnegie Hall back in 1917 by Theodore Roosevelt, former President of the United States, at a reception given to the representatives of the Kerensky government. I was asked by the mayor of New York at that time, Mr. Mitchel, to organize the meeting, and I asked Samuel Gompers and Theodore Roosevelt to speak. Both of them accepted. Prior to that meeting I had the honor to go to a little dinner with Theodore Roosevelt and two or three others. He was then interested in raising troops to take to the front. He wanted to raise two colored regiments. We discussed that issue, because, knowing my interest in the subject, he wanted me to help him and serve as one of his officers. My association with the colored people is an inherited one, as my grandfather, as Secretary of State under President Grant, proclaimed the thirteenth amendment, giving the colored people the right to vote, and my father, as speaker of the New York Assembly, later on put through the civil rights bill.

Evidently this issue was in his mind when he got to the meeting because he started off by saying, "Before we try to do justice in other countries, and before we try to right wrongs in foreign nations, we must see that justice is done in our own country."

He then referred to the mob riots and the lynchings in East St. Louis that had just occurred, in which colored men and women were pulled off the street cars and butchered and burned. Samuel Gompers got up later on and read a telegram from a labor leader in Illinois condoning the murder of these colored men and women because they had been brought there and exploited by certain manufacturers.

As soon as Mr. Gompers had concluded, Theodore Roosevelt rushed across the stage and shook his fist in Gompers' face, and mind you, if Theodore Roosevelt had lived a few years longer he would have been the nominee of the Republican Party in 1920 by acclamation and overwhelmingly elected. Yet this man, with that great sense of justice and courage for which he was famous, rushed across the stage and shook his fist in the face of Mr. Gompers, the greatest labor leader of the time, and said, "I will not stand upon any platform and hear murder condoned, whether it is of the whites or blacks." As a result a riot occurred. All the radicals and Bolsheviks in the gallery broke loose with angry yells and the people in the orchestra applauded wildly with the result that they had to bring in about 30 policemen to get Theodore Roosevelt out of that meeting without physical violence.

Mr. Chairman, today we are trying to do justice under the law and under the Constitution to the colored people of America. The preamble states:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility and assure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and posterity.

Every time there is a lynching justice is undermined and blindfolded. Every time there is a lynching domestic intranquility is created. You drive the colored people out of the community. You terrorize them. You cause them to go to other States in the North. O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name, even to taking the lives of American citizens without due process of law.

The Federal Constitution is the greatest charter of human rights and liberty ever devised. It makes for our rights and liberties as a free people. Its aim is to safeguard the inalienable rights of the individual citizen. The preamble of the Constitution defines the principles of our Government. It defines the reasons for the very existence of the Government, and I say to you now, as I said the other day, this question is above and beyond the Constitution. To safeguard and protect the lives of our citizens is the reason for the existence of government itself.

Does anyone deny that? That is the origin and purpose of all government. It is invariably asked: "Let us have some specific provision in the Constitution." All right. Turn to article V, which states:

> No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Turn to article XIV, which states that—

> No State shall deprive any person of his life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Those are very distinct provisions of the Constitution and cover this particular bill, because in certain States and subdivisions of those States the lawful authorities have failed to protect the lives of our colored citizens from the lawless mobs, thereby permitting American citizens to be done to death and lynched without a fair trial guaranteed by the Constitution.

Mr. CURLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CURLEY. Will the gentleman complete article XIV? He only mentioned that no State shall deprive any person of his life, liberty, and property. Would he complete the article?

Mr. FISH. It goes on to say:

Nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

In certain States of the South the equal protection of the laws is denied. This bill does not mention the colored race. It applies equally to whites and colored, but every one of the 14,000,000 colored people in America know that due to the conditions that exist in certain States that our colored citizens are forced to appeal to Congress to pass legislation that will afford protection for their lives and liberty deprived without due process of law and grant equal protection of the laws to them as law abiding and loyal American citizens in peace as well as in war.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. COLMER. It would be interesting to know if the gentleman's interpretation of the bill is broad enough to cover all kinds of mobs and murders, such as gang murders, which happen in sections of the country other than the section to which the gentleman referred, particularly the gentleman's own State.

Mr. FISH. No; this bill does not cover it; but may I say to the gentleman this bill does not go as far as I should like to have it go?

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman offer an amendment to that effect?

Mr. FISH. I do not think so.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman support one if I offer it.

Mr. FISH. I should like to hear the gentleman debate it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Do we not in New York try our gang murderers, and do we not get convictions of our gang murderers?

Mr. FISH. We try to try them. The trouble in the South is that they do not try to try them. If they did, this bill would not be here. Everyone knows the members of the lynching mob go free. If once in a great while one of the members of a mob is apprehended and arrested, he is hardly ever convicted. In New York State we do catch gangsters and send them up to Sing Sing and to the electric chair.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SHANNON. As I understood, the gentleman had reference to the killings when the packers brought great crowds of people from the South to take the place of other men. The gentleman has his geography mixed. There was no such occurrence in St. Louis. It was in East St. Louis, Ill.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SHANNON. May I ask if the gentleman will stand corrected on that?

Mr. FISH. Absolutely. The principle is exactly the same whether it is in East St. Louis or St. Louis or New York.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I decline to yield.

Mr. HOOK. Is the gentleman afraid to yield to me?

Mr. FISH. Not to the gentleman; certainly not.

Mr. HOOK. Then, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Oh, certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman tell me, if we cannot legislate on the greatest mob crime of the age, sit-down strikes, how in the world can we constitutionally legislate on this proposition? [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. The gentleman and myself seem to have a little difference of opinion. When one takes up the question of sit-down strikes, there is involved the invasion of private property, the illegal seizure of private property. In this case there is involved the destruction of human lives. If the gentleman wants to put destruction of human lives on the same basis as the temporary occupation of private property, he can do so. As far as I am concerned, I believe in placing human rights above property rights. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. We are talking about the Constitution now.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, some people think we can eat the Constitution. The Constitution is thrown in our face every day. Our duty is to legislate. I for one have taken an oath of office to support and defend the Constitution, and I believe I am defending it when I am trying to protect human lives in America, whether they are white or whether they are colored. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FISH. I yield; yes.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman tell me where he finds constitutional warrant for the first section of this bill?

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman is going to go into details, will he read the language to which he refers?

Mr. COX. Beginning on line 3, page 1:

That for the purposes of this act, the phrase "mob or riotous assemblage", when used in this act, shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman contends this is an invasion of States' rights, does he not? One of the most delightful things in politics is to see how people change their views. Now, that the Republican Party is in the minority, we are for States' rights except in this particular case, and you, the majority, are against States' rights except in this particular case. Let me say, in the words of a recent editorial in the Richmond Times-Dispatch, that—

When the phrase, "the rights of the States", degenerates into a mere shibboleth behind which the State and local authorities can ignore and flout the law of the land, and permit lynchers to go unpunished year after year, then the Times-Dispatch believes that intervention by the Federal Government is not only desirable but necessary.

May I say to the newer Members of the House that we have been all through this before. I have no malice toward any southerner. I know their point of view. However, let me remind all Members of the House that when I introduced and there was brought up on the floor here 15 years ago a bill to commemorate the valor of the colored soldiers who wore the uniform of the United States, and who paid the supreme sacrifice on the battlefields of France, by erecting a monument there, as there were 30 monuments to white soldiers, practically every southerner voted against the bill and everybody else voted for it. It was not a question of the Constitution; it was a question of the point of view as far as colored people are concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat difficult for me, coming from my particular section of the country, to follow a gentleman like the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], but I want to discuss this question dispassionately and forget for the moment some of the aspersions against the South and implications contained in the gentleman's speech.

This is a question that knows no section. Lynching as a crime knows no section. It knows no color, no creed, and no sect. No responsible citizen, I do not care whence he comes, whether from the South, North, East, or West, condones lynching any more than he condones any other crime.

The objection I have to this bill is one that is fundamental. I am not one of those brilliant lawyers that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] referred to. I am not one of those who has the power to sway the judgment of my hearers, but I am one of the humble Members of this House who has a great deal of confidence in the common sense and patriotism of its Members, and in order to put the issue squarely before the Members and especially the Democrats I have asked for this time.

If this proposed measure has any constitutional sanction, it must be found in the fourteenth amendment. It has been inferred otherwise here by some gentlemen, and the distinguished gentleman from New York mentioned the fifth amendment. Everybody who ever heard of a law book or ever passed by a courthouse, much less sat in the shadow of one, knows that the fifth amendment has nothing whatsoever to do with this question. The fifth amendment is a limitation upon the power of the Federal Government and does not apply to State action or to failure of the States to act. If there is any authority for the enactment of this law, it is contained in the fourteenth amendment, and in that section of the fourteenth amendment which provides that no State shall deny equal protection of law to any citizen.

Now, what does the fourteenth amendment do? It is a limitation upon the authority of the States.

I do not have time to go into a discussion of the various and many decisions, and I doubt whether I would be able to fully discuss all the learned decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States if I had the time. I have had enough curiosity about them, however, to read them, and I have tried to interpret them in the light of the history of the times when the fourteenth amendment was considered and adopted.

I know the practical questions that are confronting many of you gentlemen. I know the heat that has been applied to you, too, by the greatest racketeering organization in the United States today, an organization that is preying upon the credulity of the colored race, and the men who are doing that ought to be brought to justice themselves; but, regardless of that, the provisions of the fourteenth amendment refer to the actions of a political body dominating a State, by whatever instruments or by whatever modes that action of the State may be taken. A State acts only through its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. The amendment, therefore, must refer to "no agency" of a State. I want you to pay close attention to the fact I say "no agency", because I want to discuss the question of agency in just a moment. The amendment must mean that no agency of the State or officer or agent of the State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws of the State. Whoever by virtue of a special position—I am stating the question just as squarely as I can for the proponents of the bill—whoever by virtue of a special position under a State government, deprives another of property, of liberty, or of life, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition, and if the officer acts in the name—and here is the crux of this whole case—if the officer acts in the name of and for the State—catch the distinction—if the officer, through neglect or by positive action, acts in the name of the State and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State; and under this bill, the officer who surrenders the custody of a prisoner or who fails to take all means within his power to deliver that prisoner safely to the jail or to protect the prisoner from harm, is he acting under and by virtue of the authority of the State or is he acting as an individual and contrary to the authority of the State?

Something was said here about the State acting through an agent. May I call your attention to the law of agency. When an agent passes beyond the scope of his employment, the master is not bound; and when the officer, having custody of a prisoner, through neglect or otherwise, fails in the discharge of his duty, that failure becomes the individual act of the officer and not the act of the State; and unless it is the act of the State, there is no constitutional authority for the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Not now. Please let me alone. If I had time, I would like to talk to you all day; I would like to give you a good lecture on constitutional law.

Mr. LANZETTA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. Listen to this. I tell you as one who feels keenly this intrusion upon State rights, and they can talk all they want to about State rights, but if I am here 50 years or 20 years from now you will hear me talking and trying to preserve the right of local self-government. I do not care whether the Democrats or Republicans are in power, for there is within this bill the great question of whether or not the dual system of our Government shall be maintained, whether or not the Federal Government is going to dominate the affairs of this country or whether the people themselves in the States are going to continue to act.

The civil rights guaranteed by this amendment are those against State aggression, and if the act of the officer or person complained against is not supported by State authority in the shape of laws, custom, or judicial or executive proceedings, the act of the officer is simply a private act or an individual act. It may be an invasion of the rights of the injured party—his personal rights; yes. It might be an invasion of personal rights of the prisoner, but if the act of the officer is not sanctioned in some way by the State, or is not done under State authority, the constitutional rights of the injured party remain in full force, and it cannot be said that the State has denied to the person the equal protection of its laws.

It is not necessary, I know, to cite cases to sustain this proposition that I have advanced, but if authority is needed, I call attention to the Civil Rights cases, among many others.

Those decisions, and many others, of the Supreme Court that might be cited construing the fourteenth amendment hold that even though the States are prohibited from denying due process of law or equal protection of the law does not mean that the Congress can enact statutes under which it would undertake to provide due process of law or to exercise the police power reserved to the States.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Not now, please. I say in all deference to the men who seek to uphold the constitutionality of this act, point me to a single decision of the Supreme Court or of any other court that holds that the fourteenth amendment—and that is where the authority must exist if it exists at all—does not apply to State action and State action alone. I call attention to one or two other decisions. In the case of Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313) the Court said:

> These provisions of the fourteenth amendment have reference to State action exclusively and not to any action of private individuals.

Distinguish that, if you can. The language of the fourteenth amendment does not permit of any such construction as is sought by the proponents of this bill. The Court further said in that case:

> When the State has been guilty of no violation of its provisions; when it has not made or enforced any law abridging the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the United States—

Catch the distinction—

> when it has not made or enforced any law abridging the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States; when no one of its departments has deprived any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or denied any person within its jurisdiction equal protection of the laws—

Not a case of an individual wrong of an officer, but under and by authority of the law itself—> or denied any person within its jurisdiction of equal protection of the law; when, on the contrary, the laws of the State as enacted by its legislature and construed by its judicial and administered by its executive departments recognize and protect the rights of all persons, the amendment imposes no duty or imposes no power upon the Congress.

Nobody will contend for a minute that the State laws—that the laws of every State in this Union—protect the man in the custody of the law against assault by a mob or anyone else. Nobody will deny that.

You can do as you please, as you will, but let me call attention to the case of McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 39), in which the Court said:

> The inhibition that no State shall deprive any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws was designed to prevent any person or class of persons from being singled out as a special subject for discrimination and hostile legislation.

This Congress can do and will do just as it pleases, but I submit to you in all seriousness this one proposition. If you enact this law, then let me tell you the next Congress, or the next, will enact a law against murder, against rape, against perjury, against any crime that may be committed within the confines of California, Arkansas, or where you will, and there is nothing to prevent it, nothing whatsoever to prevent it. I say to you that I am so absolutely convinced that this proposed act is unconstitutional that sometimes I thank God for the Supreme Court of the United States. It has saved the South from humiliation and disgrace; yea, from unspeakable ravages, sought to be imposed by a Congress impelled by a desire to punish us. You gentlemen may laugh. I pity you; you have been placed under the gun and against the cold steel where you have to deliberately decide to violate your oath of office or yield to political pressure. I sympathize with any man who finds himself in that position. Enact this law, if you please. Carry it to its natural conclusion. It will rise to plague you. You will then turn longing eyes and aching hearts to that Gibraltar of American liberty, the Supreme Court, to save not the South but to save this country from humiliation and to save constitutional democracy.

Talk about the men of the South being opposed to this legislation, we are not opposed to it because it is called an antilynching bill. We are opposed to it because we believe in a constitutional democracy. We have been nurtured and reared to believe in such a government. That is the reason we are opposed to this. You may enact it, if you please; the Senate may enact it; yea, the President may sign it, and it may go into force and be advertised as a sop to the black people of this country. I tell you that the people of the South are the best friends the American Negro ever had. [Applause.] We love them as individuals. You of the North revere them as a race. But pass this bill, if you will, you will live to see the time come when you and your posterity and the people you represent and the American Negro will thank God that the Supreme Court of the United States intervened and saved to us our local government; saved to us our constitutional democracy that has been handed down to us; saved us from the tyrannies of a centralized, bureaucratic, autocratic government, to which we are heading just as sure as we are in this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] has again expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, it is with great reluctance that I take issue with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], who has just addressed you, and for whom I have an affectionate regard, and that I must take issue with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], for whom I also have affection and regard, but I am sure we must argue this matter by the dry light of reason, without passion and prejudice. Emphatically I do not agree with the last speakers. They say a sheriff participating in a lynch mob does not act for the State and that a sheriff failing for any reason to prevent lynch law also does not bind the State. Action by a State may be positive. It may be negative. It may be by activity of its officers. It may be by denial of activity of its officers. The act or nonactivity of a sheriff or marshal or constable is, beyond peradventure of doubt, the responsibility of the State.

The principal is always responsible, not only for the positive acts of its agents, but the principal is likewise responsible for the failure, the neglect, or refusal of its agent or agents to act. Therefore, a sheriff, for example, cannot say in one breath, "I am sheriff when I actually act", and in the next breath say, "I am not sheriff when I refuse or neglect to act." Otherwise he would be a sort of dual personality. There is nothing known, as far as I can comprehend, in the law as to that type of hybrid principal. The sheriff is the officer of the State whether he acts or fails to act. Of course, in many instances the sheriff, no matter how brave, could not prevent a howling, wild mob from hanging its victim. That is beside the point. His duty is to prevent mob action. He at least must try to prevent a lynching. If he does not raise a finger to prevent it, he is directly responsible and the State, his superior, is likewise responsible. It is idle chatter to think otherwise.

I am sure there is no one within the hearing of my voice or beyond it who does not abhor lynching. It is a stench in the nostrils of every reasonable man. It is something we all loathe. It is a foul blot upon our escutcheon. What are we going to do about it? How can we rub out the "damned spot"?

I will tell my friends from below the Mason and Dixon's line there is a continual changing sentiment in your own communities. The Washington Post not so long ago made a report of a poll of the Institute of Public Opinion. Seventy percent of the people of the United States favored a Federal antilynching law. Sixty-five percent of those who responded from the South also favored a Federal antilynching law. Great credit is due to the good people of my friends in the South for the great spread of enlightenment against lynching. By education and moral suasion lynchings are decreasing in the South. Thank God for that. And our colleagues here have done much to discourage the vile practice.

In a spirited editorial of the Richmond Times-Dispatch of Tuesday, February 2, 1937, it is pointed out that if every State would enact antilynching laws of the type Virginia adopted some years ago, lynching would cease and there would be no need for a Federal antilynching law. Unfortunately few States followed Virginia's lead. Her bill makes lynching a crime against the State, subjects all participants of the crime guilty of murder, and authorizes the expenditure of sums without limit to punish the guilty. Virginia means business. It prosecutes. There are no lynchings in Virginia. Other States had the opportunity to pass proper lynching laws. They have failed—not only to pass proper laws but also have failed to prosecute under the weak and ineffectual laws that they have.

They have always cried "States' rights." But with rights are corresponding duties. Numerous of these States have failed in those duties—to prevent lynching and to punish those participating. It does not lie in their mouths to prate about "States' rights." They surely cannot hide behind such a mere shibboleth and permit year after year lynchers to go unpunished.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I have a telegram which just came in over the United Press. I have checked it up, and it is teletyped also:

WINONA, MISS., April 13.—Mob of several hundred persons today took two Negroes charged with murdering white man from officers and lynched them, Deputy Sheriff A. A. Curtis reported.

I have tried to check up. It is surely the report of the United Press handed to me by its representative, and it is checked as true downtown. So lynching has not ceased.

Mr. CELLER. I deem the latest news of lynching most deplorable, most horrible. Reports show that the two Negroes were taken from the custody of the sheriff as they were being returned to jail from the courthouse at Winona, Miss. Furthermore, after they were seized the mob tortured their victims by searing their flesh with blasts from gasoline blow torches. After thus brutally burning them, the wild mob piled brush high about them, saturated the brush with gasoline, and touched a match to the pyre. It is, indeed, too horrible to relate.

The irony of it all is that while this cruel spectacle was being held, the Governor of Mississippi, Hugh White, in an address at Jackson said:

We are justly proud of the fact that Mississippi has not had a lynching in 15 months.

A few minutes later he was informed of the two lynchings.

The question is, What will the Governor do to bring the culprits to justice? Will it again be merely lip service? Had not the Governor better induce his legislature to pass a real, honest-to-goodness antilynching law like Virginia and then enforce it? That would stamp out the crime. It is because he will not take such action that we must act here.

To date, this, the year of 1937, we now have three lynchings. There was but one before today.

That is three too many. We had eight lynchings last year. That was eight too many—at least that was the number admitted by the Tuskegee Institute, although the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People report a higher figure, namely, 13. However that may be, I may say to the distinguished gentleman and my friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] that he cannot compare the matter of murder with lynching, although lynching may be murder, for he must know that punishment, as far as homicide is concerned in this country, is up to 44 percent. What is the record with reference to punishment for lynchings in this country? There is no adequate punishment by many of the States with reference to lynching. There is a shameful failure, there is a cruel dereliction; and I say this with all due respect. Let us take the figures. In all the United States since 1882, 99.2 percent of the perpetrators of lynchings went unwhipped by justice; the States failed to act. The States have failed to punish. Mark this statement by Prof. James H. Chadbourne, of the University of North Carolina. It is very significant:

Although 1,741 persons between 1900 and 1930 were lynched, there is record of only 12 instances in which convictions have been secured. These 12 instances embrace 67 individual convictions. Statistically, therefore, only 0.8 of 1 percent of the lynchings have been followed by convictions of any of the lynchers. The percentage by States is as follows: Alabama, 4 percent; Georgia, 8 percent; Oklahoma, 3 percent; Virginia, 4 percent; Minnesota, 33 percent; Texas, 7 percent; Illinois, 7 percent; Missouri, 3 percent.

The record is full of examples of horrible, woeful failure to punish in the States as a result of the following: Refusal of persons with first-hand knowledge to testify—I am again quoting from Mr. Chadbourne, professor of law of the University of North Carolina—trial jury verdict actuated by local prejudice in lieu of the consideration of the evidence. Failure of the grand jury to make adequate investigation, failure of prosecuting officers to investigate and furnish the grand jury with evidence, nolle prosequi by prosecuting officer, adverse trial court rulings on motions and evidence, reversal by appellate court on nonprejudicial error, and other causes. It is therefore incumbent on the Federal Government to intervene, since we have this shameful lack of justice in the States with reference to punishing perpetrators of lynchings.

Again answering my distinguished colleague from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] concerning his argument about murder, I repeat what I said in part in my report to the House on the Mitchell bill—the majority report of the Judiciary Committee, which I prepared:

One of the chief difficulties in the way of passing a Federal antilynching law is the attitude of many Members of Congress in regard to the constitutionality of such a measure. These Congressmen either hold or hide behind the opinion that lynching is murder, and therefore the Federal Government has no more constitutional right to step into a State and punish lynching than it has to do likewise and punish murder. This analogy, however, between murder and lynching is not a true one. In murder, one or more individuals take life, generally for some personal reason. In lynching, a mob sets itself up in place of the State and acts in place of the processes of law to mete out death as a punishment to a person accused of a crime. The mob sets itself up as judge, jury, and executioner. In murder, the accused merely violates the law of the State. In lynching, the mob arrogates to itself the powers of the State and the functions of the Government. It is therefore not only against the act of killing that the Federal Government should exercise its powers, but also the act of the mob in arrogating to itself the functions of the State and substituting its actions for the due process of law.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that the gentleman from New York bases the constitutionality of this act upon the ratio of failures that he has now placed in the RECORD?

Mr. CELLER. Oh, no; I do not offer that as a constitutional argument. In the short time allotted one cannot adequately and properly make a constitutional argument with all its refinements. I shall put into the RECORD my ideas as to the constitutionality of this act with reference to the fourteenth amendment and I shall give cases which will uphold what I believe to be the constitutionality of antilynching law.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOBBS. I just wanted to make the same request of the gentleman that he made of me.

Mr. CELLER. I shall put those figures in the RECORD.

Mr. HOBBS. I want the cases.

THE STATES ARE NOT PRECLUDED FROM ACTING

Mr. CELLER. It has been said that the passage of a bill of this type will lead to undue centralization of governmental power. There is a fear that there will be undue interference with the sovereign rights of the States. This fear is unfounded. Such a bill will take no power from the States; they shall have all the power they had before. Except in the case of fining a county, the States have every opportunity to do something with the menace of lynching and to punish those who participate in mob violence. The States may do this before the Federal authority and the Federal power is invoked. Therefore, it cannot properly be contended that the proposed legislation is improper because it is an exercise of the police power reserved to the States.

Many years ago, in the case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. 204), the rule was laid down that the Federal Government, in the exercise of an express power—the fourteenth amendment—may use any appropriate power, even though in other connections such power has been reserved to the States. Therefore, in the exercise of any express power, the Federal Government can exercise a power very similar to the police power of the States.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION GENERALLY

I ground the constitutionality of antilynching legislation on the first section of the fourteenth amendment, which reads as follows:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any persons within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The Supreme Court has on many different occasions pointed out that the fourteenth amendment constitutes a guaranty to each person within the jurisdiction of the several States that he shall be accorded certain fundamental rights. In Strauder v. West Virginia (100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664), the plaintiff, Strauder, a colored man, was indicted for murder, and upon trial was convicted and sentenced, and his conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the State. The case was taken to the United States Supreme Court on a writ of error to the Supreme Court of West Virginia, the chief assignment of error being that the prisoner was convicted without due process of law, since the laws of West Virginia excluded the members of his race from jury service. The Court held the State statute unreasonably discriminatory and a denial of the equal protection of the laws within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth amendment. The Court said:

This (the fourteenth amendment) is one of a series of constitutional provisions serving a common purpose, namely, securing to a race recently emancipated all the civil rights that the superior race enjoy. It was in view of these considerations that the fourteenth amendment was framed and adopted. It was designed to assure to the colored race the enjoyment of all the civil rights that under the law are enjoyed by white persons, and to give to that race the protection of the General Government, in that enjoyment, whenever it should be denied by the States. It not only gave citizenship and the privilege of citizenship to persons of color, but it denied to any State the power to withhold from them the equal protection of the laws, and authorized Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. The fourteenth amendment makes no attempt to enumerate the rights it designed to protect. Its language is prohibitory; but every prohibition implies the existence of rights and immunities, prominent among which is an immunity from inequality of legal protection, either for life, liberty, or property. A right or an immunity, whether created by the Constitution, or only guaranteed by it, even without any express delegation of power, may be protected by Congress.

This fourteenth amendment guarantees immunity from inequality of legal protection. Each man has the right of equal protection as to due process, indictment, trial, and appeal. In a lynching the indictment, trial, and appeal—all involved in due process—are withheld. The State, therefore, does not guarantee equal protection of the law to the victim of mob violence.

The fourteenth amendment does not add anything to the rights of one citizen against another. It does, however, furnish an added guaranty against any encroachment of fundamental rights which every citizen has. When a mob lynches a man, and a State, through its officers, stands idly by and either does nothing or fails to punish the guilty, the conclusion is inescapable, namely, that there has been a denial of equal protection of the law.

THE DENIAL MENTIONED IN THE FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT NOT ONLY CONCERNS EQUALITY IN THE LAW BUT ALSO EQUALITY IN THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE LAW

The Supreme Court, in Saunders v. Shaw (244 U. S. 310), promulgated the doctrine that the denial of rights recognized by the fourteenth amendment need not be merely by legislation.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bosworth (230 Fed. 191, 207), the Court defined the phrase "denial of the equal protection of the laws" to mean a refusal to grant or a withholding of equal treatment.

The essence of the fourteenth amendment, therefore, is to forbid discrimination and to demand that each department of the State, in the exercise of its particular function, give equal consideration and treatment to all.

In Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356; 30 L. Ed. 220; 6 Sup. Ct. 1064), a licensing officer refused to license a Chinaman to conduct a laundry. Yick Wo was arrested for operating a laundry without a license. The Court said:

> Whatever may have been the intent of the ordinances as adopted, they are applied by the public authorities charged with their administration, and thus representing the State itself, with a mind so unequal and oppressive as to amount to a practical denial by the State of that equal protection of the laws which is secured to the petitioners, as to all other persons, by the broad and benign provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and unequal hand so as practically to make unjust and illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances, material to their rights, the denial of equal justice is still within the prohibition of the Constitution.

This fundamental principle has been further enunciated by the Supreme Court in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339; 25 L. Ed. 676), Chy Ling v. Freeman (92 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 550), Soon Hing v. Crowley (113 U. S. 703; 28 L. Ed. 1145; 5 Sup. Ct. 730), Henderson v. Mayor of New York (92 U. S. 259; 23 L. Ed. 543), Ex parte Young (209 U. S. 123; 52 L. Ed. 714; 28 Sup. Ct. 441), and Neal v. Delaware (103 U. S. 370; 26 L. Ed. 567).

Thus there is the second form of denial of equal protection to the victims of the lynching, when there is a failure to prosecute those who take part in the lynching. When there is a failure to prosecute the wrongdoers, the State officers are denying to those who may thereafter be subject to similar outrages that protection which comes from the punishment of crime.

The purpose of criminal law enforcement is not only the punishment of the perpetrators of an offense; it is also for the purpose of preventing others from committing similar outrages against society.

The fourteenth amendment does not invest Congress with wholesale power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of the States. The fourteenth amendment merely gives Congress the right and the power to provide relief against positive State action which bears unevenly and unequally upon persons within that State; it also gives the power and the right to provide modes of relief against the inaction of the State or the inactivity of the State's officials. Until some State law has been passed, or some State action through officers or agents has been taken, adverse to the rights of citizens sought to be protected by the fourteenth amendment, no Federal legislation under said amendment nor any proceedings of the administration under such Federal legislation can be called into being.

Legislation should be provided in advance to meet exigencies when they arise. (See Civil Rights cases, 109 U. S. 3; 27 L. Ed. 835; 3 Sup. Ct. 18). There is plenty of authority vested in Congress to pass "corrective" or "remedial" legislation. It is that authority from which the antilynching bills spring.

In Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339, l. c. 345–47, 25 L. Ed. 676), the petitioner was arrested and held in custody under an indictment found against him in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia. The indictment alleged that he, being a judge of the county court of Pittsylvania County of that State, and an officer charged by law with the selection of jurors to serve in the circuit and county courts of said county in the year 1878, did then and there exclude and fail to select as jurors certain Negro citizens of said county, solely on account of their race, color, and previous condition of servitude. The petitioner, being in custody, presented his petition for a writ of habeas corpus, and a writ of certiorari to bring up the record of the district court. The court held the act of Congress, under which the petitioner was convicted, constitutional and denied the petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The court said:

> Congress is authorized to enforce the prohibition by appropriate legislation * * * Whatever legislation is appropriate, that is, adapted to carry out the objects the amendments have in view, whatever tends to enforce submission to the prohibitions they contain, and to secure to all persons the enjoyment of perfect equality of civil rights and equal protection of the laws against State denial or invasion, if not prohibited, is brought within the domain of congressional power * * * such legislation must act upon persons, not upon the abstract thing denominated the State, but upon the persons who are the agents of the State in the denial of the rights which were intended to be secured.

Another question immediately arises out of the proposition just related, that is, whether or not the fourteenth amendment can reach the acts of State officers if they are not within the scope of the power conferred upon them by the State. Under this amendment the Federal judicial power can redress and punish wrongs committed by a State official whether he has misused the authority given him or not. The State acts and becomes responsible when it places an official in the position by reason of which he is able to withhold protection or prosecution. It is entirely irrelevant to inquire into authorization by the State of the commission of the wrong. The amendment applies to every person whether natural or judicial, who is the repository of State power. The settled construction of the amendment is that it presupposes the possibility of an abuse by a State officer or representative of his powers and that it deals with such a contingency.

This point was decided in Home Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles (227 U. S. 278, 57 L. ed. 510, 33 Sup. Ct. 312). In this case Los Angeles had passed a confiscatory ordinance, in violation of the constitution of California and of the fourteenth amendment. It was contended that the action of the city as not within the limits of its authorization was not State action. The Court held the contrary and said the fourteenth amendment "provides for a case where one who is in the possession of State power uses that power to commit some wrong which by the amendment is forbidden, even though the consummation of the wrong may not be within the powers possessed if the commission of the wrong itself is rendered possible or is efficiently aided by the State authority lodged in the wrongdoer." The amendment contemplates the possibility of State officers abusing the powers conferred upon them by doing wrongs prohibited by the amendment.

FINING THE COUNTY GUILTY OF LYNCHING IS NOTHING NEW

This practice has been recognized by Anglo-Saxon peoples everywhere. Many statutes beginning in 1285 in the Statutes of Winchester, coming down to the Statutes of Elizabeth, and the Riot Act of George the First, we find uninterrupted recognition of the principle that a civil subdivision like the county has the duty of protecting property, with the right of police power to discharge such duty. There goes with that power the responsibility to respond in damages for negligence affirmatively shown, as well as for not affording proper and adequate protection to meet the situation. When we inflict a penalty on a county which fails to prevent a lynching, we are simply applying the old Anglo-Saxon principle. My own State of New York provides that a city or county shall be liable to a person whose property is destroyed or injured therein by mob or riot or for the damages sustained thereby. The Supreme Court of the United States in Chicago v. Sturgis (222 U. S. 313, 56 L. Ed. 215, 32 Sup. Ct. 92) upheld the principle of such penalties on political subdivisions.

I believe in general that the antilynching bills before us, particularly the Celler bill, the Mitchell bill, and the Wagner-Van Nuys bill in the Senate, are all designed to insure equal protection of the laws, by punishing the crime of lynching, and that these bills provide appropriate legislation for carrying out the purposes of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and in connection therewith to insert two short quotations from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I learned with deep regret, and I am sure that all other Members share the feeling, of the reported news from Winona, Miss., called to our attention a moment ago by the gentleman from Michigan. I sincerely trust that if there have been two lynchings, or one lynching involving two Negroes, in Winona, as stated in the gentleman's telegram, that that act was not occasioned by nor connected with the news that went out from this Congress yesterday throughout the country to the effect that Congress proposes an unlawful and unconstitutional interference with the police jurisdiction of the States, as evidenced by the overwhelming vote of 283 to 107 by which this bill was brought to the floor of the House. While that is probably not the case, I say to you in all sincerity that if you pass this unconstitutional law and it is approved by the President, you may reasonably anticipate that for the future lynchings not only will not decrease but in all probability will largely increase over the very small minimum to which they have now been reduced. The reliance upon Federal force rather than upon an enlightened and strengthened public sentiment will not be likely to decrease further a practice which public sentiment has almost eliminated.

It is easy on an issue like this to say bitter things. It is difficult sometimes to refrain from saying them. No good is accomplished by unnecessary bitterness, and it should not be indulged in. And yet if the mere recital of facts brings unpleasant thoughts, he would indeed be derelict in his duty who undertook to sit here as a representative of his people and fail to do his part to keep the record straight on an issue of this character for fear that what he might say would offend in some quarters.

The vote on April 12 to bring this bill to the floor without committee action was almost purely sectional. There were some outstanding exceptions to this rule on both sides—men like the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], a Republican, and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], a northern Democrat, who voted against what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] described as a rape of justice and the Constitution, and men like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], who supported it.

I have no illusions as to the possibility of being able to accomplish anything by argument toward preventing the passage of this bill. It has, according to current report, support from such high and powerful sources that the attitude of one Member of Congress is a matter of little consequence. However, I take advantage of this occasion in order to point out to the people of the South, against whom this bill is directed, certain outstanding facts which they will do well to keep in mind.

First, there is no substantial difference in the attitude of people from other sections of the country, whether Democrats or Republicans, toward the Negro problem as it affects the South. Lacking our first-hand knowledge of that problem, but laboring under the impression that they do understand it, they have been engaged throughout our national history in trying to force upon us measures for its solution. There are many on the floor of this House who remember that only a few years ago when the House was passing a congressional redistricting bill based upon the 1930 census, a teller vote was had in Committee of the Whole upon the question of reducing congressional representation upon the basis of the number of Negroes who do not participate in elections, and most of our Democratic brethren from other sections of the country passed through the tellers to vote for that reduction, and the amendment proposed was adopted; and it was only by reason of a compromise agreement to also eliminate from the bill another amendment excluding aliens from the count in determining congressional representation, that the attempted reduction of southern congressional representation was not enacted into law. I mention these facts, not for the purpose of stirring up feeling, but because I want the people of the South to know that when it comes to questions of this kind, the people of no other section of the country, whether Democrats or Republicans, consider as sympathetically as they should the situation of the South with regard to its race problem: and from an experience of 10 years or more in this House, I have reached the regretful conclusion that only such rights in the handling of this problem as are guaranteed to us under the Constitution will be safe, and then only in the event the interpretation of the Constitution as it relates to this subject matter continues in line with previous decisions of the Supreme Court.

As proof of that fact, regretful quotation must be made from the remarks on April 12 of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], a Democrat, chairman of the powerful Rules Committee, who, while he voted against the discharge of his committee, announced his purpose to support the bill. He said:

> I should like to see the question of the Negroes in America, 15,000,000 of them, seriously considered by the people of this country and by Congress, and I would like to tell you where to start. Start in your Capital, the District of Columbia. In the Capital of the Nation the Negro does not get a square deal. Right in the shadow of the Capitol you have segregation and Jim Crowism. If that were properly brought to the attention of this Nation, the people of the 48 States would never tolerate it. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 12, 1937, p. 3383.)

There can be no objection to serious consideration, not alone of questions affecting Negroes, but of all questions affecting the American people. That is laudable. But when a high and responsible leader of the Democratic Party announces himself as opposing segregation of the races, which statement, in the way in which he used it, would imply his favor for coeducation of Negroes and whites and for their coentertainment in hotels and theaters, and his opposition to their segregation in any way; and when an overwhelmingly Democratic House supports by a sectional vote such a legislative monstrosity as this Gavagan bill, it is time for the people of the South to ask themselves, "What protection have we from unconstitutional interference with our handling of our race problems, except as protection may be afforded us by the Supreme Court in its construction of the Constitution?"

This brings me to the second point in my discussion, and that is that few lawyers of recognized eminence regard the proposal contained in the pending bill as constitutional. I shall not dwell upon that. Unfortunately, during recent years considerations of that character have not appealed as strongly as I have felt they should to the membership of this House. I have no hope that they will do so now. But I may quote the statement of an eminent Republican lawyer, Senator BORAH, a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, as set out on page 6673, part 6, volume 79, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, made during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, as fairly representative of the opinion of most good lawyers. Senator BORAH was discussing a bill then pending, substantially similar to this, and also a prior bill of the same nature, known as the Dyer antilynching bill. He said:

> But the matter was submitted to the Judiciary Committee, and the Judiciary Committee overwhelmingly, and, as I recall, unanimously, with the exception of two or three who made certain reservations—that is, reserving the right to express themselves upon the floor—was of the opinion that the bill was unconstitutional.

When we recall that this bill, substantially the bill Senator BORAH was discussing as to the principles involved, is a patent attempt on the part of the Federal Government to usurp police jurisdiction within the States, to exercise functions for which there has been no constitutional grant of authority by the States, and to do those things in a harsh and unreasonable way by imposing penalties of from $2,000 to $10,000 for the benefit of the legal representative of the deceased, upon counties where lynchings occur, and in which a person lynched is seized, thus imposing upon the innocent majority punishment for the conduct of what is oftentimes a very small number, how can anyone feel but that an attempt is being made to enact an unconstitutional measure?

Are the proponents of the bill sincerely proceeding upon the theory that it is the duty of Congress to enact legislation for the protection of human life in the States? If so, why not legislate against conspiracies to take human life at whatever time or place and in whatever manner they may effect their objective? Is it any more criminal to conspire to take the life of a Negro charged with rape than to conspire to take the life of a law-abiding citizen? Strike out seven words in section 1 of the bill, i. e., "in the custody of any peace officer", and amend the remainder of the bill accordingly, and you will direct its force against all conspiracies to take human life unlawfully; thus you will attempt to provide protection not alone for the Negro rapist but for law-abiding citizens who have died from the murderous machine guns of racketeers and gangsters in New York and Chicago. The gentlemen supporting the bill would, of course, consider no such amendment. They are proceeding upon the theory of a preacher in a small town who in his first sermon undertook to severely criticize usurers and those requiring unlawful interest of the poor. After the service some of the leading members of the church took him aside and cautioned him against this, pointing out that Banker Smith was a member of the congregation and might be offended. Next Sunday he talked about those who desecrated the Sabbath Day by keeping open their places of business in violation of law, and was promptly advised that this would not do, as several members of the church came within that category. After a few more equally unsuccessful attempts to attack sin in high places without offending his people, he finally asked, in desperation, "Well, then, tell me what I can talk about?" The leading members scratched their heads without reply, until finally, after long thought, a brother exclaimed, "Preacher, we ain't got but one Jew in town; give the Jews hell."

So the proponents of this measure are attempting to make somebody else clean their doorsteps and leaving their own littered with all sorts of trash.

Are their efforts, as represented by this bill, a violation of the Constitution?

There can be no reasonable doubt of that. But here let those who support too readily the idea of greatly increasing the Supreme Court pause to consider, especially the people of the South. If that legislation passes, what character of men, with what views upon the race problem, may be appointed to the Court? If the President favors this bill, as is currently reported, will the men he appoints to the Court be in favor of it also and vote to uphold its constitutionality? What views will those same men entertain upon other similar problems of vital interest to the South: On the question of whether our laws regulating the exercise of the right of suffrage shall continue to be upheld; on the question of whether, on account of those laws, legislation which almost passed after the last census to cut southern congressional representation and which would probably pass this House if it could vote on it today, should be upheld; on those bitter questions presented by legislation passed after the War between the States by which the Federal Government undertook to penalize hotel keepers, theaters, and all places of public amusement for refusing to entertain whites and Negroes upon equal terms, and to penalize State election officials for refusing to allow Negroes to vote? Against these rabid proposals, made by unthinking people who do not understand the problems of the South, the Supreme Court has been our protection. Shall we, because we do not like some of its decisions, help to bring about a condition which might well mean that such legislation should be upheld? Is it worth while to burn down the barn in an effort to kill a few rats?

These are things that it is not pleasant to say, but which I feel it is my duty to say. God grant that the dangers which I envision do not materialize, but I would far rather men would point to me in future as a man who in this trying time gave expression to foolish and unfounded fears than for them to say that in violation of my trust I helped to tear down the protection afforded to my people by the Constitution of the United States.

I certainly do not favor lynching. Its vast decrease is attributable to the fact that a great majority of the southern people do not favor it. When it occurs their newspapers, their preachers, and their leading men are caustic in their disapproval, and these forces are at all times active in building sentiment against it. It will be a sorry time for the Negro when he ceases reliance upon these great forces of public opinion, upon the efforts of a people who know and understand him to see that he is accorded justice, and relies instead upon a system of Federal penalties and upon United States marshals and Federal judges to jerk sheriffs, and even solicitors general and other prosecuting officials, around by the napes of the necks and put them in the Federal penitentiary.

You cannot get anywhere by attempting to tyrannize over a free people. A penalty of $2,000 or $10,000? When the blood of men is heated by news of a heinous crime upon womanhood such a penalty would have no more effect than a feather in a storm. Those not engaging in the violence would have to pay, but those engaged in it would pay no attention to the penalty. Only a year or so ago a mob in Tennessee in the course of a lynching burned their own courthouse, valued at $150,000. What attention would that mob have paid to the fact that their neighbors would have to pay a $10,000 penalty if they persisted? Absolutely none. This bill, if it should be passed and upheld as constitutional, would substitute the force of Federal law for the high moral purposes of a people who are themselves by the development of public sentiment greatly lessening the danger of lynching. I do not say that they will ever succeed entirely. Only those who come in contact with the more depraved members of the Negro race can appreciate the overpowering anger which sweeps through the hearts and minds of decent white men when they learn of an offense of the type on account of which lynchings usually occur. I do not say that justifies lynching. I do say that you have got to pass and enforce a law to change human nature before you can be absolutely assured that lynchings will never occur, but the best preventative in the meantime is to build up, not by force but by persuasion, a public sentiment which will hold them in check. That we are doing in the South. And that by your action here today, if it is concurred in by the Senate, and the bill signed by the President, you will go far to hinder and obstruct. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to one phase of this controversy which, in my opinion, has been overlooked in the debate raging around this bill. That is the effort of the States, the constituted authorities of the States, and the citizenship of this country to stamp out lynching and mob violence.

In the State of Alabama we have sufficient statutory authority to deal with the situation in its entirety. May I say that the citizenship of that State has cooperated with the Governor, the chief executive of the State, and with the duly constituted authorities of the State to stamp out this form of lawlessness. It is condemned by the press, the pulpit, in the schools, and in the everyday life of the citizenship of the State of Alabama. No one within the confines of that great State, nor, so far as I know, throughout the country, raises his voice in defense of mob violence or lynching.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we are not placing a penalty upon the efforts of the citizenship of these States who, through an enlightened public opinion and throughout the years, have instituted a process of reason to stamp out this form of lawlessness. As I say, I wonder if we are not placing a penalty upon those people by trying to superimpose upon the sovereign States of this Union the almighty hand of the Federal Government and attempt to place further and further in the individual lives of the citizenship of this country the weighty hand of the Federal Government in dealing with matters which should be left to the States and to the citizenship of the States.

May I say that for the first time in more than 10 years a case of lynching occurred early in this year in the State of Alabama? The authorities of the State moved promptly and vigorously in the matter. An investigation was ordered by the grand jury and the Governor of the State announced there would be no mob violence in that State, and if the grand jury failed in its duty he would instruct—and he did instruct—the attorney general of the State of Alabama to institute impeachment proceedings against the sheriff of the county involved if the evidence showed the sheriff had not lived up to his duty and responsibility.

If some of those who stand here today as proponents of this measure had done as some of us who are opposed to it—that is, had interposed their own life and bared their own breast to uphold the majesty of the law and save a human being from mob violence—you would know how far the South has gone in an attempt to stamp out this unspeakable crime. It happened to be my unhappy privilege to lead the troops which gave protection in entirety in one of the most famous criminal cases in the annals of jurisprudence in this country. I refer to the so-called Scottsboro case.

Let me plead with those who profess to follow Jefferson and Jackson not to direct this thrust at that section of the country which gave to the Nation Washington, Madison, Jefferson, and Jackson; the section of the country which has kept alive the flame of democracy when the rest of the Nation had repudiated it. [Applause.] Do not permit political expediency and radicalism masquerading under the guise of a pseudo liberalism lead constitutional democracy to the bier of fallen nations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BEAM). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the Members of the House who on yesterday, by a vote of 283 to 107, adopted the motion to discharge the Rules Committee and make it possible to bring up today H. R. 1507, the so-called Gavagan antilynching bill.

I strongly favor antilynching legislation. I am convinced that it is proper and necessary. In the first place, lynching is mob murder, one of the darkest spots on the records of our great American democracy. Mob murder has been condemned by every civilized nation of the world. Many of our Presidents, the platforms of the Republican and Democratic Parties, the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, civic, church, welfare, and labor associations and organizations representing more than 40,000,000 members, the American press, North, East, South, and West, and more than 70 percent of the American people, according to a recent survey of public opinion, have condemned lynching and have urged the passage by Congress of Federal antilynching laws.

It is now agreed that the taking of human life by mobs means the overthrow of the law, the courts, and the Government in the city, county, State, and Nation—in short, it is the substitution of anarchy for the law, the courts, and the Government. The mob knows no law, no justice, and no reason. In direct and positive violation of our State and Federal Constitutions, the mob becomes the accuser, the jury, the prosecutor, the witnesses, the court, and the executioner. In its mad and savage fury it takes the lives of the innocent as well as the guilty. It destroys the property of the individual, the city, the county, and the State that had no connection whatsoever with the alleged crime that stirred the mob's hate and fury. In this wonderful land of boasted freedom and guaranteed protection to the humblest citizen without regard to race, creed, or color by our State and Federal Constitutions we see innocent women, children, and men lynched and murdered by the mob, with accompanying scenes of brutality in burning, mutilation, and other acts that could find their parallel only among savage races and savage peoples.

It is to halt this lawlessness and uphold law and order in America that I favor the antilynching bill.

Since 1882 we have had approximately 5,200 lynchings, mob murders, in the United States. This represents almost an average of 100 per year, and approximately 95 percent of these mob murders have occurred in 12 of the so-called Southern and border States. In about 95 percent of these mob murders the victims have been of the Negro race. During that same period of time 15 or 16 States in the East, North, and West have not had a single lynching. There is something wrong. This measure undertakes to correct it.

WOMEN AND HOMES MUST BE PROTECTED

Practically all of the opponents of this legislation publicly express opposition to it because they say it violates the Federal Constitution. May I say to my good friends from the South that if we could convince you beyond a reasonable doubt this measure is constitutional, you then would not support it.

The opponents of this legislation tell us that lynch law is necessary to protect the women and the homes of our land.

No one could be more anxious to protect the virtue of our women and the sanctity of our homes than I am. No one could have a greater horror of the crime of rape than myself. In my opinion, the death penalty is the only adequate punishment to be meted out to the brute who commits a crime of this kind, and this punishment should apply to the white man as well as the black man.

If the mob should confine its murders to the execution of those guilty of rape, something might be said in extenuation of its taking the law into its own hands, but the sad commentary is that approximately 100 women, practically all of them black women, and a great many children have been lynched, and the records show that less than one-sixth of all the men who have been lynched were charged with any character of attack on women. No charge was made against the other five-sixths of the men lynched that they had attempted any attack on women. The records further show that subsequent investigation disclosed that many of these women and children were charged with trivial offenses or were innocent, and many of these in the one-sixth class of men were innocent of any crime. Of course, many of these women and children were lynched when the mob was on its mad rampage. They wanted human blood and we presume it satisfied the mob in a way to lynch women and children, especially the black women and children. The other five-sixths of men lynched were charged with murder or with some most trivial offenses, in many instances, such as the offense of "being too prosperous" or not showing so-called "proper respect for white men", and many others were innocent of any offense.

THE LAW IS SUFFICIENT

We have pointed out that approximately 95 percent of these lynched victims were colored people, and these lynchings have occurred in the southern or border States. In these States the grand juries, the petit juries, the prosecutors, and the judges are white men. The highest penalty that the law can exact is the life of the offender, the death penalty. We demand no greater penalty for treason against the United States Government. I have never yet read of a genuine rape case of a white woman by a black man in Southern or border States in which the death penalty was not inflicted. It is an easy matter to secure the death penalty against a black man who so offends against a white woman in these sections where lynchings are prevalent. The black man is indicted by a white grand jury, he is tried by a white petit jury, the witnesses are white people, the prosecutor is a white man, and the judge is a white man, and these jurors, prosecutors, and judges are just as anxious to protect the womanhood and homes of this land as are the lynchers, and if the black man is guilty there is little doubt but what the death penalty will be inflicted. Of course, in this orderly procedure in the court the innocent person, however infamous the charge, should be, and in most cases will be, protected. What American citizen, white or black, is so depraved as to desire to take the lives of innocent women, children, and men even though they be of the black race?

Does the mob desire more than the death penalty? This brings us to a contemplation of the scenes of savagery and fiendish brutality so frequently in evidence at these lynchings. Slow death by burning or mutilation, not in the presence of a few men but witnessed by thousands of men, women, and even small children and to subject, as have many times occurred, innocent black women, children, and men to such savagery and brutality by the mob, causes even the hardened mind to revolt.

The mob is the father of anarchy. Anarchy knows no constitution and no law. The mob breaks down respect for the law, the courts, and the government.

LET US PROTECT THE INNOCENT

There is ample authority under our State and Federal Constitutions and laws, bulwarked by the chivalry of the manhood of this Nation, to protect womanhood and the sanctity of our homes. Let us insist upon the enforcement of our laws; at the same time, let us provide for the protection of innocent women, children, and men, even though they may be black.

No doubt all of us in our experiences in our own communities have observed how easy it is to make a false charge against some humble person, especially if he is black, and stir up mob feeling. Some 25 years ago in my home county a white woman was attacked. She was unconscious. The community was aroused. They began a search, and soon ran across a black man, a stranger, who was passing through that section. He was arrested and hurried to the county jail. That night a mob began to gather. The Negro protested his innocence. Our circuit judge, the Honorable Flem D. Sampson, who later on became Governor of Kentucky, resided in this county seat, my home town, and but for his heroic action in arming himself and others and protecting the little county jail through the entire night, that black man would have been taken out and lynched. On the next day this white lady returned to consciousness, and from the hairs found under her fingernails and description given by her it was conclusively shown that it was a white man who had made this attack, and not the homeless stranger who was passing through our county.

On another occasion during my practice as a lawyer a young Negro boy was charged with making an attack on a child 3 years of age. The child's mother made the charge. Violence was threatened. The Negro boy was indicted and tried; and when all the proof was heard, both for the State and for the accused, it was quite clear that the Negro boy was innocent.

When the Dyer antilynching bill was up for consideration in the House in 1922, our distinguished Democratic colleague, Hon. Ben Johnson, of Bardstown, Ky., took a vigorous stand in favor of the Dyer bill. As he was the only Democrat south of the Ohio River who took such stand, I was interested to know why, and said, "Why is it you are the only Democrat south of the Ohio River favoring this bill? Mr. Johnson then related the following interesting story of an occurrence which took place when he was 19 years of age:

A Negro man who had worked for the Johnson family hurried to the Johnson home one night and told young Ben Johnson that his son was down in the jail at Bardstown and a mob was gathering to lynch him. Mr. Johnson hurried to the jail, armed himself, and stood guard for the greater part of the night with two pistols and threatened to shoot the first man who attempted to enter the jail. He saved the colored boy from being lynched. This young colored boy was charged with killing a white man. I regret to say that in many places in our country such a charge against a black man or boy would be sufficient for the mob to take charge and lynch the accused. This boy was indicted and tried. The proof developed that a large white man filled with liquor had made repeated attacks upon this young boy, kicked him, cuffed him, and beat him up, and continued to follow the boy, and the boy picked up a club and hit the white man in self-defense and killed him. Mr. Johnson further related that he thus had had close contact with a mob that knows neither right, justice, mercy, or law, and from that day until the Dyer bill was up, he said, he had strongly favored antilynching legislation. Some declared that he would be defeated for Congress because he had voted for the Dyer bill; but if it did anything, it strengthened him in his congressional district. He remained in the House until he voluntarily left, after serving longer continuously than any other Kentuckian has ever served in the House of Representatives.

I know of another instance in Kentucky where a white man was intoxicated and he ran into a Negro at night in his drunken condition. Neither one knew the other. The Negro, because of the attack, became alarmed, drew a pistol, and shot the white man. The jury refused to put the Negro to death. The mob gathered, took the Negro from the jail, and lynched him.

The mob not only does great harm to our laws, our constitutions, our courts, but it hurts the community and all those who participate in it.

IS THIS LEGISLATION NECESSARY AND PROPER?

The nearly 5,200 lynchings we have had in this country in some 12 States, mostly black women, children, and men, and the 83 lynchings we have had in this country, confined almost exclusively to these same States, since President Roosevelt assumed office on March 4, 1933, and the interest and concern expressed by the press, pulpit, platform, and the declarations of our two major political parties and the 59 bills introduced in the Seventy-fifth Congress which began on January 5, 1937, and the recent expression of public opinion of this Nation showing that 70 percent or more of our people condemn lynching and urge antilynching legislation, go far in making out a case that this legislation is proper and necessary.

I was a Member of the House, spoke in behalf of and helped to pass the Dyer antilynching bill in 1922. We passed this bill in the House by a vote of 231 to 119. The Republicans then had control of the House. Every Democrat in the House with the exception of six or seven voted against the bill and only one Democrat south of the Ohio River voted for the bill. The Dyer bill then went to the Senate which was then controlled by the Republicans. The able Judiciary Committee of the Senate after careful investigation, reported favorably the bill, stating that it was a proper, necessary, and constitutional measure. The Republicans tried to secure action on the Dyer bill in the Senate, but the distinguished and able Democratic leader of the Senate at that time, Hon. Oscar Underwood, of Alabama, organized a filibuster and prevented consideration of the bill. He at the time declared that the Democratic Party took full responsibility for defeating the Dyer bill in the Senate.

In the Seventy-third Congress the Democrats were in control of the House and Senate. Many antilynching bills were introduced. Senators Costigan and WAGNER introduced a bill in the Senate. After hearings and careful consideration, the able Judiciary Committee of the Senate reported favorably the Costigan-Wagner bill. They declared it was necessary, proper, and constitutional, but they were unable in the Senate to get it up for consideration because of the Southern Democratic leadership in the Senate.

In the Seventy-fourth Congress the Costigan-Wagner bill was again introduced as Senate bill 24. The powerful Judiciary Committee of the Senate, made up of distinghished lawyers, after hearings and careful consideration reported the bill favorably on March 18, 1935, but this Southern Democratic leadership in the Senate through filibusters and other means prevented action.

I wish to call attention to some of the statements in this report, numbered 340, to accompany S. 24, Seventy-fourth Congress. You will observe that this Senate Committee points out that when there is a real threat of the passage of an antilynching bill, lynchings almost disappear in this country, but when the threat of the passing of the bill is no longer apparent, then the lynchers go on another spree. This report also used this language:

> A continuation of the practice of lynching, coupled with a complete failure of the government of those States involved to apprehend and punish the participators of these crimes, supports the need for Federal legislation.

This charge is not made by Republicans—it is the report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate controlled by the Democrats. They point out that a continuation of the practice of lynching, coupled with a complete failure of the Governments of the States involved to punish the mobs supports the need for Federal legislation. That makes out the case for us who are urging this legislation.

This report cites a score or more decisions of Federal courts and a number of decisions of the Supreme Court supporting the constitutionality of this legislation.

They also call attention in their report to section 1 of the fourteenth amendment, which provides:

> Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

A number of the States of this Union have denied to its citizens, especially the black citizens, the equal protection of the laws, and therefore it is not only proper but the duty of the Federal Government to step in and give them such protection.

The report concludes with this statement:

> It is the opinion of the committee that the proposed legislation is "appropriate legislation" to discourage and prevent the evil of lynching wherever in the United States that evil exists or is or may be committed. It is the belief of the committee that the proposed measure does not propose an invasion or subversion of the rights of States. On the contrary, the measure is an aid to the several States in assuring to their citizens the equal protection of the laws, both State and Federal, to which all citizens are entitled.

A reading of that report and the cases cited, it seems to me, clearly establishes the fact that this legislation is proper, necessary, and constitutional.

WEAKNESS OF THE GAVAGAN AND OTHER BILLS

The Gavagan, Mitchell, and other bills only provide for cases in which the lynched person was in custody. Of the more than 5,000 persons lynched, only 49 percent were in custody of the officers of a State or a subdivision thereof. The other 51 percent lynched were not in the custody of any officer. There is no provision in this bill for protection of persons lynched not in custody of the officer or officers of a State or subdivision thereof. I regard this as a serious weakness. In States where lynching might be winked at officers could fail to take the accused who might be sought by the mob into custody, and in that way no prosecutions could be had or damages awarded in a Federal court. Some State or county officials might say, "Why take the chance of being prosecuted or the county being subjected to pay damages?" and neglect or fail to take the accused person sought by the mob into custody.

I trust that the author of this bill [Mr. GAVAGAN] may submit some proper amendment that will relieve this otherwise splendid measure of this serious objection.

Of course, there are some friends of this legislation who express the fear that if all lynched persons were included it might render this measure unconstitutional. I might say that many States have laws similar to this bill providing punishment for the officers who fail or neglect to do their duty, or who conspire with the mob, and provide also for the recovery of damages from the county for the benefit of the injured person, or in the event of death, for the benefit of his estate.

THE MITCHELL BILL

The Mitchell antilynching bill was introduced by our colored colleague from Chicago. A motion was made in the House on last Wednesday, April 7, to bring up for consideration the Mitchell antilynching bill. This motion was defeated by a vote of 256 to 112. After the defeat of his bill he made a statement in which he charged that his bill was defeated by the Republicans because they were offended over a speech that he made last April attacking the Republican Party and Abraham Lincoln.

This statement does not square with the facts. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had expressed strong opposition to the bill of our colored colleague and strong support of the Gavagan bill. This association charged that the Mitchell bill was a mere gesture. It was opposed by this association as well as a majority of those favoring antilynching legislation because of its weakness.

Some Republicans voted to bring up the Mitchell bill in the hope that when brought up the Gavagan bill could be substituted for it. Now, there are only 88 Republicans in the House. There were three times as many votes cast against the motion to bring up the Mitchell bill as there are Republicans in the House. Therefore the statement of our colored colleague from Chicago that consideration of his bill was defeated by the Republicans is not substantiated by the facts.

Many of the real friends of antilynching legislation were sorely disappointed that the only colored Member in Congress should introduce a bill that did not give real protection, so far as his race is concerned. For instance, the Mitchell bill provides that any officer having custody of a prisoner who should conspire and join with the mob in lynching and putting to death his prisoner would be subject to the very mild punishment of imprisonment from 2 to 10 years.

Of course, if an officer should conspire with a mob to take the life of his prisoner, that would be willful murder, and every State in the Union provides the punishment of death or life imprisonment in the case of willful murder.

In other respects the Mitchell bill does not measure up to the provisions of the Gavagan bill. The Republicans and many Democrats are supporting the Gavagan bill because it is a much better bill than the Mitchell bill.

LAW APPLIES ONLY TO STATES FAILING TO GIVE PROTECTION

My friends from Alabama and some other southern States who have spoken insist they have enacted State laws that afford full protection to the black as well as the white citizens residing in those States. If that be true, there is no need for alarm over this legislation. Section 2 of the bill before the House provides:

> If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage—

And so forth.

It is clear that the Federal Government under this bill cannot step in unless the State and its subdivisions are in default. The Federal Government cannot interfere in Alabama until and unless Alabama or such other State fails to protect the lives and persons of its citizens. If Alabama or any other State affords such protection this law will not be operative in Alabama or any other State providing such protection.

All this bill proposes to do is to protect citizens throughout the United States in their constitutional rights of life and person when the States fail to protect them. That is all. If the States fail, the Federal Government takes jurisdiction to investigate the lynchings with the power to indict and try those guilty of lynching and fix the punishment of the officers who fail or neglect in their duty at a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or both such fine and imprisonment, and if any such officer or employee of any such State government or governmental subdivision thereof acting as such officer or employee under authority of State law shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person or persons who is a member of the mob to injure or put such prisoner to death on conviction such officer and all other parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment of not less than 5 nor more than 25 years, and it further provides that any county in which any person is seriously injured or put to death by the mob shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representative in case of death of such person for a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages, which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county in the United States district court of the judicial district wherein such person is injured or put to death and this damage action shall be prosecuted by the United States district attorney of the district in the United States district court for such district.

It has been established beyond question that only in rare instances do local officials investigate and prosecute these crimes and because of local sentiment and conditions nothing really ever comes of the investigation. However, before the Federal court can take jurisdiction it must be made to appear to such court first, that the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending, prosecuting, and punishing such offenders under the law of the State shall have failed, neglected, or refused to apprehend, prosecute, or punish such offenders, or second, that the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offenses are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is a possibility that those guilty of such offenses will not be punished in such State courts.

The State officials are given 30 days after the lynching to apprehend, indict, and diligently prosecute those guilty of the lynching. It can be seen at once that the State can avoid the operation of this law by giving equal protection of its laws to all of its citizens and by prosecuting those engaged in the mob. The Federal courts being free from the local or political influences and having the aid of the Federal Bureau of Investigation these lynchers will be apprehended and punished and we predict that this will in a short time eliminate almost entirely, if not entirely, this character of lawlessness in the United States.

IS THE ADMINISTRATION FOOLING THE COLORED PEOPLE?

In an address before the House on June 2, 1936, I pointed out that the real Democratic Party is in the South and that the House of Representatives and the Senate are controlled by its leadership in the House and Senate, and that the administration would not pass any antilynching bill in the Seventy-fourth Congress. The Democrats in the southern and border States are practically a unit against the Gavagan antilynching bill now before us and are against any Federal antilynching bill, but the northern, eastern, and western Democrats with the aid of the Republicans, no doubt, will pass this bill in the House. It will then go to the Senate, and while I am not a prophet, or the son of a prophet, it is my honest opinion that it will not pass the Senate, or at least it will be tied up somewhere along the legislative road and this session of the Seventy-fifth Congress will adjourn without any antilynching legislation. It can be and will be passed by an overwhelming majority if the administration orders it passed. The Democrats have more than 3-to-1 majority in the House and have nearly 6-to-1 majority in the Senate, and I am quite sure that more than 95 percent of the Republicans in the House and Senate will vote to pass a real antilynching bill. The Republican Party has favored antilynching legislation for many years. The Democratic Party has always opposed it.

We have heard much and we shall hear more in the House and Senate from our Democrats in the southern and border States denouncing this measure as unconstitutional. They and the administration had no qualms about the Constitution when they were passing the President's "must" bills to take care of the peanut, pigs, and so forth. They denounced the Supreme Court for deciding it was unconstitutional to establish birth control among hogs, burn pigs, destroy cotton, and ennoble peanuts. It was all right for the administration to pass laws of that kind and all wrong for the Supreme Court to hold them unconstitutional. Our constitutional friends here who are opposing this legislation seemed to think it was all right for the peanut or a pig to get between them and the Constitution, but it certainly is all wrong for innocent black women, children, and men, who are citizens of the United States to invoke the protection of the Constitution, the courts, and the Government. [Applause.] The President put his "must" on the peanut and birth control of hogs and forced them through. The President can put the Gavagain antilynching bill through if he will put his "must" on it. He could have put it through in the Seventy-third Congress. He could have put it through in the Seventy-fourth Congress, and I might say that there are more than enough of northern, western, and eastern Democrats in the House and Senate, who, if they desire, with the help of the Republicans—and they will have the help of the Republicans—to put this antilynching bill through, and even pass it over the President's veto. If it is not put through we know the administration has been deceiving and is now deceiving the colored people of this country.

The great Judiciary Committee of the Senate, controlled by the Democrats, in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses, reported that this legislation is proper, necessary, and constitutional. It will not do for our Democrat friends to say that the States can and will handle this matter. They have had ample time to give the people "equal protection of the law", and it has been clearly established, as pointed out in the Judiciary Committee reports of the Senate in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses—

There has been a complete failure of government of those States involved to apprehend and punish the perpetrators of these crimes.

There has been wanton denial of this protection, especially to the colored people in the Southern and border States.

Of the nearly 5,200 people who have been lynched, no punishment whatsoever was inflicted on the lynchers in 99.02 percent of the lynchings, and in eight-tenths of 1 percent of the lynchings where punishment of the lynchers followed the punishment was slight. The two exceptions during 1935–36 were the two Black Legion lynchings of Silas Coleman and Charles A. Poole in the State of Michigan, where the lynchers were given life sentences. In the many lynchings occurring in the year of 1935–36 in the southern and border States, not a single lyncher has been punished and practically no investigations were made, yet in a number of cases the lynchings took place in the presence of public officials and hundreds and hundreds of men, women, and children. As I recall, there were indictments in only one or two cases, and the men indicted in one case were acquitted. This was the case of Baxter Bell, who was arrested on the alleged charge of slapping a white woman. He was taken from the city marshal of White Bluff, Tenn., and a deputy sheriff, and shot to death by five relatives of the woman. The killing was done with the deputy sheriff's gun. The relatives borrowed from the deputy sheriff his pistol at the same time they took the prisoner. The gun was returned to the officer about 20 minutes later. Reports published in the Nashville Tennessean stated the woman was drinking beer in a negro store at the time the slapping is said to have occurred. When the jury returned its verdict of not guilty, Judge Courtney, presiding, declared, "I am astonished at your verdict." From the investigations of all of these lynchings in the southern and border States in the years of 1935–36, and the 83 lynchings during President Roosevelt's administration, there is ample justification for the statement in the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill—

A continuation of the practice of lynching, coupled with a complete failure of the government of those States involved to apprehend and punish the perpetrators of these crimes, supports the need of Federal legislation.

PROTECT LIVES

Some of our southern friends have been urging congressional action against sit-down strikes. I would not minimize the importance of that issue, but may I urge that if Congress has the constitutional right to legislate in regard to sit-down strikes, where property rights may alone be involved, it seems to me that Congress certainly has the right to legislate in cases involving "stand-up" lynchings and mob murders where the lives, in many instances, of innocent women, children, and men are involved; and some of our southern friends are alarmed because this measure might create additional bureau activity. When did these good Democrats become alarmed about bureaucrats in Washington? They have been voting for the past 4 years for laws piling up bureaus on bureaus and have created more bureaus and commissions than were created from the beginning of our Government in 1789 to 1933. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, we are concerned here with a proposition that the Federal Government be called upon to supervise the execution and administration of certain State criminal laws. The proposition is based on the premise that the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution empowers the United States Government to guarantee to the citizens of the several States "the equal protection of the law." Sponsors of the measure contend that this equal-protection clause is sufficient to cover the purposes of the bill, and that should it become law its constitutionality would be upheld in the courts.

I did not rise, Mr. Chairman, to enter upon a technical discussion of constitutional law. I do not wish to split hairs with my colleagues who apparently believe the Federal Government has the right to supervise the police forces of the various States, counties, and municipalities of this country. I rose to discuss a broad question of policy and the broad, underlying principle by which the Federal Government of the United States has contracted with several States of this Union to leave the administration of certain local affairs to the judgment and the will of the people within these local jurisdictions.

The Union was formed for the mutual protection of the States against outside aggression and to assure a peaceful and friendly intercourse among themselves. Definite rights, privileges, and responsibilities were reserved to the States as sovereign entities.

Throughout all our history as a united nation we have preserved the tradition of this word "sovereign." The question is, "Do we, and shall we, preserve it in fact?" The Century Dictionary defines "sovereign" as "being above all others, or supreme, in character, excellence, and importance." If this be true, it is from the sovereign States of this Union that the Federal Government derives its power as a sovereign nation. And it must be that surrender of rights and responsibilities of the States can be accomplished only by the will of the people of the States.

In the bill we have before us, it is proposed that, by act of Congress, jurisdiction hitherto reserved exclusively to the States and their subdivisions be usurped by the Federal Government, and that the acts of legally appointed State officers be supervised by the Federal courts.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, classifies a certain type of homicide as lynching. It seems to find this type of murder more reprehensible than other forms of death by inflicted violence, and, at least by inference, sets up the premise that certain of the Southern States are unable to prevent its occurrence. It proposes to inflict penalties in the Federal courts on local officers unable to prevent mob violence against prisoners in their custody, and to subject counties in which lynchings may occur to the payment of damages. You cannot enforce the judgment against a county. These provisions, it is argued, will have the effect of increasing the vigilance of local peace officers and have a tendency to create local public sentiment against lynch mobs.

Now this is all very well, but the facts of our recent history do not bear out the seeming necessity for Federal intervention of this character. Even if this proposal could be brought into harmony with the underlying spirit of the Constitution, which I believe it cannot, there still remains a record of steady decline in the number of lynchings as a result of steady improvement of State laws and State law enforcement.

Addressing the Senate in 1935, Senator WAGNER, of New York, coauthor of a bill almost identical with the one here under consideration, cited figures which clearly show a marked decline in the number of lynchings in the United States.

"There have been 5,071 lynchings in the United States since 1882", said the Senator, "and 280 since 1922." Now simple arithmetic would show that during the 40 years from 1882 to 1922, during which time the country's population doubled, the average was about 120 lynchings a year, but in the 13 years from 1922 to 1935 this average had declined to less than 22 a year. As a matter of fact, the whole trend of the record has been downward since the 1882 date, and in 1934 the number was 15, in 1935 there were 20 lynchings, and in 1936 there were 8. Does not this seem to indicate that State and local law-enforcement agencies are handling this problem with effect?

Some advocates of this measure have called attention to the action of various States in adopting antilynching legislation, particularly Virginia, who passed an antilynching law in 1928, stating there has been no lynching in that State since the passage of the law, and that the State of Virginia has suffered no loss by reason of the fact that it, by its own hands, has wiped out this form of lawlessness.

Now, this is a very outspoken admission that the States themselves are entirely competent to handle their own police problems, regardless of whether or not there is any constitutional inhibition to Federal interference. And Virginia is not the only State in which so-called antilynching laws exist. But every State has a law against murder; and it does not matter whether it comes from the poisoner's vial, the machine gun of the gangster, or the rope of a lynch mob, it is still murder, punishable according to the laws of the State in which it is committed.

The people of my State do not believe in lynching, notwithstanding she has been denounced in severe terms. The courts, the press, the pulpit, and the bar are all opposed to lynching in all of its forms. However, there is not a father in the South who would not infinitely prefer to see his daughter dead than for her to become the victim of a Negro rapist; and, of course, under these circumstances it is not human for parents or relatives to control their feelings, and I feel that parents and relatives in all other sections of this country would have the same feeling for the helpless victims of such brutes.

I dare say that no one in this House condones the illegal use of "third degree" methods, for which police of large cities have become notorious. But would anyone here suggest that this particular scandal would be sufficient reason for adoption of Federal legislation to supervise the police of our large northern cities? The "third degree" is manifestly illegal and a violation of the constitutional rights of citizens. And it is not perpetrated by an outraged citizenry. It is perpetrated by peace officers themselves.

If this Congress undertakes to set up Federal supervision over State statutes applying to one particular form of crime, then this or succeeding Congresses could pass laws providing for the supervision of any other or all State statutes. This bill, if enacted into law, can easily become an opening wedge to complete domination of State and local laws by the Federal Government.

So we come to the real point of the issue. The record shows that under State jurisdiction lynchings are becoming fewer and further apart, even though the population of this country has been increasing very rapidly. But in the past a great number of the lynchings which have taken place in Southern States have been of Negroes. In the meantime some of the large cities have developed big Negro populations, groups sufficient in size to become political considerations. These groups have been organized by politicians and their votes have become important factors in local, and even national, elections.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that these facts speak for themselves. The practice of lynching is almost entirely disappearing from existence in this country, and this has been brought about by local law enforcement within the States. The sudden demand for Federal antilynching legislation can, therefore, be little more than an emotional appeal to large groups of Negro voters in the North. I for one know that the Federal Government cannot improve upon the law enforcement practiced by the States, and I am confident that this proposed usurpation of States' rights was never contemplated by the Constitution. The real friends of the Negroes are still in the South, and everyone, with the exception of a few political leaders, will admit this. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, one of the striking features of this bill is that the Members who offer it, and who are working so actively to secure its passage, have the least knowledge of the conditions which they claim the bill will remedy, and the least understanding of what the effect of such a law would be. While, of course, they claim that this bill will apply to all of the States in the Union, yet it is well known that it is to seek Federal control of conditions within the Southern States. They are seeking to legislate on a subject that they do not know anything about. Their interest can be attributed only to the presence in their congressional districts of a limited Negro voting population which is demanding this legislation as the price of their support. My prediction is that experience is going to teach them that they are paying a terrific price.

My second reaction to this bill is that it is clearly unconstitutional in that it seeks to extend the authority of the Federal Government to a subject which is exclusively within the home rule of the individual States. The title of the bill recites that its purpose is "to assure to persons the equal protection of the laws", which shows that those who present the bill are claiming as their constitutional authority the language in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which provides that no State shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

I shall not attempt a discussion of the constitutional question at this time. First, because there can be no doubt in any honest legal mind that this bill is unconstitutional; secondly, because other Members have heretofore and will hereafter discuss that question. But in passing I refer you to the Civil Rights cases (109 U. S. 3), where the Supreme Court said:

> Individual invasion of individual rights is not the subject matter of the fourteenth amendment.

And in the case of Barbier v. Connolly (113 U. S. 27) the Court said:

> Neither the fourteenth amendment nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the police power of the State to regulate and promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people.

And in Keller v. United States (113 U. S. 138) the same Court said:

> The power to establish ordinary police regulations has been left with the individual States and cannot be assumed by the National Government.

In the Cruikshank case (92 U. S. 542) the Court said:

> The fourteenth amendment simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the State upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society. The duty of protecting all of its citizens in the enjoyment of an equality of rights was originally assumed by the States, and it remains there.

And in United States v. Harris (106 U. S. 638) the Supreme Court approved the Cruikshank case, and said:

> The fourteenth amendment is not a guaranty against the commission of individual offenses; and the power of Congress, whether expressed or implied, to legislate for the enforcement of such a guaranty does not extend to the passage of laws for the suppression of crime within the States.

The most casual reading of these decisions will convince any impartial mind that Congress has no power or authority to enact or enforce the pending bill.

Now let us see what this bill seeks to do. It first declares that if any State, or any governmental subdivision thereof, neglects or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual, it is deemed to have denied to such person equal protection of the laws of the State.

Then it provides that an officer shall be guilty of a felony and punished by a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for 5 years, or both, if such officer, being charged with the duty to protect the life or person of any individual, or having such person in his custody, fails to either make all diligent effort to protect such individual from being injured or put to death, or make all diligent effort to perform his duties in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting all persons participating. As a State law, no one has any objecton to that section, and most of the States have similar laws; of course, with varying degrees of punishment. Everyone expects an officer to do his duty and agrees that he should be properly punished if he intentionally fails to do so. But we cannot agree that it is the right of Congress to assume control over and seek to punish our State officials. I resent it personally, because I know that the law-enforcement officers of my State are as fine, as true, as brave, and as loyal as any on the face of this earth.

The bill then provides that an officer shall be guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment of not less than 5 years and not more than 25 years if such officer, having in his custody or control a prisoner, shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to injure or put to death such person, or to suffer such person to be taken or obtained from his custody to be injured or put to death. In the first place, there is no justification for such a slanderous reflection on the officers of the law, and I do not care what kind of reports your National Association for the Advancement of Colored People might make, I do not believe any officer of my State has ever conspired to cause the death of a prisoner in his custody. In the next place, under the terms of this section, if the prisoner is forcefully taken from an officer then such officer is left with no defense, except his own death, which would be of little avail on this earth. That is, your bill provides that if a prisoner is taken from an officer he must be imprisoned for from 5 to 25 years; the only other choice left to the officer is to be killed in the defense of his prisoner. No such requirement of an officer has ever before been suggested in the history of criminal legislation. You measure the life of some of the finest men on this earth, the honest, upstanding, respected officers of the law, as of less value than that of some rapist or murderer who is in his custody. Truly, you have gone wild. But that is not all. Any officer who has any regard for his own life, or has any thought for the wife and children dependent upon him, will never make an arrest of a person when he has any cause to believe that an effort may be made to take such person away from him. No man can say what another will do, and I do not know what my sheriffs and policemen will do, but under this bill you are certainly placing before them the temptation to turn their backs on every rapist and murderer, to make no effort to arrest, and to leave such person free and at large, and if he receives any punishment at all it will have to be at the hands of a mob or other unauthorized persons. Wild—why, you have gone delirious.

The bill next declares that the United States district court shall have jurisdiction to try and to punish any and all persons who participate in such mob or assemblage, provided it appears to the court that the State officers failed, neglected, or refused to either apprehend, prosecute, or punish such offender, or it appears that the jurors in the State court are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty of the offense will not be punished in the State court. And that failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict such persons, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall constitute prima-facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal above mentioned.

This section is an indictment of the courts and jurors of my State, and I resent that, too. They are just as fair, just as impartial, and have as high a sense of duty as the courts and jurors in the States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Illinois, or any other State. If this is your conception of legislation to produce good feeling between the races or promote the general welfare of this Nation, then it would be best to let us go our own way, as once we sought, as there can be little in common between us.

Not satisfied with the unheard-of provisions above mentioned, it is next provided that any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob shall be liable to the injured person or to his estate for not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as damages, which sum may be recovered in the United States district court. And in the event that the person put to death is transported from one county to another, the county in which he is seized and also the county to which he is carried and put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay this forfeiture. Surely, gentlemen, there can be no limit to what you will do to satisfy the members of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People. Here you ask that the honest, hard-working, law-abiding citizens of a community should be taxed to the extent of $10,000 should three or more irresponsible or enraged people seek to punish some rapist or murderer, although the remainder of the community had no knowledge of such contemplated action nor had given any approval to the same. And then, if the mob should step across the highway or row across the river which happens to mark the county line, then the people of that county, ignorant of the crime and innocent of any participation therein, must also be taxed to pay $10,000 to the widow of such murderer or rapist. I believe this is the first proposal I have ever heard of which seeks in every instance to protect the guilty and punish the innocent.

The last provision is that the judge of the United States district court is not required to try such cases in the county or division where the crime takes place or where the proceedings are filed, but may order and direct that such suit or prosecution be tried in any place in his district which he may designate. This, too, sets a new precedent in criminal law. And if you should get by with this, I presume that you will next bring in a bill to require that such cases be transferred for trial to the Harlem district of New York.

It has been said in remarks on this bill that the President has a deep concern in lynching, that he has denounced it a "vile form of collective murder" and without excuse; it is intimated that the President is supporting this bill and we are appealed to "to follow the lead of our enlightened leader in the White House." But I cannot believe the President, however much he may disapprove of lynching, has the least interest in this bill or will ever put his signature of official approval on it.

I believe that the President, who has made Georgia his second home, is sufficiently acquainted with conditions in my State and all over the South to know we are able to solve our own local problems of this kind; that we know how to keep friendly and proper relations between the races, and that we do not need the Federal Bureau of Investigation and a district court and a threat of imprisonment over our officers and a liability for indemnity over our heads in order to properly conduct our home affairs. I am sure that if the President were at liberty to speak freely he would tell you that he feels safer and more free from harm while at Warm Springs, Ga., than at any other place in this Nation. There among a simple, honest, law-abiding, law-respecting, and native American citizenry he dismisses his secret service, climbs in his old roadster, and rides alone whenever and wherever he pleases, free from harm or alarm.

I say to you that this bill, if it becomes the law, will do many times more harm than good. I predict, gentlemen, and God knows I hope I am wrong, that such a law as this will bring on 10 times more lynchings than we have had in the past. Some of our Negro population is law abiding and is making a real effort to maintain proper relations between the races, but there are some that have no respect for the law or the constituted authorities, and when you give this latter class cause to believe that the Federal Government is back of them and is protecting them, it is going to bring on a condition most difficult to handle. I pray it will never again be necessary for the Klan to protect the South, but those of you from other parts of this Nation are showing mighty little consideration for our conditions down home.

Let me beg you, let me appeal to you, to your manhood, to your statesmanship, to let us handle our own local troubles in our own way. You must agree that we are making wonderful progress in this matter. The records show that in 1892 there were 226 people lynched, in 1932 there were 38, while last year there were 8, and so far this year there has been only 1. Do not you think we are doing a pretty good job of a bad situation? Do you think these efforts on our part justify this attempt on the part of Members from other sections of the Nation, who know nothing of our problems, and care less, to force on us the powers of the Federal Government in purely local or State matters?

The Members pushing this bill say that they are "firmly convinced that there has been a diminution in the number of lynchings" and that "the South is entitled to great credit for the real progress it has made"; yet, in the next breath, they say that the States in the South are not correcting the evil and that we need the G-men and the Federal courts on our neck.

Of course, the fact that there were only eight lynchings last year and only one this year forced them to admit that there has been a great and steady decrease, and, if circumstances were different, they would go further and admit that there was no need for a law of this kind; but, as I believe, for the sole purpose of trying to satisfy and gain the good wishes of a certain class of voters, they claim that this law is necessary because we might some time have a return of the old conditions. If that was sound argument, would it not require us to pass a law requiring the city of New York or the city of Chicago to pay the victims of racketeers $10,000 in each case from fear there will be an early return of the terrible crime conditions existing in those cities a short time ago. Certainly the innocent victim of a racketeer loses his life or his property without due process of law and is more entitled to protection than is a confessed rapist.

May I say that for my part I have heard enough of the horrors of lynching? I do not approve of them. I do not believe that the people who engage in them approve, either. In such act they are controlled by two emotions. First, they are seeking to protect and defend something more sacred than the law and more sacred than life itself; and, secondly, they are themselves temporarily the natural victims of a passion and of impulses beyond human control.

I say it is strange you spend all your time describing the horrors of the crime of lynching and have uttered not one word condemning the acts which have brought them on. You try to picture the party lynched as a poor, defenseless, innocent, upright, law-abiding citizen denied the equal protection of the law, when in the great majority of cases he has himself been guilty of not only violating the highest written law, committing the most diabolical crime, but has also violated every principle of decency, of manhood, of womanhood, and of the most sacred possessions of mankind.

You men of the North, the East, and the West do not come talking to me about what you call the great, horrible crime of lynching. We can handle our own troubles. You go home and clean up your own back yards of some of its nasty pile of crime, filth, disloyalty, and disregard for the law. And before you come back read again one of the greatest messages ever uttered by the Son of the Master of us all:

Let him who is without sin cast the first stone.

[Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, this seems to have developed into a sectional fight. I happen to come from the northernmost part of one of the most Northern States of the United States, and I feel this bill is just as much a slap in the face to my State as it is to any other State in the Union.

I have taken an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States, and if there was ever a piece of legislation that is flagrantly unconstitutional on its face, it is this piece of proposed legislation. We have heard gentlemen on the floor of the House say we did not have constitutional authority to pass legislation to rid this Nation of the menace of sit-down strikes. The sit-down strike, in my opinion, is mob violence that will undermine the democracy of this Nation, and, still, being mob violence, they tell us we do not have the constitutional right to pass on legislation of that kind. Then, in the next breath, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] comes here and states that this kind of legislation which is nothing more or less than political browbeating of the worst type; this sectional slurring thing is constitutional. When he and his kind stand on the floor of this House and talk about protecting human rights above property rights, then I fear for the future of this Nation if left in the hands of such men who change their opinions overnight or to suit political expediency. I am led to believe they would sell their country and its Constitution for their own political advancement.

I notice in this bill you have placed a penalty upon any county into which a person who is seized by a mob may be transported; in other words, if a mob in an adjoining county picks up a person and then steps across the line into an innocent county, you make that county liable in damages.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOOK. In just a moment. I ask anybody on the floor of this House whether or not he is willing to penalize an innocent county under a situation of that kind? If this is good legislation, I do not know anything about good legislation.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to answer him?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am telling the gentleman if he will read the bill he will find out that his statement is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. HOOK. All right; let us read the bill.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a short question?

Mr. HOOK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman think that if we pass this bill it ought to give control of the Harlem district to Tammany Hall in perpetuity?

Mr. HOOK. It probably would.

Section 6, on page 5 of the bill, provides:

> In the event that any person so put to death shall have been transported by such mob or riotous assemblage from one county to another county during the time intervening between his seizure and putting to death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the forfeiture herein provided.

Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. GAVAGAN. No; the gentleman was talking about an innocent county. The second county is the one in which the man is put to death. If that is innocent, I do not know anything about innocence.

Mr. HOOK. Then the other county is innocent. One of them must be innocent. The gentleman does not know anything about his bill.

Mr. GAVAGAN. And so far as I know, Tammany Hall never hung or mobbed anybody.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it has been so often stated in the course of this debate that this bill is completely unconstitutional that I guess a repetition of that opinion is hardly in order, although that is my opinion. I wish to discuss the matter a little from the standpoint of my own State of North Carolina and say something about what has happened there and what I conceive to be the unwisdom of this kind of legislation for the attainment of the objective in view. Our State for a long time has had well-considered statutes dealing with the subject of lynching. It is not only a crime in our State but it is made the duty of the prosecuting officers of all of our courts to conduct immediate investigations at the expense of the county in which the crime may have been committed, takes away from witnesses immunity in testifying in these cases, makes them guilty of a misdemeanor if they fail to appear and testify, and many other statutes completely covering the whole subject. We have had these laws for a long time, and under the leadership of the patriotic, law-abiding citizens of the State we have reached the point at which we can take some pride in the progress we are making. Why? Because our law-abiding and patriotic citizens are undertaking earnestly to do that thing. We have taken a pride in our record.

We are enforcing these laws and building day by day a stronger and more virile public sentiment against this wholly unjustifiable crime. A few years ago Governor Bickett, of North Carolina, being advised that a mob was gathering in the capital city seeking to take summary vengeance on a man who had committed a most atrocious crime, slipped out of his bed and, taking only time to put his overcoat over his pajamas, in the dead hours of the night, singly and alone, faced that mob and made them see the rule of reason and prevented any trouble. A good many years ago, when a crime had been committed almost too horrible for me to put in this RECORD, an angry mob undertook to go to the courthouse in which the trial was being conducted and take the prisoner. The distinguished judge who was presiding at that trial called on the lawyers and the law-abiding citizens of that county for assistance. He brought them in and swore them in as officers, telling them they would have to cooperate with him before he would undertake to proceed with the trial. These private citizens, devoted to the maintenance of law and order, gathered in the courthouse, put the prisoners on the third floor, and stood off a mob all night. At daylight the State militia arrived and the trial proceeded in an orderly and proper way, and was approved by the Supreme Court of North Carolina. The distinguished judge who led in the maintenance of law and order under those trying conditions is now a member of our Supreme Court, and recently expressed to me his gratification that this form of lawlessness has virtually disappeared in North Carolina.

One more thing and I am going to put the facts into the RECORD this time. In my own home county two ill-advised and unfortunate colored men went to the home of a humble white citizen who was away at his work, went into the kitchen where his wife was performing her duties, laid violent hands upon her, ravished her, beat her head into a pulp with a fence rail, and left her lying in a cornfield. Of course, that infuriated the people of that community. The sheriff of that county was a grand old white-haired Confederate veteran. He, with the assistance of two or three other outstanding citizens, managed to get his hands upon those two people before the mob reached them. That was back in the good old "horse and buggy" days, and with his horse and buggy he managed to keep just a few miles ahead of the mob. When he reached the county seat he knew the little jail there was not sufficient to stay the anger of that mob. He commandeered a steamboat on the river. He got on the boat with his prisoners and told the captain not to stop until he got to Wilmington, 100 miles away. However, during that night, news of the crime had reached that city and a mob was forming there. The next morning, having gotten permission to take his prisoners to the State capital, he undertook to get them to the train, and even as he had gotten them into the train and it was pulling out, the angry mob uncoupled that car from the train and, but for the timely arrival of the light infantry of that city, there would have been bloodshed. But here you have the picture of that gray-headed old Confederate soldier, with his two prisoners down under the seat in the train, with his gun in his hand, firing a shot at this door or at that door when any member of that mob attempted to enter. He did take them to the State capital; they were confined there and brought back to the county and tried in a lawful manner, and executed in the manner provided by law. What I am saying is this—things like these instances have put it into the hearts and minds of our people to take great pride in the enforcement of law.

The people admired this grand old sheriff who so courageously performed his duty.

They admired this judge who stood out against the mob and saw that his prisoners had a fair trial. They admired our courageous Governor who, single and alone, went down in the dark hours of the night and faced the mob for the sake of law and order in North Carolina. That is what you have got to depend upon to put this kind of unjustifiable crime down. This vicious bill does not do that. It slurs at those officers. It would, under certain contingencies, make them guilty of felonies and subject them to severe penalties. It seeks to penalize a county, no matter how impossible it may be to prevent a crime that all good people condemn. You may pass this bill, but you are not going to get that kind of courage and that kind of fearless action necessary to prevent such crimes by holding a club over the heads of the officers upon whom reliance must finally be had. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY].

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, as the debate on this measure progresses, it seems to me I hear the voice of Supreme Court Justice Roger B. Taney, the Justice who enunciated the famous Dred Scott decision. I can hear Justice Taney saying, "The black man has no right that a white man must respect." I hear that voice on this floor today, not in so many words, but camouflaged, if you will, by the theory of State rights. "Keep off our reserves. Do not interfere with our sovereign rights." "The measure is unconstitutional as an invasion of State rights."

This argument in the face of a report of 5,105 human beings lynched in this country since 1882; 5,000 of them, approximately were black men and women who were part of a helpless minority in this country. These victims are calling upon this great Congress of the United States, they and their descendants, their kin and their friends, and all lovers of justice, asking that you go on record to remove the blackest spot in the pages of American history. I think you will go on record and pass this bill.

In 1922 the same voice of Justice Taney, again through the theory of State rights, came on to this floor when the Dyer Anti-Lynching Act was here for consideration. It came again when the Mann Act was passed, when Congress sought to strengthen existing laws against commercialized vice. The same voice was here again when Congress was considering a bill to stop the theft of automobiles by Federal legislation, before many of the States had compulsory registration of automobile laws. It came again when the Lindbergh law was passed to prevent the heinous crime of kidnaping. It was not so vociferous then, because the temper of the country was against kidnaping.

I want to congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] and the 218 men who signed that discharge petition to bring this bill before this body. I am happy to know that you have responded to the appeal of about 47,000,000 people who want this legislation. Let the other branch of the Congress take its responsibility and filibuster if they like, but this is the people's branch of the Government. This is the branch where I want to be recorded as trying to wipe out this foul stain. Let no man rise here and talk about persecution of the Christian martyrs, or talk about the horrors of the Spanish Inquisition, or talk about the pogrom against the Jews in Russia, in face of the record I refer to, the foulest crime of all, lynch law, burning human beings at the stake, stringing their bodies up in trees, lacerating them with knives and other weapons, drowning them in the rivers, stoning them to death. This is a crime that cries out for vengeance to the high heavens. Let the body across the Plaza, the Supreme Court, decide its constitutionality. The question of the constitutionality of measures under consideration has always been raised in every case when we came here seeking to get economic and social justice; when we come here seeking restoration of human rights for the Negro groups who are helpless, and who are under a handicap because of that philosophy of Justice Taney which is still in the South and in other parts of the country, the cry of unconstitutionality is raised. I respect the viewpoint of many of my southern colleagues. You know and I know that the scene is changing. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] placed in the RECORD today the fact that 60 percent of the inhabitants below the Mason and Dixon's line in the poll conducted by the Institute of Public Opinion voted for this sort of law and said they were in favor of a Federal antilynching law.

This bill will not destroy lynching. It will minimize it. It will put the fear of God into some of your politicians in the South, who have not got the courage to act against the mob, and in other parts of the country where lynchings are tolerated if not encouraged. There is only one real remedy; the barriers of bigotry and race prejudice will have to be broken down before you can break up lynching in this country. But a law of this kind will go a long way to stop it.

The startling information furnished the House today, that there have been 5,105 persons, men and women, lynched in America since 1882, convinces me that this record of lawlessness is the blackest page in our Nation's history.

I repeat a debt of gratitude is due the Members of the House who signed the discharge petition to bring forth this antilynching bill for consideration and vote. Were it not for their courage in signing this petition, this measure, important as it is, could not be considered in the people's branch of the Government, the House of Representatives. I trust that the other branch of Congress will give this measure favorable consideration when it reaches that body for deliberation and vote.

I am grateful for the opportunity to raise my voice and accord my vote in favor of this antilynching bill now under consideration. This measure may not have the effect of eradicating altogether the practice of lynching, but I am of the firm conviction that it will help minimize lynching in this Nation, and will undoubtedly put the fear of God and respect for constituted authority in the hearts of many public officials and others who in the past have urged mob violence and denied the victims of their passion and wrath the constitutional right secured for all individuals, whether guilty or innocent of crime, the right of trial by constituted authority.

Mr. Chairman, the Negro, handicapped as he is by persecution and injustice, has come a long way since slavery days to the position and respect he now enjoys in every community in which he resides. He has literally lifted himself to a better economic status with his own boot straps. In the business, professional, and literary fields he has made a splendid progress; in the arts and sciences he has made rapid development. He asks not social equality with his white brethren; he only asks that the barriers of bigotry and race prejudice be lowered so he may have the opportunity to demonstrate his native talent and ability without handicap; that he be given every right of protection and equality ordained to him and every other citizen under the laws of the several States in the United States of America.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWEENEY] has expired.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has consumed 48 minutes, the gentleman from Texas has consumed 1 hour and 23 minutes, and the gentleman from Kansas has consumed 41 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I have listened this afternoon to eloquence soaring on triumphant wings, but also I have listened to sophistry parading in the stately garb of logic. It reminds me of what Shakespeare had Bassanio say in the Merchant of Venice:

> In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
> But, being seasoned with a gracious voice,
> Obscures the show of evil?

Mr. Chairman, I have listened this afternoon to men for whom I have the most profound respect. I know they are interested in this question, and the intensity of their interest is something one cannot help but respect. The arguments I have listened to, however, have not been arguments that convinced me as to the character of this bill and what it will accomplish. We are told that if this bill becomes a law lynchings will increase. Mr. Chairman, that is not an argument; that is a threat. In my humble opinion, it is tragedy.

I am sorry that the House of Representatives, great legislative body that it is, is called upon to consider a measure of this kind, because it should not be necessary; and I, as a Member of this Congress, take my stand convinced that an antilynching bill should be passed at this session.

Last week the Judiciary Committee favorably reported an antilynching bill. I voted for its consideration, although it was not the bill I had been sponsoring. I could not vote against an antilynching bill, because I have worked too long and too hard in the effort to get action in Congress against lynching. I want an antilynching bill passed this year; any such bill that is reasonably adequate will have my vote.

The bill I prefer is H. R. 1507, now before the House. This is in substance the same as my own bill, H. R. 143. It provides to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching.

This free country of ours, where our liberties are supposedly so fully guaranteed under the laws, is the only country in the world which tolerates lynching. Since 1882 there have been 5,105 lynchings in the United States. About one-quarter of the victims of mob rule have been white; three-quarters have been Negroes. About 1 out of every 15 of the victims has been proved innocent after the blood lust of the mob has been satiated for the time being.

In less than 1 percent of the lynchings has the perpetrators been brought to justice. In most cases the mob leaders were known to the authorities, and in most cases the authorities have failed to prosecute or have done so with no genuine effort to convict the guilty.

This is why enlightened Americans who believe in law and order and who are revolted at the thought of mob violence in a free country are now supporting the antilynching bill awaiting the action of this House.

I first introduced the companion to the original Wagner-Costigan bill in the Seventy-third Congress; I introduced it again in the Seventy-fourth Congress; and again, with changes, in January of this year. I hope that this will be the last time, because I hope that Congress will pass H. R. 1507 at this session.

This House is made up of Representatives duly elected by the people. I know it is the intention of Members to honestly represent the will of the people. And right now we have the best of evidence that the people of this Nation approve such a bill. In a poll recently taken 7 out of 10, or 70 percent, of our citizens were in favor of a Federal antilynching bill. To the honor of the South, where lynching has been most prevalent, a full 65 percent of the people questioned expressed themselves in favor of the bill.

H. R. 1507 proposes to hold local authorities responsible for failure to protect a prisoner from a mob. It provides for a fine of $5,000 or for 5 years' imprisonment, or both, with severer penalties where it is proven that the officials conspired with the mob. It also provides penalties in the way of fines assessed on county governments shown to have failed to protect a prisoner from a mob.

We who are sponsoring this bill, and this applies to many Members of the House, feel that its passage will infuse officers of the law with a new respect for the law and will cause them to make every honest and energetic effort to save prisoners from mobs.

To the argument that lynchings are decreasing and that drastic action is no longer necessary, I answer, "Pass this bill and end lynchings. Why permit this frightful blot to remain on the otherwise honorable escutcheon of our Nation?"

Let us have the courage to act, knowing that in doing so we serve justice and humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY].

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] touched upon one aspect of the matter of lynching that I think has not perhaps been sufficiently stressed—its international aspect. Most of the countries, the far-flung countries of the world, believe that our Government condones, aids, and abets lynching. I know this, because when I was in India I saw in many places for sale a book called Uncle Sham. This book held up our country as calling itself civilized, and then throughout the pages of the book was pointed out every dreadful thing that ever happened in our country, racketeering, kidnapings, and all. The chapter on lynching was particularly horrible. It gave details, the dates, and excerpts from magazines and newspapers. I am told that the book was written by a Hindu. It is not allowed admission into this country. It has been translated into 86 Hindu dialects and is one of the best sellers in India. It is now being translated into the Japanese.

Later on, at Canton, China, I was offered photographs of public executions, and when I declined to buy them, I was reminded by the young Chinese, who had attended school in New York City, that in America we burned our black criminals at the stake, and he was rather at a loss to know why we were shocked at the cards.

In Siam I heard the same thing, and in a far-away jungle in French Indochina I was the only American there to defend our country against this accusation of being party to lynching. The year before I went to South Africa and traveled from Cape Town to Khartoum. The problem there, as you know, is very much more acute than it is in this country; but everywhere I went the people to whom I talked brought up this subject of lynching; and I assure you it is impossible to make people in other parts of the world believe that all of us here are not in favor of it, that our Government does not aid and abet it.

I was born and brought up in the South. I know of a large group of women in my own native State of Georgia, white women, who are doing their utmost to stamp out the lynching that goes on not only in the South but in other parts of the country.

The passage of this bill will not only go far toward stamping out the hideous crime of lynching, but will perhaps convince other countries of the world that the Government of the United States does not condone, aid, nor abet it. At present, they cannot understand our philosophy of States' rights, for they look upon us as a unified nation under one federal government.

This bill as a Federal pronouncement will restore much of our lost prestige.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the statement just made by the gentlewoman from New York. May I make the suggestion that when American Members of Congress stand on the floor of the House and constantly call attention to the maximum number of lynchings which have occurred in this country, they should in the same statement, in justice to their own country, tell the people these facts: In the 11 years from 1882 to 1892, inclusive, there were in this country an average of 155.8 lynchings per year. In other words, 1 to every 300,000 people, plus. In the years 1893 to 1903 the average was 133.1 lynchings. Whereas the other figure was one person to each 300,000 people. In those 11 years there was one lynching to each 555,000 people. In the 11 years, 1904 to 1914, inclusive, with a population of 90,000,000 people, there were 89 lynchings on the average per year—1 for 1,300,000 population.

May I say, the people of the world would have a different notion about things if we would be careful to state the whole truth about a given situation. The American Members of Congress should stand on the floor of this House and paint this picture to the world fairly. The people of these States, notwithstanding the difficulties, from the year 1882 to 1936 by their own efforts have reduced lynchings in this country over 5,000 percent per million population. Last year there were only eight or nine lynchings, one for each 15,000,000 people. This crime started when the people in their westward migration moved far in advance of organized government. As a matter of fact, there was no government except home-made government which sprang up in the communities. That government must be abandoned. It must be suppressed. Lynching is indefensible. Eight or nine last year were too many. We agree with that. But why not be fair about it? Why not give your neighbors who are working at this thing credit for what they are doing? Why not tell the world the whole truth—I mean give the world a true picture? You tell of the 5,000 in the history of the country, but you do not tell of the only 8 or 9 last year. Why do you not do it? Is it because you get pleasure out of making things, which are bad enough at best, look worse than they are?

Why not stand on the floor of this Congress and tell the whole truth? Why paint a lurid picture against their own country and one which is not justified by the facts?

From 1926 to 1936 there was 1 lynching to each 7,800,000 people in this Nation. This reduction came about not from the efforts of the Federal Government but from the efforts of the States and their people. Can you people who are today criticizing us show a better record as to your gang murders? We are ashamed of the lynchings which have occurred. I know how northern people feel. It makes my own blood boil to note a few States in the South that are not enforcing the law, who are bringing shame to that whole section of the country. From every angle we are pressing them to speed up their work of suppression. They are our people and we can do it. We feel we can do a better job and a quicker job than would result from this interference by those who seem to regret that we are making any progress in this direction.

Mr. Chairman, why not be fair to the people of the South? We have a bad, a difficult situation. Two races are trying to live side by side, an experiment that has never succeeded in all the history of the ages. Do we receive any helpful encouragement from these other sections of the country on this issue? No, it is pestiferous, "holier than thou" butting in on a situation, delicate and difficult and dangerous, by outside people who think they know better what to do than the people on the ground.

You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. We have a pretty hard situation to handle and we are doing the best we can to handle it. Whenever you reduce a crime to 8 per year in a population of 126,000,000, that crime has all but disappeared. I challenge anybody on this floor to point to a single major crime in this country that has been reduced as rapidly as the people of my section of the country have reduced the crime of lynching. It is not fair, and you ought not to do it. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves. No wonder when women travel abroad, as Mrs. O'DAY did, they read these stories which she detailed. I can take the exceptions in any country and work them up to make a stranger believe them to be the rule, especially if given help by high officers of the government. I could take the case of a little girl outraged in my friend's city the other day, and could build up the facts and say that is the way they treat their children in New York, and it would be just as true to the facts as some of these home-consumption speeches delivered on this floor. But it would not be the truth.

They do not treat their children that way in New York. If the people in New York in the neighborhood where that little girl lived could have got their hands on the ravisher and murderer and no peace officer was around they would have lynched him. That is how most of our lynchings occur. The communities are exposed. There is usually no police protection save that which the people afford. Not only is police protection an individual and community matter but their danger and the danger of the members of each family is a common danger.

That makes them keener, with a more personal attitude than in an organized community with police officers. And there is not the police officers adequate to protect the person in danger of the mob. That is why it is so essential, as we see it, to hold to these States and these communities the fact and the sense of full responsibility. But I hope to develop this more fully later. I arose chiefly to point out that these notions of foreigners with regard to the prevalence of mob violence come more from the exaggerated statements made by Members of Congress against their own country rather than from 8 or 9 such offenses in a year, 1 for each 15,000,000 people.

This is not offered in excuse but for information to people who, apparently without sympathy or understanding, seem willing to imperil the work which people who believe they know what is to be done and how to do it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. HILL of Alabama] having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father, in gracious blessings, be Thou with our President and the Pan American nations and their rulers. Grant that every patriot's heart may be touched today as the volumes of unity and fellowship roll skyward. We beseech Thee that the dawn of good will and brotherhood may continue to grow, as the regeneration of the world's democracies is the road to universal peace. God, be merciful unto us and bless us and cause His face to shine upon us, that Thy way may be known upon earth and Thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise Thee, O God, let all the the people praise Thee. Oh, let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for Thou shalt judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, O God, let all the people praise Thee, then shall the earth yield her increase and God, even our own God, shall bless us; God shall bless us and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE LONG-AND-SHORT-HAUL CLAUSE

The SPEAKER. Under the recent vote the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1668) to amend paragraph (1) of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 4), with Mr. WILCOX in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. BLAND. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (1) of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 4), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which common carriers may be relieved from the operation of this section: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act by virtue of orders of the Commission or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the Commission and not yet acted upon shall not be required to be changed by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the Commission: And provided further, That in any case before the Commission where there is brought in issue a lower rate or charge for the transportation of like kind of property, for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, the burden of proof shall be upon the carrier to justify the rate or charge for the longer distance against any claim of a violation of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMES. As I understand the rules of the House, in the consideration of this bill 2 hours of general debate is allowed on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HOLMES. Am I to understand that 1 hour will be extended me in opposition to the bill as a minority member of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOLMES. I am, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts the ranking minority member of the committee?

Mr. HOLMES. I am the ranking minority member opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to recognition in opposition to the bill unless a minority member of the committee outranking the gentleman desires recognition.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] is the only minority member of the committee who is opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts will be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. It is my understanding an arrangement has been made so that the opponents of the bill on the majority side will be given 30 minutes of time. I should like to know if that understanding is going to hold.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the House, general debate is limited to 2 hours, 1 hour to be controlled by the chairman of the committe and 1 hour to be controlled by a minority member in opposition to the bill. These two gentlemen, of course, will have control of the assignment of time, and I assume, of course, it will be assigned to those in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. What opportunity will the opponents of the bill on the majority side have to be heard on the measure?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated to the gentleman that under the rules 1 hour of the debate will be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts in opposition to the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts having been recognized for that purpose.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I understand that if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] should see fit to yield part of the time to this side of the House to be used by those in opposition, he can do so, and I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts about that.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, is within the discretion of the gentleman from Massachusetts. He can yield the time as he sees fit, and the Chair will recognize those who are designated by the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts, of course, has not yet been recognized. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] will proceed.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 7 minutes.

The general rule in reference to the establishment of freight rates by the railroads is that the carrier may file a schedule announcing a new rate, and if no protest is made, this rate will go into effect 30 days after its announcement. Any interested party may protest and cause an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Commission may deny approval or modify such proposed rate. If the Commission fails to act the rates would go into effect 7 months later.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I shall not be able to yield at this time.

The fourth section provides an exception to this general rule. The fourth section, if we reduce it to general terms, provides that if a lower rate for a longer than for a shorter haul on the same line and in the same direction is proposed, it shall not go into effect until the rate is specifically approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The practical problem here is in part the effect of competitive rates on competing carriers in this country. We have a competition at the present time as to railroad rates based upon marketing competition and also upon carrier competition. Anyone at all familiar with the railroad rate structure in this country knows that it is not and cannot logically be based upon a mileage basis. It cannot be based on an equal profit out of every equal service performed. You see a mixed train going down the track, and some cars on that train produce for the railroad four times as much profit as the car that is next to them. No practical manager of the railroad can prevent such seeming inconsistencies. Understanding the facts, we know different considerations of practical expediency control that situation. The railroad is hauling part of its cars for a minimum of profit—a small profit on some but more on others. So there is nothing particularly novel so far as the general policy of railroad rate making is concerned in the fact that in one situation we have a cheaper rate for a longer distance than for the shorter distance on the same line. The fourth section does not apply to competition as between different routes and there is no specific restriction in favor of the shorter as against the longer haul.

The importance that this question has acquired in public opinion is due to the fact that we have water carriers and motor carriers in competition with railroad companies. The fourth section was originally written when there was no Panama Canal and no motor carriers and when the railroads had a practical monopoly of transportation. Here, in the fourth section, we have a handicap in favor of water and motor carriers and against lowering of rates to meet competition by the railroads. The ships and motor carriers have no such handicap. There is no fourth section for them. They can underbid the railroad on 30 days' notice and cut out their railroad competitor for any given line of traffic they please. The railroads have no such privilege. The primary effect, from the standpoint of competition, if this bill is enacted will be to place the railroads on an equality with the water and motor carriers in competing for long-distance traffic.

The theory that justifies this adjustment of railroad rates is that the railroads by being permitted to carry the traffic for a longer distance at a lesser charge than that imposed on the short haul, will secure more traffic at an increase of income in the aggregate. It is better for the company to haul at a small margin than not to haul at all. They will carry it at a cheaper rate and in the end it will be better for the railroad company and I believe for the country. True, the railroad should not be permitted to haul without financial advantage to itself in order to take traffic from a competitor. The bill does not sanction that.

There are two things this bill will do that I believe cannot be successfully denied. One is that it will bring more freight to the railroads. They will carry more freight through and from the interior sections of the United States. This increased freight will travel at a cheaper rate than it travels today. Whatever may be the objections to this bill, there are those two things that I think are substantially not subject to reasonable dispute. The passage of this bill means more freight by rail, carried at a cheaper rate.

As to the intermediate sections which have frequently raised opposition to this legislation, those sections in my opinion will be benefited. We have had remarkable improvements along the coast lines of the United States for the past 20 or 30 years, especially in the last 15 years in contrast with the backwardness of the interior part of the country. The interior is, in part, held back by lack of transportation advantages. Cheaper freight rates are needed to carry its heavy products to the distant markets, whether it be at the seashore or in the great Central West, or at Chicago. The intermountain sections and other intermediate sections of this country are in the main shippers of heavy freight. They are much more shippers than receivers of freight. Under this bill the originating point will be given the benefit of the fourth-section clause as well as the coast-line country. The ultimate effect should be to benefit the interior sections of the country, particularly those sections which are more interested in the production and transportation of their own freight than they are in buying freight from other places.

We have opposition to this bill from water carriers and motor carriers. That is the source of the principal opposition to this bill. It is perfectly natural and human for those carriers to oppose this bill. At the present time the fourth section places a handicap on railroads, their competitors, in meeting competition. If these water carriers and motor carriers can maintain this barrier against their competitors, they would naturally be pleased. It is a natural thing for them to come here and seek to continue that barrier against the railroads. We may properly question whether or not this measure provides ample and just protection for the water and motor carriers. Every man interested in the progress of this country must recognize these three great agencies as necessary and desirable.

Each of these forms of transportation operates in a field where it serves the public. Each one of them is entitled to its part of the freight transported to the American markets. If this bill unjustly discriminates against them, if it is ruinous to either one of them, they would be justified in objecting, but in my judgment clearly it is not so unjust to any of those carriers. The only just complaint that could arise would be from an unwarranted and unlikely administration of the law.

After this bill becomes a law, carriers and shippers will have the protection of certain other provisions of the law. In the first place, the law against unjust discrimination will continue to be a part of the interstate-commerce act, and the law that requires all these rates to be reasonable will still be a part of the law that governs the administration of the fourth-section clause, and in addition to that, the I. C. C., if complaint is made against the proposed rate, or on its own motion, can suspend the rate, investigate, hold a hearing and prohibit the proposed rate if it is found to be violative of these provisions or for any reason unwarranted. The Commission can fix a minimum or maximum rate if the facts warrant.

A proposed new rate that is protested does not go into effect for 7 months unless the Commission approves it at an earlier date. If disapproved, it does not go into effect at all. The rate even after going into effect is always subject to attack and correction.

In 1920 we passed the Transportation Act. In that act we declared it to be the policy of the Congress to maintain in full vigor rail and water transportation. The rail, water, and motor carriers each has its own economic operations in which it excels the other for particular transportation service. The just rights of each can be protected under the provisions of this proposed law. A reasonable rail rate cannot reach a destructive level for ships and motor carriers. In other words, it is the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which it recognizes and which it will put into effect if this law is passed, to do justice between competing agencies engaged in transportation in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, at this time I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] to yield to Members on that side who are in opposition to the bill.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate, of course, that we have such a limited time to discuss this very important bill. For that reason and because of the intense interest, not only in the committee from which the bill is reported but on the floor, I shall ask to complete my statement without being interrupted.

We are faced today with a request not to enact a new law dealing with the great railroad transportation systems of this country but to amend in a manner which totally destroys possibly the most important provision of the Transportation Act, as originally enacted and amended. Before the final vote on this measure is cast, I want the Members to consider the fact that in 1887—50 years ago—when the Interstate Commerce Act was passed, such action by the Congress was the result of an intense study and comprehensive report by five distinguished Senators appointed for the purpose of investigating the conditions then prevailing in our railroad transportation system. In the report of that committee, as I have incorporated it in my remarks, too lengthy to deliver today, but which I will extend in the RECORD, more emphasis was placed by the Senate and the House at that time upon the necessity for a long-and-short-haul provision than any other part of the basic law.

That is not all. The subject has been before the Congress of the United States for the past 50 years, concretely in three different sessions, where elaborate discussion and lengthy debate took place. In 1910 the law was amended, and as the distinguished proponents of this measure will admit, I am sure, it was strengthened and not weakened. In 1920 following the war, when the railroads were returned to private control, section 4 was again strengthened and not weakened. I think in the report of the committee the language by Mr. PETTENGILL, as to the past conduct of Congress with reference to this measure, briefly and aptly states what I am trying to convey to you today. I wish I had time, Mr. Chairman, to read to you the interesting extracts I have taken, in the preparation of my remarks, from the previous debates in Congress dealing with this very subject. When you read them you will realize that all this talk today about repealing this provision because originally there was a monopoly, while today the keenest kind of competition exists, was before the Congress 50 years ago; again in 1910 and in 1920. I marvel when I think of it, how this measure has gotten as far as it has in Congress. I represent a great railroad center and seaport, but I have never heard the slightest voice raised in advocacy of repealing this provision of the law which has operated now for 50 years without any serious criticism. The respect I have for the gentlemen who propose this bill commands nothing but fairness on my part, but with all respect to them, the more you read the arguments advanced as to the reasons for the repeal of the long-and-short-haul provision the more convincing it becomes to you that the attitude of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the agency given birth at the time the fourth section was born, and which has through these years, I think, administered fairly the railroad problem, in asking this Congress not to disturb this law by repealing it in the fashion this bill would is the proper attitude.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] stated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

> The fourth section was first written in 1887. In 1910 it was tightened up. In 1920 the screws were tightened once more.

I have given a great deal of study to this, and I want to know, aside from the reasons advanced thus far, what sensible and convincing reason there is today to not only untighten the screws but destroy in its entirety this advisable provision of the Interstate Commerce Act.

The National Grange, in no uncertain terms, condemns it as causing immeasurable damage and injury to agriculture if it is passed. I happen to be a member of the farm bureau federation. I could not believe my own State farm bureau federation, knowing what this bill would do, agreed with the statement of the Washington representative of that great farm agency.

I am glad to possess today denial from the farm bureau of my own State of any association with this measure but asking for its defeat.

The position of the Interstate Commerce Commission in this controversy is a fair one, and I know it appeals to the Members of this House.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. It will be my purpose, when the bill is read under the 5-minute rule, to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for this bill. The substitute will strike from existing law the so-called equidistant clause of section 4. That provision, a meaningless thing, has been criticized and its repeal advocated by the proponents of this measure and, I believe, by all the opponents of this measure. It has the support of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of all water and truck transportation. That is all the amendment will do. If it is adopted, section 4 will then provide, as it does today, and require, as it should, that before any violation of the long-and-short-haul theory is perpetrated upon the intermediate points of this country, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall not of its own volition, but mandatorily by the act of this Congress, have its attention directed to it, and its approval of such violations must be granted before they become effective. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I anticipated that some of my neighbors from out where the tall mountains grow would feel a little rambunctious this morning, but I did not think the deep-water people were going to feel so badly about it. When I saw they were, there was recalled to my mind two or three instances that occurred before the committee when this bill was under consideration, indicating that the deep-water people are by no means unanimously opposed to this legislation. One of the witnesses who appeared before our committee was the head of the Lumbermen's Association of the State of Washington, appearing in behalf of the Pettengill bill. I was taken by surprise. I asked him how it came that he, a representative of an industry which is peculiarly adapted to deep-water transportation, an industry located on Puget Sound, one of the finest bodies of deep water in the world, was down here in favor of the Pettengill bill. He answered in substance that the lumber industry in the Northwest has got to have something beside cheap transportation; it has got to have markets. He said that 15 years ago the railroads hauled about 75 percent of the lumber produced in the Northwest and water hauled 25 percent. He said that now it is the other way, that water hauls 75 percent and the railroads 25 percent. He said that their business with the railroad companies had shrunk correspondingly, that they had only about 25 percent of the business of the railroad carriers that they had 15 years ago, because in their financial condition the railroads are not able to buy their lumber.

Another case was that of the Southern California Fruit Growers' Exchange. They appeared before our committee in favor of this bill. This is of interest to all Californians. This is a startling statement showing what has happened to transcontinental railroad transportation in the last 15 years under the choking restrictions of the long-and-short-haul clause. Mr. Carl D. Loos, the representative of the Fruit Growers' Association, said that 15 years ago their fruit traffic east on the transcontinental lines constituted only 15 percent of the total traffic of the rail carriers. He said that today, however, it constitutes 40 percent of their traffic, due not to the increase in fruit production and shipment but to the shrinkage of other lines of freight lost to the railroads through the Panama Canal; and he said that means that the fruit business of California is furnishing 40 percent of the eastbound income of the transcontinental railroads, and that the burden on their fruit is constantly increasing. He said they wanted any change in the law that would enable the railroads to get revenue some other place.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I cannot yield in 10 minutes. We all know that section 4 is a long story, and 10 minutes is a short time. I cannot even hit the high places on this proposition, let alone yielding.

I wanted to confine myself to the inland country, but I do not believe I am even going to reach it. I wanted to show that the long-and-short-haul clause is not only of no benefit to our Intermountain States, which have been the head and front of the fight for section 4, but an absolute injury. But something that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] said diverts me. He mentioned the thing here that troubled me after I made up my mind, after long hearings in the Seventy-fourth Congress, in favor of this bill. I attended all the hearings, both before the full committee and the subcommittee, and heard every witness. I started in with a bias against the bill. I came out, for fundamental reasons that I cannot even mention now, in favor of the bill; but even so, my mind was troubled about one proposition, and I have decided to mention it. I heard with astonishment the able gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] say—and I took his words down—that this bill totally destroys railroad regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The question did trouble my mind whether or not the long-and-short haul clause had not become a yardstick so embedded in the law that if it were torn out it would break down railroad rate making and disorganize the whole process. But when we had this bill up before the Rules Committee last summer for a rule, Mr. Eastman, the able Commissioner and former Coordinator of Transportation, a most able man, stated before the Committee on Rules that the Interstate Commerce Commission would have every power under this bill that it possesses under the law now.

Furthermore, when he appeared before our committee during the recent hearings I asked him specific questions. I shall ask unanimous consent to put my questions and his answers into the RECORD. I wanted to allay all doubt in my mind, so I put the question to him whether the long-and-short-haul clause was a yardstick and its repeal would affect the rate-making powers of the Commission under the law. He stated no, and specified all the powers they have under the rest of the law to fix minimum rates and all that sort of thing. He said, however, that the courts might consider that Congress intended to liberalize the law. We hope they do. He also said the Commission could fix reasonably compensatory rates with repeal of the reasonably compensatory proviso now in the law. In other words, Mr. Eastman said that the Interstate Commerce Commission would have all the powers after the passage of the Pettengill bill that it now has. His objection was that the courts might consider the Congress intended to liberalize the law.

I want to make one more statement. I want to emphasize the effect of this existing law on our inland country. I want to lay down this proposition to my western friends. Notwithstanding the fact the long-and-short-haul clause as it now reads has been in section 4 for 27 years, industry west of the Mississippi River and between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Coast Range has stood still or has dried up. I do not attribute this condition of arrested progress to the long-and-short-haul clause. I simply say that you cannot take this admitted condition and make out a case for the long-and-short-haul clause.

It was stated before the committee that since the opening of the Panama Canal more than 5,000 industries in the Mississippi Valley have died. An opponent of the bill admitted a steel industry had been transferred from Gary, Ind., to the Pacific coast within the past few years. It was stated by another opponent of the bill that during the past few years milling concerns have been transferred from Minneapolis and St. Paul to Buffalo, N. Y. It was testified before the committee that a Colorado steel company was unable to meet Atlantic coast competition in the sale of steel at Houston, Tex., and had to withdraw from that territory when its common carrier was denied fourth-section relief. It was testified before the committee that western sugar could not compete at Chicago and St. Louis with Philippine sugar refined in San Francisco and moving by water through the Panama Canal and up the Mississippi River. [Applause.]

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL].

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Chairman, before I proceed with my remarks I believe I ought to tell the Members of the House that the Pettengill bill, which repeals the long-and-short-haul provisions of the Transportation Act, is unanimously opposed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. Eastman appeared before the committee and stated that body was unanimously against the repeal of the long-and-short-haul provision.

There was also a letter inserted in the RECORD which shows the Maritime Commission is also opposed to the Pettengill bill and the repeal of the long-and-short-haul provision. Two agencies of this Government are against this bill.

I am advised that previously in another session of the Congress the author of this bill attempted to get the President's approval of the bill. His letter was submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission and Mr. Eastman returned it to the President without recommendation, and appeared later before our committee in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, when a bill comes before the Congress for consideration I believe the Members of this body ought to ask the question, What good is it going to do? What good is it going to accomplish? I do not care what may be said about that. We are told it is going to equalize competition, that it is going to give the railroads a chance to compete with water competition and with truck competition. We are told further that the water industries and the shipping industry as well as the trucking industry do not have regulation of that kind. If we say that the water carriers are committing murder and that the truck industry is committing murder in this country, shall we also let the railroads commit murder in this way? The only way to take care of the situation is by regulation of the water industry and in a similar manner by regulation of the truck industry. That is what is wrong with this bill. The wrong procedure is being followed. We are going about it in the wrong way.

If you want to put the railroads on that basis, if it is right to permit them to commit murder, that may be one thing; but the proper way is to regulate the water and trucking industry. Two of their representatives appeared before our committee and begged for regulation. They said they were willing to take it and would voluntarily accept it and wanted regulation because it would help their business.

The other argument advanced is that this will create employment for the railroad workers of this Nation, and under that pretext, under that false pretense, they have the railroad brotherhoods of this Nation fighting on their behalf. I yield to no one in this body who will fight for labor any better than I. I have four railroads in my district, and they have written to me. I will go along with labor, I will go along with the railroad employee when he is right, but I will not penalize all the people of my district in an endeavor to help him out.

Let us analyze this. Give the railroads 5,000,000 tons which the intercoastal lines now carry; give them 5,000,000 tons that the Mississippi River carriers now transport; give them 90,000,000 tons that are transported on the Great Lakes and by trucks; give them all that, and if they would carry this tonnage at the same rate that they carry it today, which they will not do, but will charge a lower rate, probably one-half of the present rate, all it would increase their revenues is eight-tenths of 1 percent.

Where is there going to be any more employment created? Where is there going to be more men put to work? I will tell you what will happen. You will penalize the trucking industry and its employees, as well as the water employees of this country. Here is a statement by Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio. He says:

> Today net loads of 10,000 tons are equivalent to 1,000 big trucks manned by 1,000 men.

On that basis, according to Mr. Willard, if 1 railroad worker is given employment, 200 employees of the trucks would be thrown out of employment.

You can go through the list, Mr. Chairman, and you do the same thing to the longshoremen and other employees in this country.

I heard the appeal made that this bill would help the interior of the country, and I heard the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] say industry had moved out of the interior and the population there had decreased. If you want to be fair about it, it is because of the water advantage the coast points have. However, they already have the coast advantage, and they already have the advantage of cheaper rates. Now you want to give them an additional advantage. Now you want to give them not only the water advantage which they now have but also a rail advantage. The effect will be to move out all the industry of the interior and practically all the population; and when you destroy the interior of this country, you destroy the United States. You ought to defeat this bill. You ought to build up the interior of our country, and I sincerely hope and trust that you will. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill, but I cannot get quite as much worked up over it as some of my friends. I think the importance of it is overestimated, both by those in favor of it and those opposed to it.

My distinguished friend the gentleman from Maryland said in substance the bill would repeal perhaps the most important provision of the Transportation Act. That is an illustration, I think, of the extremes to which some of our friends go in the discussion of the bill. As I see it, the principal effect of the passage of the bill will be on method of procedure. It is a procedural question, largely, and not so much a matter of substance.

I think it is pretty generally conceded the Interstate Commerce Commission will have practically the same control over fixing the rates of the railroads after the passage of the legislation as it now has with the fourth section in force. Rates and fares for the carrying of passengers and freight over the railroads are fixed in the first instance by the railroads themselves. They are required to file schedules of their rates and fares with the Interstate Commerce Commission and post copies of them in two public places in stations receiving passengers and freight for transportation. If the railroads want to make any changes in these rates or fares, they must file the proposed changes with the Interstate Commerce Commission and post copies of the changes in the stations 30 days before putting them into effect. At the end of 30 days, unless somebody objects and makes complaint before the Interstate Commerce Commission, or unless the Interstate Commerce Commission of its own initiative decides to make an investigation of the proposed changes, the railroads are permitted to put the new rates and fares into effect.

This is the general situation, but the fourth section provides that if a railroad desires to charge more for a shorter haul than for a longer haul over the same line, going in the same direction, the shorter distance being included within the longer, it must make application to the Interstate Commerce Commission and get the affirmative approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission before so doing. It is the delay caused by this proceeding which creates most of the demand for the repeal of the fourth section. In the majority of cases when these applications are made by the carriers, the Interstate Commerce Commission grants permission to make the changes, and there are now a multitude of violations of the fourth section in effect. However, the railroads, and a reasonable number of shippers and others, think the same rule should apply as far as the fixing of rates and fares for a short haul is concerned as applies in the fixing of rates and fares in other cases; that is, that the railroads should have the privilege of initiating these rates the same as they initiate other rates. They argue that this is a function of management, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission ought not to infringe upon or take over that function. It is conceded by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I understand it, that the Commission, after the passage of the proposed legislation, will have the same power it now has to see to it that the rates are just and reasonable, that they are not discriminatory, and that no advantage or preference is given to any shipper.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. May I ask the gentleman if I am laboring under a mistaken idea about the bill? To illustrate, the shipment of a carload of coal from the mines in northeastern Kentucky to Toledo, Ohio, costs about $70. Shipping a carload of coal from the same mines to my home town, 15 miles away, costs $70. Will this bill permit the Interstate Commerce Commission or the railroads by permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission to adjust this freight rate and not charge me the same price for shipping the coal 15 miles as it would charge for shipping it 400 miles?

Mr. MAPES. The Interstate Commerce Commission will have the same power to adjust the rates the gentleman speaks of after the passage of the proposed legislation as it now has. May I say further that in my judgment the passage of the bill will not affect bus and truck transportation. It is the hope, at least, of the advocates of the proposed legislation that it will enable the railroads to compete with the water carriers for some of the transcontinental business. However, I do not think they have any particular hope of being able to compete with trucks and busses after the passage of this legislation any more than they are now able to. This bill is supported both by railroad labor and by the railroad executives, as well as others. Some of the strongest arguments in favor of the passage of the legislation at the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were made by representatives of the brotherhoods.

The railroads are regulated and their rates and fares are fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The water lines are not controlled in this respect. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNELL] referred to a letter, quoted in the minority views from the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission. This gentleman does not take into consideration the interests of the consumer or the shipper in his complaint about the passage of the proposed legislation, but states it will allow the railroads to compete with the water lines. I quote from the letter:

> It will be necessary for the latter to meet the reduced rail rates if they are to retain traffic, and the net result will be a lessening of the revenues of both rail and water carriers without materially increasing the amount of cargo transported.

The Chairman of the Maritime Commission in his complaint does not take into consideration the interest of the consumer or the shipper but simply the interest of the water lines. This goes to the core of the matter. The purpose of the proposed legislation is, frankly, to enable the railroads to compete with the ships in the carriage of transcontinental and other traffic.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. What effect will this bill have on cattle coming out of Texas through Kansas to Chicago? The rate will be lowered, and they will go right through the packing-house districts of Kansas on into Chicago.

Mr. MAPES. If there is any rate proposed by the railroads which the gentleman thinks is unfair, unjust, discriminatory, or gives anybody a preference, he can bring the matter before the Interstate Commerce Commission in exactly the same way he has a right to do now and have the situation corrected.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that, but these cattlemen do not. They think there is discrimination.

Mr. MAPES. I do not believe the gentleman need worry himself about that. The cattlemen and their associations are on the alert in looking after such matters all the time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, it is well recognized, I think, that the long-and-short-haul provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act were placed there originally because of a very great need for them. The history of the period of railroading in this country which preceded such legislation is not a very inspiring narrative, and there is no question of the great need for such legislation at the time it was placed on the statute books.

Theoretically, of course, there is no more reason why a railroad company should charge more for hauling a carload of freight 500 miles than it does for hauling it 1,000 miles than there would be for a farmer to charge more for 1 bushel of potatoes than for 2 bushels. Yet we know that in the transportation world there are situations which come up that seem to make it desirable from a competitive standpoint that railroad rates be not uniform and that railroads be able to meet the competition of other forms of transportation. So the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given the power to adjust such situations when they arise, and under existing law ample authority exists for that purpose.

I represent a section of the country which has always suffered from high transportation rates because of a lack of competition. Statements have been made here today about the loss of industries in the Middle West in recent years. This has been due very largely to a condition imposed by nature, in that we have a transportation situation where there is no water competition. However, if we pass this bill, we are going to intensify this situation rather than relieve it.

I can indicate what I mean by using an illustration which was given during the hearings by a witness who is very familiar with transportation conditions in my State. He pointed out the very great disadvantage which we suffer under existing conditions and rates, and used as an illustration the rate on canned fruits from California to Wichita, Kans. The rate to Kansas City, Chicago, and Pittsburgh is exactly the same. Of course, having the same rate from California to Pittsburgh as from California to Wichita does not help build up our section of the country. However, we have managed to live under that situation. Originally the rate was $1.05 per hundred pounds. An application was filed by the railroads to reduce this rate to 90 cents to Pittsburgh, which was allowed, and under existing law the reduction was made applicable to Wichita, Kansas City, and Chicago. Later reductions brought the rate to Pittsburgh to 73 cents, and Wichita and other immediate points received the benefit of the reduction as required by existing law.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I am sorry I cannot yield, as I have not the time.

Now, how will this and similar situations be affected if this bill becomes a law? Under the provisions of this bill, it would be possible to reduce the rate to Kansas City, Chicago, and Pittsburgh to 73 cents and retain the rate to Wichita, only a little more than half way to Pittsburgh, at $1.05.

I know it will be said by the proponents of the bill that shippers thus discriminated against have the right to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission and file a complaint and that the Commission can adjudicate the complaint and, perhaps, in its wisdom, give them some relief, but nevertheless, during that time, the discriminatory rate would be in effect and the Wichita shipper would be meeting ruinous competition and might easily be forced out of business while waiting for relief.

Under existing law the burden of going ahead and initiating action to put a new rate in effect must be taken by the railroad. Under the proposed bill the railroad puts the rate into effect and the shipper must attack it as discriminatory. This puts an unfair burden on the little shipper who can ill afford the expense of hiring rate experts and going to Chicago or Washington for a hearing.

If this bill becomes a law, it can have but one effect—lower rates between points having competitive rail and water transportation and higher rates in areas which do not have such competitive conditions. This means that the interior of the country whose development has already been retarded by adverse competitive transportation conditions will be further handicapped by being placed on a still higher plateau of freight rates. This bill is a real peril to the great interior sections of this country and should be defeated.

[Applause.]

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, this is a bad bill; this bill should be defeated; and if I can judge the temper of this House in recent days, I think it will be defeated. The House has recently shown its ability to defeat bad legislation. This bill provides for a complete reversal of our attitude toward transportation—at least, the policies that were inaugurated by this administration. It has been the policy of this administration to foster and develop and coordinate the methods of transportation in this country. We have not tried to destroy any kind of transportation—water, rail, or motor. In fact, in 1935, we passed a motor carrier act providing legislation for the motor-carrier industry. We have tried to stabilize this transportation business because it is the people's business—it is the business of the country; but here come the railroad ownership today and ask to be permitted to step aside from these rules and regulations and to operate under a new set of rules, to go back to the jungle, and cast all this good work of this Congress and previous Congresses into the wastebasket, and to operate on the basis of the survival of the fittest again. We do not want that. I agree—and I think every Member of this House agrees—with the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Every member—all nine members—of the Interstate Commerce Commission oppose this bill. The President was asked by letter, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], for some expression of opinion upon this bill. He referred that letter to Mr. Eastman, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and would not answer. This bill does not represent the policy of this administration. This bill does not come within the policy of this administration, so far as transportation is concerned, and that is why our committee—the Interstate Commerce Committee—was so evenly divided upon the bill. We oppose this bill, and we sincerely hope it will be defeated.

We are asked today to repudiate the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission and to give to the railroads the initial power to determine whether a discrimination is unfair or unjust.

The primary purpose of the long-and-short-haul clause is to give protection to the intermediate points or territories from discriminatory rate practices on the part of the railroads. Today we are asked to throw them upon the mercy of the railroads.

If this bill should pass and become a law, you shall have opened the dikes to a sea of endless trouble.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill. I do not believe that any one form of transportation should be given an advantage over any other competing transportation agency. What is fair for one is fair for the other.

The restrictions now placed upon railroads as a result of the so-called long-and-short-haul provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act do not apply to motor or water carriers. Consequently in the keen competition that now exists the railroads are under a handicap that does not apply to their competitors. The purpose of this bill—H. R. 1668—now under consideration is to remedy that condition.

We are all aware of the serious inroads that have been made by motor and water carriers upon the established business of railroads. In many instances it has meant not only the curtailment but the elimination of railroad facilities.

I am not arguing that where, as a result of fair competition, and one or the other means of transportation are found to be unable to successfully compete, that a subsidy or any other means of assistance or advantage should be given to it merely because it is an established means of transportation. I am well aware that in our fast-moving economic system that which is old or out of date must give way to what is new and better adapted to our needs, but it is unfair to place a penalty or handicap upon one to enable another to arise and take its place.

If any other means of transportation is better, cheaper, or more adaptable to our commercial needs than another, then it has a right to gain the business, but it should be upon its merits as a competing agency rather than by a restriction placed upon its competitor. To apply this latter principle is to put a handicap upon one and grant a corresponding benefit to the other. This is now the case as the result of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act being applicable to railroads and not to any of their competitors in the field of transportation. And it is this inequality and unfairness that the present legislation seeks to remedy.

One of two conclusions should be reached. Either section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act should be repealed as provided for in this bill, or it should be made applicable to all other competing agencies of transportation. Failure to do either is to continue an injust discrimination against railroads and make more difficult their effort to meet increasing cost of materials and labor, welfare and pension requirements, Federal, State, and local taxes. Nor should we overlook the fact that in addition to the handicap now placed upon railroads as a result of the long-and-short-haul clause in the Interstate Commerce Act they are also required to carry many expenses, such as road maintenance, safety devices, crossing watchmen, and many other expenses inherently a part of railroad operation that do not apply to their competitors at all, or the expenses of which are now carried by the State and local communities in which or through which they pass in the conduct of their business.

The hearings held by the committee which has this bill under consideration developed the fact that the most outspoken and strenuous opponents of its enactment were representatives of water and motor carriers who were in direct competition with the railroads. Their objection is to be expected. It is natural that they should object. It would be strange if they did not object. But an objection based solely upon natural instinct gives neither reason nor justice to sustain it. The fact is plain to see that these competitors now have an advantage which they seek to hold. If there was no advantage to them under the law as it now is, they would not be protesting against the enactment of this legislation. They are not interested from the standpoint of the shipper or anyone else. They have only one interest to serve and that is their own business; and if the present legislation sought to place the same restriction upon them as now applies to railroads under section 4, they would oppose it.

The present law and its manner of administration by the Interstate Commerce Commission have proved a great handicap to the railroads. It has prevented them from adjusting their freight rates to meet competition. This has resulted in diverting a great amount of traffic to other forms of transportation with a heavy loss of revenue to railroads, thereby resulting in less railroad employment, decreased purchases of durable goods and materials, and increased difficulty to meet taxes for Government purposes.

There can be no justification, economic or otherwise, for a condition created by law that limits one competitor in a right to fix a rate to meet the rates fixed by competitors utilizing a different method of transportation. Clearly no barrier, such as the present long-and-short-haul clause, should be set up to prevent one form—the railroads—from competing. The testimony presented to the committee shows beyond dispute that steamship lines now adjust their charges on such a basis as may be necessary to meet all-rail competition, even though such charges may be less than they charge a shipper at an intermediate port through which such traffic may move. For example, steamships operating between the north Atlantic coast cities, on the one hand, and south Atlantic, Gulf, or Pacific coast ports, and to inland points contiguous thereto, reach out far into the interior and make total charges as may be necessary to compete with the railways. They are not handicapped by any such thing as a long-and-short-haul clause.

Why should New Jersey railroads, and those of other States, be stopped through the administration of the long-and-short-haul clause from adjusting their rates to enable them to meet water competition? New Jersey, like other States on the seacoast, Gulf, or Great Lakes, is clearly interested in the continued maintenance of the water carrier serving its ports. But it is likewise heavily interested in its railways. The same is equally true with respect to motor carriers. Each form of transportation is entitled to share in the traffic available and the shipper of commodities is entitled to all the benefits to be derived from diversity of transportation facilities without being penalized by higher rates when using one form of transportation as against another, such higher rates not being the result merely of different kind of service rendered, but based solely upon a provision of law not equally applicable to all forms of transportation. The long-and-short-haul provision has proved unfair to railroads and unfair to shippers. Common fairness demands that the several forms of transportation be treated alike. It is a poor rule that does not operate both ways.

There has been some fear expressed based upon the thought that intermediate points might be required to bear an unjust part of the cost incident to the long haul. I have given this matter careful consideration and I am unable to find any substantial basis upon which such a claim can be properly made. Those who have such a thought overlook the fact that there is nothing in this bill that will in the slightest degree curtail, diminish, or take away the right, duty, and power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix and determine fair and just rates, having due regard to the "out of pocket" cost of the service rendered. In other words, rates and charges will still be subject to regulation and approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission even after the enactment of this bill. Consequently, it would not be possible for railroads, if relieved from the onerous burden of the long-and-short haul provision, to fix a rate for a long haul below the cost of such service merely to compete with or take away the business from competing water or motor carriers. Nor would it be possible with such regulatory power of the Interstate Commerce Commission still existing for any railroad to fix a rate for a long haul that would, directly or indirectly, place an unjust burden upon intermediate points to carry the cost of the long haul. There is no doubt within my own mind, after a most careful study of the whole subject, that the continuing regulatory power of the Interstate Commerce Commission is sufficient to fully and adequately protect shippers, motor and water carriers, in their respective rights.

The labor aspect of this question should likewise be given consideration. This bill has the united support of the 21 standard railroad organizations. Their representatives appeared before the committee and made a most impressive presentation of facts showing a widespread condition of unemployment among the railroad workers and the necessity for relief from existing conditions. Likewise, the bill has the support of most of the shippers' organizations throughout the Nation and many farm organizations. And after a most careful examination of the facts, that have a relationship to the matter, I am convinced that no public interest will suffer but will, in fact, be substantially served by the enactment of this legislation. It is essential that the railroads, the backbone of our transportation system, be permitted to function on a sound and profitable basis and adapt their rate structures to competitive requirements of commerce.

In conclusion, I again express my belief that a bill such as this, which has the united support of the railroad labor organizations, shipping organizations, and railroad management, and favorably reported to this House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in a form that does not diminish the regulatory power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix and determine fair and just rates in the public interest, is entitled to the favorable consideration of the membership of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to take the report which they have in their hands and turn to the last part of the majority report. There they will find a large list of people, commercial clubs, societies, and newspapers which have petitioned for this bill. On page 34 Oregon commences. There are about a thousand names, I should judge, on this list that are cited as being in favor of the Pettengill bill, and 308 of them are from Oregon. They certainly put the fire under me. Immediately after that list was prepared I sent letters to all those people who had petitioned and whose names appear there. Many of them are personal friends of mine. I know practically all of them. This bunch of letters that I have in my hand represents the correspondence that has gone on. Practically half of them, Mr. Chairman, have repudiated this and have said that they did not belong on the list for the bill, and the others say they were simply fooled.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. Oh, I have just 5 minutes, and the gentleman had 20 minutes. He will allow me to read this letter, and if I can have a minute or two I shall then be glad to yield. The first one that I read is from central Oregon:

PRAIRIE CITY, OREG., March 23, 1937.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE,
Member of Congress, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: I know you are opposed to the enactment of the Pettengill railroad bill with the long and short haul included.

There was brought to my attention yesterday the fact that there are two men from Portland going from town to town soliciting letters and resolutions from chambers of commerce and other civic organizations favoring the enactment of the Pettengill bill. I understand their method is to contact the officers of these organizations and get their stationery and tell them that they will draft the letter and type it for them and all they will have to do is sign it. Of course, in this district they are sending these letters to you, and they are getting a lot of signers. I think this is a very underhanded way of gaining their way. I am not informed, but I suppose these men are employed by the railroads. I am also told that they are not using the same form of letter in every case, but are making it appear that these letters are original by typing them on different typewriters and misspelling words, etc. When I heard of it I thought you should be informed, as it is not a free-will desire of your constituents; hence this letter.

I see by PETTENGILL'S speech of March 20, 1936, he has listed a large number of organizations and shippers who favor his bill. I presume they were secured under the same circumstances as mentioned above.

Thanking you for past favors, I am your friend,

ROGER KENT.

Here is another one:

MARCH 17, 1937.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PIERCE: In reply to your general letter of March 11 in regard to the Pettengill bill, I want to give you as best I can the position of the Condon Commercial Club regarding the matter.

The matter came up some time ago when there came to the president of the Commercial Club letters to our Representatives, written on our stationery and stating in substance that we had been and were in favor of the repeal of the fourth section of the Transportation Act. All these letters lacked were the signatures of the secretary and the president of the club. However, President McKennon, of the Commercial Club, did not sign the letters, nor did I as secretary. Instead he brought the letters to meeting where they were read. In the discussion which followed there was not one single expression of opinion favorable to the repeal or modification of the long-and-short-haul clause, but there were many against it—and especially were there many expressions of amazement at the manner in which the thing was being put over.

Upon motion from the floor duly made and carried, the letters were ordered tabled. There was then and has been since no intention of bringing them up. Had these letters been signed by mistake or misunderstanding, however, they would have committed the Commercial Club to a position which it has never been on record as holding. It is barely possible that such an error might have occurred in some instances.

The stationery was obtained from the various clubs and chambers of commerce some time last fall by a representative of the interested parties. I do not remember the gentleman's name nor do I remember the date. But I am merely explaining how the thing was handled in our case so that you may judge accordingly.

Very sincerely yours,

HAROLD F. CRAM,
Secretary, Condon Commercial Club.

Now, here is a sample of some of the telegrams that I have received:

APRIL 4, 1937.

WALTER M. PIERCE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Informed through Eugene Pratt that CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows Owyhee irrigation district and Vale Owyhee Land Settlement Association endorsed Pettengill bill. That is false. Matter never presented to directors, and know they emphatically oppose it.

FRANK T. MORGAN, Secretary.

MARCH 19, 1937.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

List Oregon organizations favoring repeal long-and-short-haul clause sent by you Wheat League includes Condon Commercial Club. Where did this information originate? This organization has never gone on record favoring such legislation. Any report to that effect is without authorization. Please trace such, if possible, and advise us immediately. Letter follows. We are ready to go the limit to discredit this type pressure.

CONDON COMMERCIAL CLUB,
By R. M. MCKENNON, President.

What is the object of this legislation? It is to kill off water transportation. Be honest about it. That is all there is to it, so that there will be more money to move down to Wall Street. Will the railroads reduce freight rates? Yes; for terminals out where Mr. LEA lives. They will lower the rates until the water transportation goes out. Water transportation cannot continue at a loss. When water transportation is ruined, then up will go the rates. Are they going to get more money? Yes; in a general raise of the freight base. That is what it is, and nothing else. It is nothing more than to get more money to bolster up the great big bloated capitalization of the railroads down there in Wall Street.

Are they going to get it? Sure, they are going to get it. I have seen freight rates go up in my home 60 percent since the war, and they are going up again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] has expired.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege of revising and extending my remarks and including therein such letters and telegrams as I have here denying or repudiating their appearance as proponents of the Pettengill bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Oregon that the request to extend his own remarks to include extraneous matter must be submitted in the House and not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is this extraneous matter? It is matter that is very pertinent, in the opinion of the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that in Committee of the Whole a Member may extend his own remarks but may not include therein any extracts from other matters than his own particular remarks.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Except what he has read?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, what he has already read is in the RECORD, or supposed to be.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I wish to call attention to the fact that this is not extraneous matter, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the inclusion of telegrams, letters, or other writings other than those actually read in Committee of the Whole will have to be inserted in the RECORD with the consent of the House and not the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill, as I regard it as unnecessary and at the same time as dangerous legislation. For years the railroads have been under the auspices and protection of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and quasi-judicial machinery has been provided whereby they can, in a proper case, obtain from the Interstate Commerce Commission the relief sought by this legislation. The railroads have, in fact, obtained this relief in the past in a vast majority of the cases where they have applied.

The history of the railroads before 1887 is not pleasant reading. It was the history of economic oppression and political corruption in both the States and the Nation. Through the medium of this unneeded legislation we are at one fell swoop returned to the old days, when the railroads exploited or destroyed localities at will. This legislation takes the burden of proof off the railroads and places it on the shoulders of the locality or shipper. To obtain relief, the locality or shipper must make a journey to Washington. He must employ rate experts and lawyers familiar with the practice before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The expense of this will be prohibitive, with the result that shippers and localities will be destroyed.

Some of the Members of the House, yielding to pressure groups, are complacent about this procedure. They fail to consider the far-reaching effect of this legislation. May I say to such Members who are voting willy-nilly on this proposition that in my judgment no legislation has been attempted during my service here that is more important to the locality or fraught with more economic danger to the Nation.

Our distances in America are so great that transportation will always be a problem of first magnitude. May I say, too, that I have no quarrel with the railroads or with the men in their service. I am definitely opposed, however, to this unneeded legislation. If this legislation is passed, it is the purpose of the railroad management to kill off coastal merchant marine, which is an essential arm of the national defense. It will kill off the waterways in the interior of the country. It will kill off truck transportation. It will drive shipping now furnishing low-cost transportation off the Great Lakes and into the discard.

Joseph B. Eastman, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission and former Coordinator, railroad-minded to a fault, testified before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House on February 9 in this year of our Lord and opposed the enactment of this legislation as being against public interest and injurious to the best basic interests of the railroads.

In conclusion, let me urge that this legislation be defeated in the interest of an orderly development of the Nation. I ask you to put aside the influence of pressure groups who have been brought into this situation by virtue of the most far-flung, the most vigorous, and most efficient lobby that I have seen in my time. In the interest of the country, I ask that this bill be defeated in the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] has expired.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fourteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss at any length the rate structure. In fact, I could not discuss anything at any length in 10 minutes. I do want to call to the attention of the Committee at this time the industrial development that is going on in the United States, which, in my judgment, is due very largely to the long-and-short-haul clause.

In the first place, in considering it, we must remember that we are not living in the days of 1887 nor of 1900 nor of 1910, nor even 1920. May I remind the Committee that it was in 1920 that the last amendment, putting so-called additional teeth into the long-and-short-haul clause, was adopted by the Congress. It is fair to say that prior to 1920 the railroads were without effective competitors. Since that time the whole picture has changed, due to two causes, the opening to commercial traffic of the Panama Canal and the development of motor trucking.

The World War interrupted or postponed the commercial operation of the Canal. It was not until about 1920 the Canal began to be used to anything like capacity by commercial vessels.

In 1920 the Canal began to operate in its usual and expected manner, and along about 1920 the motortruck began to become an important element.

I would like to point out, if I may, by the use of this map, what the general trend has been since 1920. If you will examine the census figures, you will find that in the last 10-year period for which the census figures were made, that of all the increase in the population of the United States 60 percent of that increase is found to have occurred within 50 miles of the Atlantic Ocean, or the Gulf, or the Pacific Ocean, or the Great Lakes. In that same period you will find that the population of the central valley States has practically stood still. The increase has been so slight as to be almost negligible. I think I can point out some incidents in the industrial trend which will demonstrate why it is that our population is increasing by leaps and bounds along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the lower Great Lakes and not in the interior. Let us take, for example, the city of Minneapolis. This city, as you all know, has been an important center of the milling industry. Prior to 1920 that huge industry ran along in normal fashion, but with the opening of the Panama Canal it was found that flour could be shipped from the lower end of the Great Lakes by rail to New York and then by water clear around through the Panama Canal and up the Pacific coast cheaper than the Minneapolis millers could ship it from Minneapolis to Seattle by rail. What happened? A large and important section of the Minneapolis milling concerns moved their plants to Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Does the gentleman know that 20 percent of the wheat produced in the United States is produced west of the Rocky Mountains, but that 40 percent of that wheat must find an outlet in foreign export?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I could recognize the relevancy of the gentleman's question, I would try to answer it.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman has been speaking of the movement of wheat. We have always had surplus wheat in the West, but we have to find an outlet for it in the export trade.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield for a statement. I yielded only for a question.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. HOPE. Was not the movement of the milling industry from Minneapolis to Buffalo very largely due to the milling-in-bond of Canadian wheat?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In part; but principally to take advantage of this very low rate from the Atlantic coast through the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast with which the railroads today are not allowed to compete between Minneapolis and the coast. That is what has happened, and our population trend shows it. I am trying to look at this matter from a broad national standpoint. Mr. Chairman, this country is slowly but surely, in the matter of industrial concentration, growing lopsided.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield; I want to continue with my illustrations.

Let us take the steel industry. It was found in the testimony before our committee that steel produced at Pittsburgh and at Buffalo can be put on the rails and sent to the headwaters of the Chesapeake at Baltimore, or to New York, and then shipped by steamer through the Canal to Los Angeles and San Francisco cheaper than it can be shipped from Pittsburgh across the continent; so, naturally, the steel movement originating east of the west line of the State of Pennsylvania moves eastward for a short distance by rail and then by water to the Pacific coast, whereas the steel industry at Gary, Ind., cannot put its products on the west coast.

It is too far from the Atlantic to pay the rail rate from Chicago east, and the rate from Chicago to the Pacific coast is too high. Under the law, the railroads cannot reduce it. So this whole steel development around Chicago cannot compete on the Pacific coast, although it is many, many miles nearer the Pacific coast than the steel industry at Pittsburgh. And the same thing is true at Youngstown, Ohio. Youngstown, Ohio, is west of the west line of the State of Pennsylvania and cannot get into this preferred region. It is too far across the continent to the coast at present rates for it to ship. All this steel development at Cleveland, and at Youngstown, and at Chicago, therefore, is confined for its market largely to the Central West. The result of that, of course, is that the population is trending toward the Atlantic coast, or to those points on the Great Lakes which get the advantage of water transportation with which railroads are not allowed to compete. Look at the way Detroit has grown. Look at the way New York has grown. Look at the way the industrial centers of the East have grown. As an easterner, I may be proud of it; but I think it is a dangerous tendency in this country to have a concentration of industry at a few great industrial centers. It raises not only economic questions but it raises social and political questions which today are being felt all over this country.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question.

Mr. PETTENGILL. The gentleman knows that the manufacturers' census shows that from 1919 to 1927, a period of 8 years, 18,000 industries were lost to Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Wisconsin, and Minnesota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true. The industrial development of this whole middle western country is at a standstill.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For a question.

Mr. COLDEN. Would the gentleman deprive this country of the advantages of cheap water transportation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I would not, but I would allow cheap rail transportation also, and that is forbidden. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. For a question only.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, the bill which we have before us has as its objective the repeal of section 4 of the Transportation Act of the United States, the portion of the act now under attack being referred to as the long-and-short-haul provision. That is not a proper descriptive term to use in describing the section of the law which is being assaulted at this time. If properly described, it would be referred to as the equality-of-rate provision of the Transportation Act. It is the part of the law of the land which guarantees equality to every community, every city, every part of the United States. The act itself is one which was devised to insure fair trade practices in the United States. It is but one of the acts which have been put upon the statute books for the purpose of accomplishing that most salutory objective, but not by any means the least of them in importance.

Mr. Chairman, if we repeal section 4 as it is now written upon the statute books of the United States we are going to put the finger of approval upon discrimination and inequality as against some of the people of these United States. I was deeply impressed with what the gentleman from New York had to say about the concentration of industry in certain portions of the United States, but I was more interested in maintaining the principal of fair dealing in every part of the United States for the benefit of every little community, of every great community; in seeing to it that each has its deserved spot under God's sun.

If we take this from the statute books it means there are going to be discriminations in favor of certain localities, and let me remind the Members, and you know this is philosophically true; you cannot discriminate in favor of anyone without at the same time discriminating against another. If some one city or section is to be given favored rates so that they shall be able to transport their goods cheaper, then all the other communities of the United States have got to pay higher rates because the railroads will have to recapture the sacrificed freight rates somewhere in order to make the books balance. If section 4 is repealed 90 percent of the communities of the United States are going to suffer as a consequence of our turning our back upon the principle of equality, fairness, and justice in order to support the principles of special privilege, inequality, and unjust discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, this is the most reactionary measure presented to the Congress during my membership herein. It would destroy equality. It would destroy fairness in business. It would destroy fairness of opportunity.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, a gentleman favoring this bill said a moment ago that the livestock men could look well after their own interests. That certainly is true. They know what it means to have higher freight rates established. I hail from a far-off country in the Southwest. The livestock people down there, as well as the farmers of Arizona, have asked me to oppose this bill because they recognize it means higher freight rates for them in shipping in what they need from manufacturing points in the East and also in shipping out their own products. There is no question in their minds, nor in mine, as to how the livestock people and the farmers of Arizona feel about this bill.

I am glad this map has been placed before us. I ask you please to refer to the map. Two great transcontinental railroads cross Arizona, because, after all, lying within my State is the lowest portion of the continental backbone within the United States. Two-fifths of all the transcontinental rail traffic, then, apparently goes right through here. I am certainly deeply interested in the well-being of those railroads. I recognize what we owe them. It is said that the railroad brotherhoods in general have gone on record as favoring the Pettengill bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am a new Member of Congress. I understand my predecessor was flooded last session with petitions from railroad brotherhood men in Arizona asking support of this measure. I believe there is a definite decline in that demand, because it has not been made of me to so great an extent. I wonder if the railroad brotherhoods, on second thought, feel that they have been under a misconception concerning it. Have they found that the passage of this bill would mean a higher cost of living for all of them and no increase in employment? It has been shown here that any small additional traffic gathered by the rails, which would be taken away from the ships and trucks, would not appreciably increase the rail volume. In other words, that traffic increased to the railroads by this act could be carried upon the same trains and with the same crews now operating. I believe such is the situation.

Mr. Chairman, although I am a landlubber, I recommend that we do not destroy or impair the water-borne commerce from one of our coasts to another or commerce on our inland waterways. Let automotive and water transportation be duly regulated by public authority if there now exists unfair competition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY].

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, pass this Pettengill long-and-short-haul bill and you open the gates for the exploitation of the great Middle West. The only thing this legislation will accomplish is the placing of additional hardships upon the farmers, merchants, and industrialists of that great part of our country lying between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains.

This so-called long-and-short-haul bill is a railroad bill that is being railroaded through Congress. Its sponsors say that it will allow railroads to charge less for a long haul than for a short haul. In plain and simple words, the Middle West is supposed to pay the freight rates on goods shipped from one coast to the other. The farmers from Colorado to Ohio will pay the high rates—they are the ones who will be penalized.

The railroads want to destroy their ship and truck competitors. To do this they ask the passage of this bill, which will allow for the rawest discrimination against shippers and communities. The railroads could reduce the rates between points where they now meet truck and ship competition. To make up for these losses the poor sucker who lives in and around noncompetitive points would be forced to pay higher rates.

Let me analyze this talk about putting the railroads upon a competitive basis with trucks and ships. It is the wildest possible fabrication. The Pennsylvania Railroad system is not competing against busses and trucks any more than are the other railroads. Railroad companies own fleets of busses, trucks, and ships to furnish competition with their rail lines. Now they want help to meet the competition of their own subsidiaries. The railroads have been given enormous subsidies. One hundred and fifty land grants have been made to railroads, totaling more than 168,000,000 acres, and they talk about needing more help.

This Pettengill bill must be voted down if we are to maintain a prosperous agricultural inland empire. The farmer and businessman of the Middle States cannot be forced to assume the financial support of the coastal areas.

Let me illustrate the effect that increasing freight rates between noncompetitive points has on my own State of Nebraska. These cases are irrefutable and are drawn not from fancy but from cold facts. They exist now, and under this Pettengill bill they would be increased a thousandfold.

The passage of this bill would work a distinct hardship upon our cooperative elevator members, as well as the producers of grain. The Omaha branch of the Farmers National Grain Corporation has over 230 member elevators in Nebraska alone, with an average of over a hundred farmer producers belonging to each one of these set-ups. Hence, they are in a position to hear from a great many of those producers and know, to a man, that they oppose any legislation that would repeal the long-and-short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act, and they feel that the passage of the Pettengill bill would greatly penalize all elevators and shipping associations because they would come under the short-haul provision of this act.

Let me read a fine case of discrimination into the RECORD. At present the rail rate in carlots on citrus fruit from Los Angeles to New York City is $1.55 per hundredweight extra emergency rate, and the rate from Los Angeles to Omaha is $1.55 extra emergency rate. A box of oranges weighs 80 pounds. The freight, therefore, is $1.24 from the Pacific coast to Omaha or from the Pacific coast to New York City. The distance to Omaha is approximately one-half the distance to New York. Therefore it is obvious that Omaha consumers are paying 62 cents more for a box of oranges in order to permit the railroads on the long haul to deliver oranges at New York at a low cost of freight. It should be true that if the long haul produces a sufficient return at $1.24 a box, the short haul to Omaha should produce a sufficient return at 62 cents a box.

Now, when this matter is brought to argument on competition, it is asserted that the rate of $1.55 was forced upon the railroads by competition with refrigerator boats passing through the Panama Canal. However, the rate on citrus fruit before the refrigerator boats were put into service was $1.75, and the boat lines, in order to obtain tonnage, put a rate of $1.55 into effect, which was immediately met by the transcontinental railroad lines. However, there was no water rate from the Pacific coast points to Omaha, and therefore the rate here was not disturbed.

It will be clearly apparent to you that Omaha or Lincoln, even under the present control of the long-and-short haul, is discriminated against to the extent of 62 cents on every box of oranges that comes into the city, and if the Pettengill bill is passed a much greater discrimination can result, providing the transcontinental railroads may see fit to further reduce the transcontinental rate between seaboards to entirely eliminate the competitive boat service, and still enjoy the present high rate from Los Angeles to Omaha.

Just one more concrete example will show the effects of increased discrimination in rail rates as proposed in this bill. About a year ago the carriers published a rate on canned goods from California to Chicago and points east which was 15 cents per hundredweight cheaper than to my part of the country. We are in direct competition with the large wholesale grocers located in Chicago and Mississippi River points, and it does not seem that Congress should give the carriers the right to give them an advantage simply in order to help them protect themselves from water competition. Of course, it is a bad situation for them—but why should the Middle West continue to pay the cost, or to try to solve, and at the same time pay for the efforts of the carriers to meet water competition? It all resolves itself into the fact that the Middle West has for years received absolutely no advantage in the building of the Panama Canal; and, in fact, must have paid for it a good many times over because of our disadvantage in freight rates which have existed in the past and which the railroads are trying to push on us with even greater disadvantages for the future.

If the railroads can afford to cut the rates from California or the Pacific coast to Chicago in order to get the business, then they must be making some money in hauling it; and if they can haul it to Chicago at a cheaper rate than they are doing at the present time, why cannot they haul it to Nebraska, a distance of from 500 to 750 miles shorter, for the same amount? In fact, we should have a cheaper rate than Chicago or the Mississippi River, and now they propose to even charge us more. I am sure that my colleagues from the Middle West will realize that we cannot bankrupt our farmers, businessmen, and consumers to enable the railroads to compete with the water lines, and I hope all of you will realize what a disastrous effect such a situation would have.

The present fourth section of the act is a strong defense for protecting this vast intermediate territory, and we need this protection now more than ever on account of the development of the inland waterway transportation system. The Middle West naturally resents being taxed to support such a system and then to have the fourth section of the act amended so as to increase our transportation tax. We simply cannot carry the load.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill because I am opposed to a principle that would permit the charging of people to ride on the street car more for five blocks than would be charged for riding on the street car 10 blocks. I am opposed to the bill because it would retard and prevent the development of one of the greatest sections of the United States, a section which contains the greatest undeveloped resources in the Nation, located in that great intermountain section which reaches from Canada to Mexico.

In this great intermountain section, extending from Canada to Mexico through the Rocky Mountain region, we have been handicapped for years by high railroad freight rates and our development has been hampered. The railroads today are in a dilemma. They have been successful in "upping" their rates until they have them all out of line. Now, to get a share of the freight on the Pacific coast in competition with the steamships they desire not to reduce rates in the central part of the country but to reduce rates to the Pacific coast in order to compete with the ships, and to make the people in the interior, the part of the country which I represent, bear the burden of the cost of reducing the coast freight rates by paying a greater rate than do the people on the coast.

If you permit the repeal of this section, it will allow the railroads to lower freight rates to the coast and maintain high rates to the interior, and thus prevent the development of the interior country. As the gentleman from New York has pointed out—and I agree with him—the industrial development of this country is out of balance. If you pass this bill, you will prevent the development of any industry in the central part of this country when you repeal the fourth section, and industry will all be forced to the coast. Only recently in my State it was proposed to start a box factory, but the promoters found they could go to the coast and, because of the low rates to the coast, enjoy the same business in the interior, so we lost the box factory. We do not want to lose any industry which will develop the vast resources of this intermountain country. Our development has progressed to a point where, if we are to continue, we must have just and equitable freight rates. For this reason I am opposed to the pending bill, and hope the Committee will vote it down. [Applause.]

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, about 10 days ago I read in the editorials of a Philadelphia paper that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], the author of this bill, is in favor of an old-fashioned Congress. I believe the kind of old-fashioned Congress he wants is the kind of Congress that will return to the old times when the railroads controlled, when the policy was dog eat dog, everybody for himself, and the devil take the hindmost, until competition was destroyed; then railroad monopoly. This is what the pending bill will do. It will take us back to the old times. However, it is unnecessary to go back there because the railroads now have relief if they want to go before the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is unnecessary and it is unjust, because if we go back to those days we will get what we had before 1920. As the gentleman from New York stated, we had no competition then because competition was stifled. The railroads had a monopoly. We will go back to the time when from Detroit and Chicago the railroads would ship goods to Spokane and Yakima Valley, where I live, and charge us the freight rate to Seattle and then the local rates back to Spokane and the Yakima Valley. This is all the bill will do, and it is all they want it to do, otherwise they would not be in favor of the bill.

Who are for the bill? They say the railroads are for it. They are. But are the rank and file of the railroad men for it? I do not think they are.

May I say this: Let the railroads cut down their overhead expenses and then they will not be in the red. I have here a list of the commercial clubs and fruit-shipping industries in the Yakima Valley that are for this bill. The secretary of one of these clubs told me 4 years ago a certain division of a railroad laid off all the section men, except the foremen, and then kept in their employ seven vice presidents. This is why the railroads go in the red. The trouble is in their overhead expenses.

Who are opposed to the bill? The real shippers. In a strike there are three parties. There are the employers, the employees, and the suffering public. In this situation we have the water carriers on one side and the railroads on the other; and then the real shippers, the farmers, where do they stand? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a letter from the Grange.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, I listened intently to the eloquent and ingenious argument in behalf of this bill proposing to repeal section 4—the long-and-short-haul clause—of the Interstate Commerce Act. I find myself in hearty accord with what my colleagues have to say about the necessity and the importance of railway transportation. No fair cititzen can deny that the railways have performed a great service in the development of the entire country. I also share with my colleagues the gratification for the safety and the efficiency of the railways.

THANKS THE WORKERS

In surveying the benefits that the railroads have contributed to this country, I think we should fully recognize the part of the railway employees. The safety, the convenience, the efficiency of railway transportation is due to the high intelligence, the efficiency, and the loyalty of the men who perform the duties and grave responsibilities involved in railway transportation. It is not to the high-paid executives who sit in lavish offices in the great cities, and much less to the bankers and the brokers who guide the financial course of these utilities, but it is due to the blue-capped engineer whose hand is on the throttle, to the fireman who supplies the fuel, to the conductor, the brakeman, the porter, the station agent, the roundhouse mechanic, the yard man, and the track worker. Safety and efficiency in travel depend upon the loyalty, the sobriety, the clear thinking, the cool-headed conduct of these men. And not all the excellent qualities of these workers can be claimed by all railroad executives. The railway workers, or at least a considerable part of them, are members of the most outstanding organization of the labor world. These men by their own efforts have brought about the enviable position which they hold in organized labor; and it must be said that these splendid men have fought many a battle with railway managers for efficiency, for safety, and for a better standard of wages and hours, which has contributed not only to their own standard of duty and living but has been the chief factor in the success of the railways that employ them.

LOW WAGES FOR SOME

I desire to give due credit to the railways for maintaining a comparatively high standard of wages and a decent standard of living for many of their employees. I am also not unmindful of the fact that the track worker is among the poorly paid employees of this country. Frequently the pay of the track worker is so low that it does not afford a decent standard of American living. The railway track worker has been unable to organize to exert his collective power to secure a wage in comparison with the higher wages paid other employees. Other railway employees themselves, by their own intelligence and organization, have exacted from the reluctant railroads a much better wage. In this connection it might be said that it is regrettable that the American seamen, the worker on the ships, and many of the waterfront workers have not been paid a scale of wages in proportion to the skilled mechanics of the railways and of other industries.

A potent influence in behalf of this bill has been brought to bear upon the Members of Congress by the various railway organizations throughout the country. In spite of the unhappy results of the opposition of the railway executives to an adequate railway pension plan and to other reasonable requests, in this instance the employees have rallied to the support of their employers, a further proof of their loyalty. Undoubtedly railroad executives, with their tongues in their cheeks, have held out promises of wider employment, better wages, and other desired emoluments to win the support of the railway workers. If this were the only issue involved in this controversy, I would not raise my voice against this bill, but would be very happy to support it.

WHAT THE TESTIMONY SHOWS

I feel that the able gentleman from Indiana did not discuss all the issues raised by his proposed legislation. His argument was a careful and clever camouflage of the real issues in the background and the real purpose of this bill. Anent the suggestion that this measure means wider employment, let me call attention to the railway employees of the Southern Pacific Railway. At a hearing before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on Senate bill 563, to amend section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, held in May and June of 1930, Senator PITTMAN brought out this vital point—that the traffic of the railroads in a period of 12 years had increased 60 percent, but that the railroads had not increased their number of employees in the same proportion. The deduction was that, while the railroads are complaining about loss of traffic, it is not because of their interest in their employees, many of whom have been ruthlessly discharged wherever possible.

In 1930, at a hearing held in Phoenix, Ariz., on May 10, Mr. W. A. Worthington, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railway, testified that in 1930 an increase of approximately 33½ percent in west-bound tonnage and 15 percent in east-bound tonnage could be handled without an increase of train mileage and without requiring any additional trains; the substance of the contention of the railway representatives being that repeal of the fourth section would enable them to load empty cars and increase their volume of traffic and their revenues without a corresponding increase in cost and without the employment of additional labor.

A PECULIAR GENEROSITY

As I see it, the real objective in the proposed repeal of the fourth section is the elimination and destruction, as far as possible, of the competition of the highway and the truck, the waterway and the ship. Railways complain of the competition of the pipe line, the transmission of electric power, and the airplane—all the results of the march of progress. It has been repeated on this floor that the long-and-short-haul clause does not apply to the railway's rivals in transportation. So far as I am aware, there has been no evidence introduced to show an abuse of this long-and-short-haul principle in other lines of transportation. Sensible truckmen do not violate the sound rule of economics and of business by transporting commodities to a distance of 500 miles for a less amount than for a distance of 300 miles. It is a violation of sound economics to indulge in such practices. Consequently there must be some particular and peculiar reason why the railways ask for the violation of such a generally accepted rule.

Can you give any good reason why a meat market should sell a thousand pounds of meat for a less price than it receives for 750 pounds? Can you give any good reason why a grocery should sell a thousand sacks of sugar to the same customer for a less price than it sells him 500 sacks? Can you give any good reason why a clothing house should sell three suits of clothes or three pairs of shoes for a less price than it sells two suits or two pairs? Is there any sound reason why the poultryman should sell 10 dozen eggs for less money to the same customer than 5 dozen eggs? What would you think of a worker who offered his toil for 12 months for less than he received for 10?

The Pettengill bill is a most clever and adroit proposal to cover ruthless and ruinous discrimination with a cloak of legality. From the standpoint of economics and commerce, it offers a fallacious policy. For what reason does a railway desire to transport commodities 3,000 miles for less than it would charge to transport the same commodities a distance of 2,000 miles over the same rails? What is the purpose of a railway's desiring to offer to transport the manufactured goods of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland, and similar points, to Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Seattle for less tariff than it charges for the transportation of the same cars and similar goods to intermediate points, such as Wichita, Fort Worth, Denver, Phoenix, Salt Lake, Spokane, and other points?

REVISED RATE STRUCTURE NEEDED

The bug in the rug in this instance is a purpose to carry out a program that discriminates against intermediate points and for the sole purpose of destroying water and truck commerce between competitive points. Industry and agriculture and commerce everywhere would greet with cheers any earnest and honest effort to reduce railway transportation rates throughout this country. The railway rate structure of this country is a modern puzzle system that would confuse a Chinese lawyer or the author of a Dutch almanac. The railway executives of this country could do this country a great service if they would but simplify rate structures, eliminate some of the discriminating advantages of competitive points, and give the intermediate points, cities, and towns an opportunity of commercial and industrial development.

DISCRIMINATIONS ROB AND DESTROY

Allow me to give an example of the discriminations that exist today to the advantage of competitive points. Carload rates on commodities are the same from San Francisco and Los Angeles into Arizona and New Mexico. Los Angeles, geographically and by the usual travel routes, is but half the distance from this territory as is San Francisco. From the standpoint of logic and economics, as applied to the cost of transportation, one would arrive at the conclusion that the point but half the distance should have a correspondingly less rate. But such is not the practice. I once lived in a small town in Northwest Missouri known as Parnell. It was a half-way railway point between Kansas City and Des Moines, yet the railways would deliver lumber in Des Moines at the same freight rate as in Parnell—twice the distance. Under the fourth section this discrimination is not a violation of the law, which only limits the railway to charges for a long haul that are not less than for the short haul. But it is easy to see the effect on a small town.

Repeal of the fourth section as proposed would permit the railways to take rate making into their own hands and permit them to charge less for a long haul than a short haul. You would upset not only the transportation rate structure but you would disturb commerce, industry, and agriculture in every part of the country. It would be within the power of the railways, if they so desired, to haul Oregon wheat to Minneapolis and Chicago at a less rate than would be charged to the wheat farmers of Kansas. It would give the railways the legal right to ship flour from St. Louis to Denver for a less rate than from Topeka and other intermediate points. The same discriminations might be applied from Minneapolis to New Orleans, Galveston, and other competitive points. It would permit the railways to charge less for the transportation of rubber tires from Ohio to points in the Northwest than from the tire factories of Los Angeles. It would permit the shipping of all kinds of products east of the Mississippi to the Pacific coast for a less charge than from points in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and other inland States. Such a change in railway charges would close the doors in hundreds of factories not only on the Pacific coast but in other parts of the interior. It would wholly upset the basis upon which local manufacturing and distribution is now conducted. In some parts of the country it would throw thousands of men out of work. It would place the commercial and industrial enterprises of thousands of intermediate towns and cities at the mercy of railway executives, their whims and their personal and selfish concern. And for what purpose? Only to enable railways to grab a larger volume of traffic from the highways and waterways, and probably without the running of an extra train or the employing of an extra man.

FAIR PLAY FOR WHOM?

The proponents of the Pettengill bill have talked much about fair play. What would such a policy do to the merchant marine? It would practically destroy all intercoastal shipping. It would deprive the ships plying between the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast of their cargoes. This intercoastal shipping amounts to approximately $40,000,000 annually as against the three billion yearly income of the railways, which amounted to six billion before the depression. If the railways secured all this intercoastal transportation business, it would add but 1⅓ percent to their present revenues. This bill gives no consideration to nor does it count the cost to the 165,000 American seamen now employed by our merchant marine. Thousands of these seamen would be thrown out of employment. Other thousands of water-front employees—dock workers, warehouse employees, clerks, and checkers—would be thrown out of jobs. Analysis of the hearings on the repeal of the fourth section raises a doubt of any added employment by the railroads, but there is no question as to the result of unemployment to ships and trucks if this measure should be enacted into law.

LOS ANGELES A VICTIM

My own city of Los Angeles has expended approximately $50,000,000 in the development of one of the outstanding ports of the world. The city of Los Angeles has a bonded harbor indebtedness of $30,000,000. Not only would thousands of workers around this port be deprived of employment but the harbor revenues of the city would be seriously depleted, throwing additional burdens on the groaning taxpayer. Harbor improvements, because of loss of revenue, would fall into decay.

This harbor has developed a commerce that has averaged some 20,000,000 tons per annum during the past 10 years. It has saved to the people of the Southwest at least a hundred million dollars per year in transportation costs. If the railways succeed in destroying this water competition, it will follow as the night the day that the railway rates would advance and the people of the Southwestern States would again be at the mercy of a monopolized railway transportation system as they were before the completion of the Panama Canal.

Some of those advocating the Pettengill bill have complained of the air, the seas, the rivers, and the lakes, as if they were the transgressors in this transportation picture. According to their inverted viewpoint, Divine authority should be on the side of the railways, and the air, the rivers, and the lakes, and the seas should be penalized for invading their rights. Let us not forget that the natural transportation system of the world for centuries has been by water. The sea and the rivers and the lakes are open to whomever may desire to use them. It is the greatest highway system of the globe, and it gave its service to humankind ages before the toot of the locomotive was heard as it came round the bend.

THE QUESTION OF TAXES

A year ago our eloquent colleague from Indiana emphasized the larger amount of taxes paid by the railroads than by the ships. I accept that statement as correct, but I am quite sure that the keen and analytical gentleman from Indiana is aware of the fact that the right-of-way of the ship and the barge is not taxable property. Permit me to remind the gentleman that there are few schoolhouses on the right-of-way of the ship and the barge, and they have no part in the transportation of a vast area of our interior; and, further, railway terminals require a very heavy investment which are within the boundaries of our many cities where real estate is valuable. On the other hand, steamship lines rarely own their shipping terminals; they own no sidetracks, no depots, no roundhouses, and many other accessories which are necessary to railway transportation. Would the proponents of the Pettengill bill tax the rivers, the lakes, the seas, the air, and the highways to defeat fair and up-to-date competition? Their ardor for the railways carries them into a whirlwind of contradiction and blinds their vision in a duststorm of fallacy. The statement was made that railroads paid 8 percent of their gross income for taxes in 1934. The National Association of Manufacturers is authority for the statement that during the same year over 27 percent of the national income went for taxes. The inference is plain.

The ardent advocates of this bill ignore the vast importance of the merchant marine. A merchant marine is a formidable part of national defense to both the Army and the Navy. Without a merchant marine, the efficiency of both Army and Navy would be seriously impaired. Recall the frantic and expensive efforts to build a merchant marine during the late World War. Our national neglect of a merchant marine placed our Nation in a helpless and dependent position. Billions of funds were extravagantly poured out to supply this deficiency. Are we so soon to forget this costly lesson after spending billions to foster shipbuilding and the maintenance of a merchant marine? Are we going to doze off into lassitude and lethargy and permit the railroads to utterly destroy one of the most important adjuncts of national defense?

OPEN VERSUS CLOSED ROUTES

Much is said about the competition of the highway, the stages, and the trucks. The highway, like the water route, is open to the use of everybody. Its right-of-way is not monopolized as is the right-of-way of a railway. The waterway, the highway, and the airway are the only routes of transportation that are free from monopoly and open to all. In this evolution of transportation, in which the highway has become such an important part, are we to curb it, to restrain it, to destroy it in order to preserve a monopoly for railway transportation? If the truck and the stage, with door-to-door service, are such transportation plagues, why do the railways engage in the business of which they so loudly complain? In some instances their venture into this field is evidently to drive out competition and to restore their monopoly of transportation. This same attitude has been pursued toward waterways for many years. Many instances can be shown where the truck, the bus, the barge, and the ship are used as feeders and make an important contribution to the business of the rails.

ALL THE TRAFFIC COULD BEAR

During the World War period railway passenger rates were boosted to 3.6 cents per mile, plus a 50-percent Pullman surcharge. After the depressing effects following the war began to be felt, the railways made no attempt to meet the requirements of the public, but continued to charge the inflated prices of former years. The railroads consequently suffered tremendous loss in both freight and passenger traffic. In the foreign countries of the world which I have visited, I have found the rate for first-class travel approximately the same as in our own. But in all of these countries, without any exception, there is also maintained a second class and perhaps a third or a fourth class rate of travel corresponding to the financial ability of those who desire to travel. Instead of meeting this situation as in other countries, when the stage began to invade the province of the railways, did they reduce their charges to meet such competition? No; they began to clamor to Congress to eliminate this competition. In many instances the railroad executives organized stage companies and paralleled their own railway tracks and lived off of the traveling public that would have patronized the railroad had the passenger rates been attractive. Some of the western and southern railways, observing and analyzing the situation, reduced their rates to meet bus competition. We all know the result. Railway travel immediately increased. Revenues rose materially, the railways profited accordingly. Now, the Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered a general reduction of railway fares on the theory that the railways will profit and the public be benefited. Results approve this contention.

RAILWAYS SET UP COMPETITION

I want to cite an example that I observed last year after the adjournment of Congress. While in New York, I desired to visit Boston. I purchased a stage ticket on a line currently reported to be allied with the New York & New Haven Railway. This ticket cost $3.75, while independent lines were offering this same service for $3. This stage contained 30 seats, and I noted that every one was occupied. Upon my return from Boston, I purchased a railway ticket on the New York & New Haven for $8.26. The car in which I rode had a capacity of 80 passengers. There were 16; only 20 percent of the car was occupied. Is it sound business to haul empty cars with a high fare and carry passengers at low rates by stage, operating the car on the railroad and the bus on the highway in the same direction, and to the same destinations? It appears to be business folly.

FOURTH SECTION SOUND

I believe the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act is sound and logical. A railway cannot, by any reasonable conception, haul commodities 2,000 miles for less money than it can haul the same cars over the same tracks for a distance of a thousand or 1,500 miles. The theory of the Pettengill bill is utterly fallacious in my opinion. It is a camouflaged iniquity. It will bring innumerable hardships on all intermediate points. It will establish much more flagrant discriminations between industries and cities than now exist and which should be corrected. It will destroy our merchant marine, throw thousands of seamen and waterfront workers out of employment, without bringing a corresponding increase in labor and wages to the railroad employees. Under the Pettengill bill, the Panama Canal, now paying its way, would become a Government liability. The same fate would result to many municipal harbors. The destruction of our merchant marine would be a deplorable impairment of national defense.

TWO KINDS OF WATER

The railways chronically complain about water transportation, but the public, the investor, the consumer, and the worker have also complained about the "water" in the railways—not in their equipment—but in their financial structure, their stocks and bonds. This Congress could render real service to the railways and to the public, if it rejected this measure and then proceeded on constructive lines to loosen the railways from the stifling grip of banking trusts, from stock exchange manipulations, from financial rackets, which have piped off their earnings, burdened them with unnecessary indebtedness, prevented them from using their earnings for better tracks, better equipment, and better wages, and encourage them to reduce their overhead capital structure somewhere on a par with actual investment and actual value.

SOCIAL WELFARE INVOLVED

A sociological factor of huge importance is involved in railway rate structures. Railway discriminations have contributed prosperity to favored individuals and driven others to penury and despair. Railway favoritism has enriched one industry and depleted its competitors. Railway discrimination has driven the factory, the pay rolls, and the population from the intermediate towns, with their adjacent wide acres of plenty, to the congested centers of population, and condemned thousands to murky air, to hunger, to slums, and to a sordid and barren existence. Does this Congress propose to enact legislation that will further contribute to our problem of city congestion, poverty, disease and crime, or shall we "stop, look, and listen" and halt these unfair public policies that promote profit for a few and disregard the economic and social welfare of the multitude?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of our colleague the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL], who has just left the floor, the letter reflecting the attitude of the Grange is in the hearings and shows very clearly their opposition to the pending bill.

I am glad our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] took the time to discredit a lot of the alleged endorsements to this bill. I do not for one minute, even before my distinguished friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] takes the floor, expect him to defend all of the so-called endorsements because they were not of his making or of his origin. They were placed in the RECORD rather carelessly, I think, Mr. Chairman, with the approval of our committee, at the time one of the main proponents of this measure was before us, when he casually requested the permission of the committee to insert a list of endorsements coming from all over the country. Like the gentleman from Oregon, I have heard of many others who have found the organizations listed are not in favor of this measure.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I mentioned the name of the gentleman from Indiana. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PETTENGILL. May I say, of course, I do not know about each particular organization which is in favor of the bill. Many of the organizations were listed in the extension of my remarks a year ago, and I have never heard from anybody from the State of Oregon who stated he was inaccurately quoted in the RECORD at that time.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, one of the main proponents of this measure, Judge Fletcher, who represents the railroad executives, was interrogated by Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, during the Senate hearings. He was asked this question:

> And the Commission might suspend them (meaning rates under the long-and-short-haul clause) upon the application of some shipper?

Senator SHEPPARD was referring to the Pettengill bill. Judge Fletcher answered:

> Or upon their own notion if they see fit. Ordinarily, they do not suspend such rates unless somebody objects to them, but they have the right to do so.

This means, as has been pointed out today by so many Members, that every time a new rate violating the present long-and-short-haul clause is filed by the railroads with the Commission, before the rate can be disturbed the shippers back home, small or large, must come to Washington and bear the expense of travel, lost time, and what not, in order to attack the rate. If any of you have seen the schedules which have been filed, you know what this means.

I expect my friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], as he has done in his report, will criticize the delay of the Commission in acting on these cases. May I state these figures before we consider amendments to this measure: Between 1930 and December 31, 1936, the number of applications in which orders were entered granting temporary or continuing relief by the Commission in long-and-short-haul cases was 193. The number of applications in which orders were entered denying relief was 36. There were 248 applications in all. I am inserting in the extension of my remarks a complete table and statement demonstrating the expeditious handling of these cases by the Commission.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 1668, known as the Pettengill bill, was reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce after extensive hearings and upon a large division vote of the committee which, I am sure, will suggest the serious consideration of the measure by all Members of the House, now that it has reached the floor for discussion. A mere glance at the bill, supplemented by the general knowledge all Members of Congress have on the subject and the very helpful arguments which have been presented by both sides through the mail found in the files of each Member of the House, demonstrates the far-reaching effect and inestimable importance of any change, let alone a virtual repeal of the long-and-short-haul section of existing law, which this bill seeks to accomplish.

Of interest and importance, I am sure, to the Members of Congress, will be the historical background which this part of our law enjoys. We celebrate this year the semicentennial of the Interstate Commerce Commission Act passed in 1887, which act at that time contained a long-and-short-haul provision. It not only provided in section 4 thereof specifically as to the long-and-short-haul problem, but a major portion of the interesting, lengthy, and tremendous able debates on this new venture by the Federal Government into the transportation field, conducted in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress was directed to this provision. As the long-and-short-haul section of our law has been, therefore, a part of the original law ever since its passage, and has been disturbed or rather changed by subsequent sessions of Congress only for the purpose, as I think all will concede, to strengthen it and not weaken it, when we are faced today with a measure which, I think, again, all will pretty generally concede, cuts the very heart from the existing law, weakens it to the point that it might just as well not remain in the law, then I am sure the decision of every Member of this House will be registered only after the seriousness of this bill is fully appreciated.

Tiresome as it might be to some, but because of the important bearing it has on the subject before us, I have taken the time to study and read the hearings, debates, and reports in the sessions of 1887, 1910, and 1919, and for your information, and in as an impartial a way as possible, I wish to set out some of the interesting extracts therefrom.

In the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress at page 7755 is found the first recorded vote, which was taken on July 30, 1886, of the House on the passage of the then new Interstate Commerce bill, which vote was to finally pass the House bill substituted for the Senate bill which was before the House for consideration. The debate on this bill was lengthy and participated in by many of the leaders of the House at that time. It disclosed that in 1884—the last year available at that time—that the property invested in railroads amounted to $7,431,732,458, which was more than one and one-half times the capital employed in all the various manufacturing industries of the country with one inconsiderable exception, and that equaled seven-tenths of the value of all the farms and 27 percent of all the taxable properties of the States and Territories. The number of tons of freight carried on railroads in 1884 equaled 390,074,749, valued at $9,751,868,725, and they transported during the same year 334,814,529 passengers. Fifteen hundred thousand men were employed whose daily subsistence and that of their families depended upon the business of those roads.

With the aforegoing it is interesting to note today that at the end of 1933, the property investment of class I railroads was $26,126,379,547, and that in 1931, the seven transcontinental railroads had an investment in roads and equipment of $5,580,733,734.

Other comparative figures show the phenomenal growth of the railroads during the 50 years their rates have been subject to the provisions of section 4, and other parts of the Interstate Commerce Commission law.

Congressman Caldwell, of Tennessee, in the House on July 21, 1886, presented a lengthy and illuminating discussion of the legality of regulation of railroads by the Federal Government. It was a convincing rehearsal of the law. In summarizing existing reasons for the passage of such legislation, Mr. Caldwell made this statement:

> No harm can come to railroads by being compelled to do right. Disaster, public mistrust, and enmity have resulted from their own control. Railroad wreckers have grown rich on the spoils plundered from States and stockholders. The arrogance of tyrannical corporations has produced riot and bloodshed, and misery to mechanics, and poverty and bankruptcy to farmers.

Mr. O'Ferrall, of Virginia, page 7294, had this to say with reference to the short-and-long haul:

> The fourth section declares that it shall be unlawful to charge more for a shorter than for a longer haul. That means, sir, for instance, that a railroad company or any other common carrier shall not charge A $50 for carrying a carload of cattle, flour, grain, or other property 100 miles while it hauls a like carload for B 200 miles for $40.
>
> This discrimination in favor of long distances over shorter distances is another of the crying grievances of the present system.
> Where is the justice of it?
> I know that much sophistry has been expended to justify this rule; that gentlemen "versed in railroad matters" have appeared year after year before the Committee on Commerce of this House armed with "statistics" and loaded down with "facts" to show the justice and equity of a rule which taxes one man more for a short service than another for a service perhaps 10 times longer.
>
> Well, I do not profess to be versed in railroad matters or to be able to converse with the fluency or learning of a Gould upon these subjects, but I do profess to have a modicum of common sense, and it is that which should be brought into play in the consideration of a practical question.
> Sir, the most remote part of my district is not more than 175 miles from the city of Baltimore; Chicago, I think, is about 800 miles distant from Baltimore. It costs the people of my district more to send a carload of ordinary freight to Baltimore than it does the western shipper to send a carload of live freight from Chicago to the same point, more than four times as far.
>
> I find that in a former Congress it was shown that a carload from Omaha to San Francisco cost $300, while from Omaha to Virginia City, a distance of 600 miles this side of San Francisco, the charge was $800, so that for 600 miles shorter haul the charge was $500 more. In my own State along the lines of roads at way stations the rates are much higher for the shorter distances than they are many miles beyond for the longer distances.
>
> So throughout the length and breadth of this country the way stations and shorter distances must pay tribute to the centers and longer distances—they are the pack horses, and must stand all that is put on them.
>
> Now, sir, under this state of things, what remedy have the business interests of the country; what redress have agriculture, manufacturers, and commerce—the three pillars of our prosperity—unless the strong hand of our National Legislature shall be laid upon these monopolies and the decree go forth under the great seal of this Government prescribing limits beyond which they shall not go and laying down rules which they must regard?
> In this section, in my opinion, will be found all that may be required to give protection against the short-and-long-haul system of imposition.

Mr. Reagan, of Texas, author of the House bill, at page 7297, in one of the many speeches he made on this subject, referring to some of the arguments in opposition to the short and long haul, had this to say:

> The House has heard elaborate arguments this evening, which I have heard repeated over and over for 10 years, to demonstrate that it is honest and right to charge one man $25 for hauling a carload of freight from Chicago to New York, and at the same time to charge another man $100 for hauling a like carload from Pittsburgh to New York. Now, sir, there is not genius, ability, plausibility, nor eloquence enough in all the hired talent of the railroad corporations to convince an honest man that that is right. What is that provision of the bill? We have been told this evening that it would work unjust discrimination. Two gentlemen from Illinois have said that. How unjust? If the railroads running, for instance, from Chicago to New York are told, "You may charge to way stations along the route as much as you charge between your terminal points, but you shall not charge more", what is the wrong? Who is injured?
> It is the short-haul man that is discriminated against because he may, in that event, be required to pay as much as the long-haul man; but the bill says that he shall not be required to pay more. If he is compelled to pay more, what is the result? It is that the railroads, to secure freight at a competing point, may haul from that point at rates below what will pay, and if they do that and lose upon the transaction, they claim the right to charge the people at the way stations enough more than should be charged for hauling their freight to make up the lost revenue from the undercharge upon the freight hauled between the terminal points. Is that right? What is the effect of it? If they be permitted to charge for hauling to intermediate stations more than they charge shippers at the terminal point—remember, it is not more per ton per mile, but more in the aggregate for a given amount or kind of freight—if, I say, they be permitted to charge shippers at way stations more than they charge shippers at the terminal points, then they have the power to force the manufacturing of the country from the towns and villages and neighborhoods where living is cheap and health is good, to the trade centers where there are competing roads, and the power to enrich those at these centers by impoverishing the people at the cities, towns, and communities at intermediate points. What is more, if they can charge more to shippers at the intermediate places than to those at the terminal points, they can thereby increase the value of the real estate around the centers where there is competition, and reduce the value of land, the value of labor, the value of everything that makes up the comforts of life at every intermediate point between the terminal stations.

In the report of S. 1093 from the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, Forty-ninth Congress, made on January 18, 1886, which is found in Senate Report, first session, volume 2, 1885–86, which report was presented by Senator Cullom, is found the following:

> In 1885 a committee of five Senators appointed by the President of the Senate was set up to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of the transportation of railroad and water routes in connection with or in competition with said railroads of freights and passengers between the several States.

The report of S. 1093 followed this investigation.

While not directly applicable to the bill now before us, but because of its reference to interesting legal interpretations of the interstate clause of the Constitution, I quote this from that report:

The circumstances which brought about the incorporation of the commercial clause serve to explain the intent of the framers of the Constitution and the meaning of the language used. It is a well-known historical fact that one of the chief reasons for the change from a confederation of States to a Government by the people, with one Union and one Constitution, was that the confederacy was powerless to raise revenue and to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. This is shown by the fact that the first movement toward an amendment of the original Articles of Confederation was to give Congress enlarged power over the subject of commerce. When the convention assembled there was no controversy over the proposition to give to the General Government the control over commerce, and the provision now in the Constitution was incorporated in it as a necessity in the interest of the common prosperity of the people. Referring to this, Mr. Webster said:

"In the history of the times it was found that the great topic, urged on all occasions as showing the necessity of a new and different government, was the state of trade and commerce. * * * The New Jersey resolutions complain that the regulation of trade was in the power of the several States, within their special jurisdiction, in such a degree as to involve many difficulties and embarrassments; and they express the earnest opinion that the sole and exclusive power of regulating trade with foreign States ought to be in Congress. * * * The entire purpose for which the delegates assembled at Annapolis was to devise means for the uniform regulation of trade. They found no means but in a general government, and they recommended a contention to accomplish that purpose. Over whatever other interests of the country this Government may diffuse its benefits and its blessings, it will always be true, as matter of historical fact, that it had its origin in the necessities of commerce, and for its immediate object the relief of those necessities, by removing their causes and by establishing a uniform and steady system."

1. The public interest demands regulation of the business of transportation because, in the absence of such regulation, the carrier is practically and actually the sole and final arbiter upon all disputed questions that arise between shipper and carrier as to whether rates are reasonable or unjust discrimination has been practiced.

After summarizing the causes of complaints against the railroad system—pages 180 and 181—the essence of all the complaints is stated as follows—page 182:

It will be observed that the most important, and in fact nearly all, of the foregoing complaints are based upon the practice of discrimination in one form or another. This is the principal cause of complaint against the management and operation of the transportation system of the United States and gives rise to the questions of greatest difficulty in the regulation of interstate commerce.

It is substantially agreed by all parties in interest that the great desideratum is to secure equality, so far as practicable, in the facilities for transportation afforded and the rates charged by the instrumentalities of commerce. The burden of complaint is against unfair differences in these particulars as between different places, persons, and commodities, and its essence is that these differences are unjust in comparison with the rates allowed or facilities afforded to other persons and places for a like service under similar circumstances.

The first question to be determined, apparently, is whether the inequalities complained of and admitted to exist are inevitable, or whether they are entirely the result of arbitrary and unnecessary discrimination on the part of the common carriers of the country; and the consideration of this question suggests an inquiry as to the proper basis upon which rates of transportation should be established.

At page 195 is found a discussion under the head of "Rates on Long and Short Hauls"—

No question connected with the problem of railroad regulation has given the committee more perplexity than that relating to the utility and expediency of legislation prohibiting a carrier from charging more for a shorter than for a longer haul under any circumstances, not that we have any doubt as to the injustice of such a charge under most circumstances, but because it seems inexpedient to enforce such a regulation under all circumstances.

Palpable discriminations, peculiar to no State or locality, but too common, apparently, to all, would seem to be remedied by such a provision. It is asked for and urged to preclude the carriers from reimbursing out of local rates and shippers what they lose by reckless and needless competition upon through rates. It is too plain to be made plainer by argument that, within certain limits and under certain oft-occurring conditions, the provision would be a useful and fair one.

It does not seem as if there could be any justification for charging one shipper more for hauling a car of grain 50 miles than he or another is at the same time charged for hauling another car of grain 100 miles over the same road and in the same direction. The unfairness of the greater charge for a shorter distance is apparent, and yet when careful consideration is given to such instances and illustrations as have been cited to the committee it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that while the principle that no greater charge should be made for a shorter than for a longer distance is just and right, exceptions to the general rule may sometimes be warranted, even in the case of individual roads. And when the effect of the proposed prohibition is considered with reference to the whole internal commerce of the United States, and especially with reference to the necessity of reserving the prevailing cheap rates for long-distance transportation, there is reason to fear that the result of rigidly enforcing the proposed regulation would be to stifle competition in numberless cases where it now exists and is to the general public interest, and perhaps to deprive the country of the benefits of the low through rates now and for years given to and from the tidewater without practical or appreciable advantage to intervening points.

The purpose to be accomplished by prohibiting greater charges for shorter than for longer hauls is to equalize the existing differences between through and local rates. It is intended for the protection of those most in need of protection, the shippers at interior noncompetitive points, and to prevent corporate carriers from charging such shippers unreasonable rates in order to recoup the losses sustained in reckless rate wars and by carrying through freights at less than cost.

The accomplishment of the purpose aimed at is a "consummation most devoutly to be wished", and the necessity of remedying the discriminations complained of is apparent. The real question to be considered is, therefore, whether an absolute prohibition of a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance would accomplish the result desired by those who favor such legislation.

At page 197 is stated:

The committee is convinced of the necessity of some legislation upon the subject of long-and-short hauls. Many arguments of apparent strength are urged against such regulations by those who have given the question the most thoughtful consideration, but after all, the contentions for and against the proposition rest on theory, and so must rest until tested by experience. Such legislation must of necessity be largely experimental and its effects cannot be accurately determined in advance.

To guard against the dangers apprehended and predicted in case such legislation should be enacted, the committee has deemed it wise to propose that a greater charge for a shorter than a longer haul shall be declared presumptive evidence of an unjust discrimination, and that such charges shall be prohibited whenever they shall constitute an unjust discrimination. This, we believe, will place the determination of the relative difference between local and through rates upon a just and equitable basis, because in such determination the real question to be decided is not so much whether the through rates are too low as whether the local points are unjustly discriminated against. It is also proposed to place the burden of proof upon the railroads, where it properly belongs, and to compel them to justify any violation of the general principle that no greater charge should be made for a shorter than for a longer haul.

A large majority of the witnesses examined by the committee have urged the incorporation in the bill of a provision as to long and short hauls. We are satisfied that the sentiment of the country demands some regulation upon this subject, and with the safeguards provided in the bill herewith reported we recommend the enactment of the legislation proposed, well knowing that if, upon fair trial, the provision shall be found unfair to the carrier or against the true interests of the shipper, the people will, through appropriate legislation, promptly apply the corrective.

In the second session, the Sixty-first Congress of 1910, not only because of the importance of the provisions of H. R. 17536, known as the railroad bill then being considered, but also of the participants in the debate, amongst whom we find Mr. Mann, Mr. Washburn, Mr. Adamson, and many others of well-known reputation taking a prominent part, I call your attention to these debates because the act of 1910 included the first amendment to section 4 as passed in the original act, although the original act of 1887 had been changed by the Hepburn law of 1906, and supplemented by the Elkins antirebate law of 1903, but section 4 was not involved in those proceedings. Mr. Mann, of Illinois, in opening the debates, which debates were quite lengthy, made this important statement, page 4571:

But in dealing with the railroad problems in the past, Congress has wisely been cautious. It has endeavored to move forward step by step and has not tried to gain the top of the hill with a single bound. The enforcement of the original act to regulate commerce, as amended by the Hepburn law, and supplemented by the Elkins law, has shown that those who predicted that dire disaster would follow to the railroads and the country through the enactment of such legislation were, fortunately, mistaken. Railroad construction has proceeded; railway operation has become more efficient; railway management has become wiser, and, in the main, more honest. We believe the time has come when we can properly take a new step forward in the solution of the transportation problem. Under the wise leadership of the great statesman now in the White House, who himself served as a judge on the Federal bench in construing and enforcing the Commerce Act, we are now considering propositions somewhat in advance of those which have heretofore been made into law.

With special reference to the long-and-short-haul clause, Mr. Mann had this to say, page 4580:

Now, Mr. Chairman, while we have provided that the railroads cannot charge less for the long distance than for a shorter distance, or a less aggregate than the local rates, still we did not mean to make it so absolute that it might not be departed from. We have given the Interstate Commerce Commission, as it was given in the original law, power, upon petition in special cases, after investigation, to authorize a company to charge less for the long haul than they do for the short haul. That was in the original law; and in order that the business of the country might not be unduly disturbed, in order that the railroads might have time to accommodate themselves to the making of rates which will be required under this provision of law if it be agreed to, we have provided that no lawful rates now existing shall be interfered with for a period of 6 months after the passage of this act; or, if within that time a railroad company files an application in a special case, then the existing rate will not be interfered with until the application be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Still quoting Mr. Mann:

I think it is not difficult to tell something in reference to it. Take, for instance, transcontinental transportation. You can carry freight now from New York to San Francisco for less than you can from the Mississippi River to Ogden, Utah, and there is good reason for the discrimination. Freight from New York to San Francisco is in competition with vessels going around Cape Horn or steamers transshipping at Panama. That competition will be still more strenuous when the Panama Canal is constructed, and it may happen that a railroad company cannot afford to make as low a rate between all the intervening points and cannot afford to do so without carrying part of the freight between the extreme points. There may be reasons. I do not undertake to pass upon the particular case, but I can see reasons why the rate from New York to San Francisco may be made less by the Commission possibly than the rate from Chicago to some point in Nevada.

Mr. Madden, of Illinois, page 4937, with particular reference to the long-and-short-haul section, stated:

The subject of the long and short haul, upon which there has been much discussion and many attempts to secure congressional action, has not been overlooked. In the existing law it is provided in substance that the carrier shall not charge greater compensation, "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions", for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction.

As I pointed out in a speech on the defects of the present law in the last Congress, that language, as construed by the courts, left with the carriers an almost unbounded discretion and latitude for discriminations and favoritism, and practically made the so-called long-and-short-haul clause of the act a dead limb of the law. Now, the bill reported, as I am glad to observe, leaves out the words "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions" in the long-and-short-haul clause and prohibits a carrier from receiving greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to receive a greater compensation for a through carriage than the aggregate of the local rates. But as a safeguard against an undue and sudden disturbance of existing conditions and disjuncture of business connections, it is provided that the Commission may, upon application of the carrier, except it or relieve it from the operation of the provision. It is further provided that no rates or charges shall be required to be changed by reason of this provision prior to the expiration of 6 months after its going into effect, nor until the application to the Commission for relief from its operation shall have been acted on. Without going further into their discussion, I wish to say that I consider the limitations for the benefit of the carriers entirely proper to be enacted.

At page 5727 of the session of May 3, 1910, while the railroad bill was being read for amendment, Mr. Washburn, of Massachusetts, offered an amendment to strike out section 4, not because of any hostility to the provisions of section 4, but to restore the law as it was originally passed in 1887 and codified in 1906. In discussing his motion he stated:

This section affects one of the most complicated questions that can arise in connection with rate making, and it changes absolutely the policy under which the Interstate Commerce Act has been administered for more than 20 years. Whereas as the courts have construed the act the railroads may now take the initiative in making a lower rate for the longer than the shorter haul, and while under the existing law it is left to any party aggrieved to make complaint to the Commission, under the amendment as proposed in the bill the carrier wishing to charge less for the longer than the shorter haul is compelled to file a petition with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and only after hearing and a proper order entered by the Commission can the lower rate for the longer haul be permitted.

Aside from the fundamental objection to the section that as proposed in the bill it changes the law as already construed more than once by the Supreme Court, there is the further practical objection that it will place upon the Commission a burden under which the law cannot be successfully administered. This is not a new question. It was carefully discussed in 1887 when the original act was passed. It received very careful consideration in an opinion rendered by Judge Cooley, when chairman of the Commission in 1887, and subsequently has received judicial construction by the courts. In this connection we may perhaps profitably refer to the opinion expressed by Judge Cooley in 1887, when it was attempted to get from the Commission an opinion in harmony with the amendment proposed in the bill now before the committee.

Mr. Adamson, of Georgia, in arguing against the weakening of committee recommendations by amendments then on the floor, in part stated:

Now, it is perfectly fair to say that for the general public, for the thousands of towns in the interior, this rule should be enforced, and if there are special reasons, special cases, special points, exceptional cases that ought to be recognized for particular reasons, the conclusion of this section authorizes the Commission to permit it. It makes this difference: At present, as correctly stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Washburn], the railroads can take the initiative with a high hand, without interference by anybody, put their differentials in force and establish a discrimination, and then they stand in an entrenched position and must be assailed by the people in order to correct it.

At page 5735, Mr. Mann, of Illinois, took a very prominent part in the debate, particularly as to section 4. He had this important comment to make:

Mr. Chairman, for years I have been thoroughly convinced that the long-and-short-haul clause in the interstate commerce law ought to be made effective, ought to be made to mean what was intended when it was written into the law. With the millions of dollars which we are spending every year for the improvement of our waterways, for the benefit of the seacoast towns in the improvement of their harbors, I stand for the proposition that this, which all the country pays for out of the common Treasury, shall redound to the benefit of all the people.

Why should we spend millions of dollars to make for New York City a harbor with a waterway 1,000 feet wide and 40 feet deep, and then say that New York City alone shall reap the benefit in the way of competition with the railroads?

I want the little towns between the terminal points, the west between the mighty oceans, to get a part of the benefits which come from these improvements, paid for out of the pockets of all. This provision as it stands in the bill is fair to the railroads. It will not have the effect of increasing unduly the rates at competitive points, and it will compel the railroads which seek to carry freight in competition with the waterways to deal fairly with those points in the interior and intermediate points which are in competition with the competitive points.

On November 11, 1919, the railroad bill, known as the amendment of 1920, during the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, which bill terminated Federal control, was taken up for consideration. At page 8309 the debate opened with a statement from Mr. Esch, of Wisconsin.

On November 15, 1919, page 8582, Mr. Simms, of Kentucky, sought to amend section 4 and an extended debate followed. In connection therewith Mr. French, of Kentucky, stated that this amendment was one of the most important that has been presented in connection with this bill and much time should be allotted for discussion. Quoting briefly from Mr. Simms' argument, it was stated by him that—

* * * for years and years before the act of 1910 was enacted there had been much complaint about the construction and application of the law as it then existed. As it existed a lesser charge for a longer haul than a shorter haul over the same road in the same direction had been permitted when certain conditions existed, but the exception got to be the rule.

Quoting Mr. Simms further, page 8583:

The fourth section, as it now appears in the Commerce Act, forbade any carrier to charge more for a longer haul than for a shorter haul over the same railroad going in the same direction. That was and is the general provision of the law, and the plain intent of Congress and all the rest is exceptional and conditional. Exceptions should not be construed liberally, but the general law should be so construed in order to effect the purpose intended.

There is no doubt that the purpose was to prevent railroads from absolutely destroying interior points on their lines by giving a discriminating lower rate to a more distant point on the same road where competition existed, either by rail or water, or by both. Such a practice by the railroads had forced manufacturers and businessmen who wanted to get the best rates to forsake the noncompeting interior points and go to a point where there was as much railroad competition as possible and as much water competition as possible, in order to get such rates as such competition brought about.

Further quoting, at page 8583:

Now, Mr. Chairman, natural conditions which inherently give to a section or locality water competition should and does give that locality the benefit of water competition. Where there is a water route serving the same locality that is served by a rail route, those who are at that point have their choice, and if the water transportation is satisfactory and cheaper than the rail transportation, then let them use the water transportation. Do not permit a railroad company or authorize any commission on earth to permit a railroad company to destroy the value of Government appropriations expended to build the Panama Canal, to clean out the Mississippi River, to build millions of dollars' worth of water-transportation construction, to build boats, to deepen rivers and harbors, in order simply that the people having the benefit of water service shall by reason of having it get a rate upon the railroads that actually prevents the use of the water-transportation facilities that the people paid for from taxes out of their own pockets. There is no use in further improving rivers and lakes and harbors, there is no use in further building Government canals, if privately owned corporations operated for profit are permitted to reduce their rates fixed by law as just and reasonable to a point so low as to make it more desirable to use the rail facilities than the river, lake, or ocean.

Mr. French, of Kentucky, at page 8584, had this to say:

Long ago the fight was begun against the discrimination in rate charges against the intermountain country in favor of the people living on the Pacific coast. The first law that was passed by Congress that seemed to afford the promise of relief was passed in 1887, but benefits of this law continued but a year or so and under provisions that seemed to justify exceptions discriminations were shortly begun and have continued practically ever since.

In 1910, when further legislation was obtained on this subject, we thought that we had obtained something of relief. Section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act has to do with the long and short haul. It provides that a common carrier may not charge in interstate commerce more for hauling goods a shorter distance than it may charge for hauling it the longer distance, the charges being for service in hauling cars going the same direction and the shorter distance being part of the longer. There was a provision, however, in this law giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make exceptions when it seemed that by reason of water competition an injustice would be imposed upon the common carrier. It was not supposed, however, that the exception would come to constitute the dominant and controlling feature of the section. It was supposed that the proviso would take care of the unusual, of the extreme cases, but just the opposite has occurred. The proviso has come to be the controlling element of the paragraph and the part of the paragraph which denies the common carrier the right to charge more for the shorter distance than for the longer when the shorter is included within the longer distance has become the dominant feature of the law.

It is a matter of general knowledge why in 1887 the Interstate Commerce Commission was created and the great railroad transportation system of this country placed under Federal supervision and control. It is also of equal knowledge that the fourth section, known as the long-and-short-haul provision of the Commerce Act, at the time of the passage of the initial law, was regarded as possibly its most important provision. It is a matter of equal knowledge also that until the debacle of 1929 and the depression years following that the railroads, or no one else, seriously contended for the elimination of or the weakening of the long-and-short-haul clause.

In tracing the history of this legislation let me use this brief statement made by the proponent of this bill now before us, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], page 4127 of the RECORD of March 20, 1936:

The fourth section was first written in 1887 in the first bill placing railroad rates and practices under Federal supervision. * * * In 1910 the fourth section was tightened up and in 1920 the screws were tightened once more.

Now, let me quote another active proponent of this bill, my distinguished colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Colorado], page 4281, RECORD of March 24, 1936:

The Interstate Commerce Act, enacted in 1887, grew out of the necessity of regulating railway rates and practices. At that time, according to various statements of the Interstate Commerce Commission, discriminations against individuals, classes of business, and communities in favor of other individuals, classes of business, and communities were rife all over the country. The railways had a monopoly of transportation. It was the heyday of railway rule. It became necessary to place railway operations under Federal regulation, and the result was the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887.

From the beginning the chief regulatory provisions of the act as it affects rates and practices in the transportation of freight and passengers has been section 4. That section, now on the statute books for 48 years, has been but twice amended—once in 1910 and again in 1920.

So it is seen, not from any words of mine as an opponent of this measure and yet one cannot be familiar with the history of the long-and-short-haul law without sharing the same views of our two distinguished colleagues whom I have quoted, the persistence of Congress in the past to keep the provision as a strong part of the regulatory law.

It must be admitted, therefore, that the section of our basic transportation law, debated as it was at great length and enjoying the distinction of the Congress at the time of being possibly the most vital part of the bill, has served through the last 50 years during the most marvelous development that any country in the world has experienced as an agency toward rapid development of railroads and maintenance of its place in the life of this Nation to the degree it has always enjoyed.

Going back for a moment to the words I quoted from Mr. PETTENGILL:

The fourth section was first written in 1887 and in 1910 it was tightened up and in 1920 the screws were turned once more.

Today we are asked not to loosen the screws a little and undo in part some portion of this law but, in effect, to adjudge it as unsound, unreasonable, and almost every other slander that language can coin, and to change it under the guise of an amendment which, if enacted into law, destroys its every worth-while provision. It is not a wonder that so many members ask why this sudden reversal by the Congress. It is not a wonder that after a similar bill passed this House without a record vote in March 1936, early in the last session, that it was embalmed in the appropriate committee of the Senate, just as I prophesy will be the case should the House make a similar mistake today.

I want to be fair; I could not be otherwise, especially with the knowledge I have of the sincerity of purpose and honesty of intention which the proponents of this measure always display; but when they come before us with a far-reaching proposal of this nature and present as the controlling reason for its enactment that while there was justification in 1887 for what was done, and further justification in 1910 and 1920 for the strengthening of the original law by Congress, because a virtual monopoly existed with the railroads at that time, the entire provision should be repealed.

Competition was one of the controlling considerations at the time section 4 was originally enacted in 1887. I call as a witness to support this statement the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission against Alabama Midland Railway Co., in the October term, 1897, One Hundred and Sixty-eighth United States Reports, page 144, which I believe was the case having more to do with the act of 1910 than anything else. I quote from the Court's decision:

Competition is one of the most obvious and effective circumstances that make the conditions under which a long and short haul is performed, substantially dissimilar, and as such must have been in the contemplation of Congress in the passage of the act to regulate commerce. This is no longer an open question in the Court.

It has been 13 years since the last amendment, and I challenge any proponent of this measure to quote in support of the bill now before us the platforms of any of our major political parties, any President of the United States, Interstate Commerce Commission, or any important agency in this country, in support or even in advocacy of such a proposal. I repeat, it was given birth during the sad days of 1932 and 1933, when all were prone to blame their troubles and difficulties on almost any law affecting them. Now with the return of better times—and in this I include the railroads—this bill should be withdrawn by its proponents, if not overwhelmingly rejected by the Members of this House.

Let me discuss the bill briefly, because I have but a few minutes.

The bill before us changes section 4 to such an extent it is regarded as a repeal of the well-known long-and-short-haul clause. It is sufficient to say that should this measure become law, the railroads could, upon their own motion, file a schedule with the Interstate Commerce Commission providing for lower rates for a longer haul than the aggregate of the shorter hauls without approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission being obtained in advance of their effective date. This means, of course, that there is no provision against the charging of a lower rate provided it runs the almost unobstructed gantlet of scrutiny or attack ingeniously provided for in this bill. The proponents contend that the Interstate Commerce Commission can initiate objections to such rates and subject the railroads to proving the reasonableness of such lower rate and its freedom from violation of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Such can only be done, however, according to the language of this bill, when there is a case before the Commission. I assume when you refer to a case it means that some shipper, some injured party or parties, would be compelled to face the expense of filing with the Commission definite objections in which the railroads would be the defendants, before any substantial relief under this section could be granted.

In the Senate hearings of 1936, page 8, this colloquy took place:

Senator SHEPPARD. And the Commission might suspend them (meaning rates under the long-and-short-haul clause) upon the application of some shipper?

Mr. FLETCHER (Mr. Fletcher is general counsel and chief spokesman for the railroad executives and proponents of this bill). Or upon their own motion if they saw fit. Ordinarily they do not suspend such rates unless somebody objects to them, but they have the right to do so.

The original act of 1887 contained the language "under substantially similar circumstances and conditions." With this phrase in the law, the astuteness of the railroads brought about long years of litigation and finally victory in the courts; that is, victory to them, so that the long-and-short-haul clause was almost eliminated by the decision of the Supreme Court. Shortly after this decision, Congress, in 1910, struck out the language which the courts seized upon to weaken the provisions of section 4.

Another reason advanced by the proponents of this measure in repeal of section 4 was the delay in handling fourth-section cases by the Interstate Commerce Commission. While it is true in any judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal where a longer time is consumed in the adjudication of some cases than others, a more persuasive answer to the foregoing criticism of the past consideration of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the handling of these fourth-section cases is the argument that such delays present strong reason for change in the law that virtually eliminates many cases in the future was presented in the following report presented by the Interstate Commerce Commission to our committee at page 680 of the hearings on this bill:

In accordance with your request, we have now prepared a statement showing the actual time which elapsed between the date the applications were filed, regardless of any intervening circumstances that may have occurred between the time of filing and the date the order was entered by the Commission. These figures are as follows:

Applications for relief from the long-and-short-haul provision of sec. 4 to meet water competition filed during the period Jan. 1, 1930, to Dec. 31, 1936

Number of applications in which orders were entered granting temporary or continuing relief	[1] 193
Number of applications in which orders were entered denying relief	36
Number of applications pending in which no orders have been entered	15
Number of applications filed and later withdrawn	4
Total	248

[1] Includes 4 applications in which temporary relief was authorized and the application later withdrawn.

Applications for relief from the long-and-short-haul provision of sec. 4 to meet water competition filed during the period Jan. 1, 1930, to Dec. 31, 1936—Continued

Of the applications of, the average number of days elapsed after date of filing before orders were entered, were as follows:

90 applications in which temporary relief was authorized, average number of days elapsed after filing	50.14
103 applications in which continuing relief, but not temporary relief, was granted, average number of days elapsed after filing	226.7
36 applications in which relief was denied, average number of days elapsed after filing	250.3
Of the total, 229 applications, the average number of days after filing before orders were entered was	161

In my memorandum of January 29 I stated that during the year ended December 31, 1936, there were filed with the Commission 518 applications for relief from the provisions of section 4 based on various circumstances and conditions and that in 326 of these temporary relief was granted within an average of 20 days after the receipt thereof. As stated above, in arriving at this figure the time was computed not from dates of filing of the applications but from the dates of filing, or the dates on which the Commission was furnished with sufficient information to pass on the applications. Figuring from the date of filing alone, the above figure of 20 days would be 23.4 days. Of the 518 applications received in 1936, 471 have been disposed of. In the former memorandum I showed that the average time which elapsed between the date of filing, or date of submittal, before orders were entered in these proceedings, granting or denying relief, was 27.8 days. Computing the time that elapsed before orders were entered from the dates of filing of the applications, the above figure, 27.8 days, would be 34.6.

It will be noted that computation of the time that elapsed before orders were entered from dates of filing instead of dates of submittal produces a marked difference in the case of the applications based on water competition filed during the 7-year period January 1, 1930, to December 31, 1936, inclusive. However, it does not materially affect the figures for 1936.

The committee report accompanying this bill presents a comparison of the railroad operating revenues, capital expenditures, purchases of durable and consumable goods, and total expenditures between the years 1923 to 1929 and 1934. Why these figures were not brought up to show at least the year 1936 and present a more favorable comparison and also a picture of recovery by the railroads along with other industries I do not know, but as compared with the true facts there is such a glaring difference I insert at this point the extract referred to from the committee's report, found on page 9 thereof, as follows:

The importance of an adequate rail transportation system to the general welfare of this country cannot be overemphasized. The present financial condition of the railroads is well known, although some improvement is now being shown. The operating revenues of class I railroads of the United States (operating revenues of $1,000,000 or over per annum) in 1929 amounted to $6,279,520,544. In 1934 this had dropped to $3,271,446,473; in 1935 to $3,451,929,411. Their purchasing power, when good, substantially contributes to the support of basic or durable-goods industries which are now a matter of justifiable concern in this country from the standpoint of employment and economic recovery. In 1923 capital expenditures of class I railroads in the United States amounted to $1,059,149,000. In 1934 the total amount of such capital expenditures was $212,712,000. In 1923 class I railroads purchased $760,831,000 of materials and supplies. In 1934 this amount was $274,534,000. The total as nearly as ascertainable of the purchase of durable goods in 1923 by class I railroads was $1,819,980,000, as compared with $487,246,000 in 1934. The total of consumable goods purchased by class I railroads in 1923 was $977,872,000 and in 1934, $325,690,000. The grand total of expenditures by these class I railroads for durable and consumable goods in 1923 was $2,797,852,000 and in 1934, $812,936,000. This illustrates the importance of the rail transportation system in this country to its general economic welfare, in addition to the maintenance of adequate and satisfactory transportation service.

The question of railroad employment, gross revenues, disbursements, operating income, car loadings, and other important factors showing the condition of the railroads is such that I have requested an up-to-date statement thereof and incorporate here the following letter from Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and statistical data accompanying that letter:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, April 13, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM P. COLE, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COLE: In accordance with your telephone request of this afternoon, I am transmitting herewith a statement of some more recent figures showing the continued improvement of class I railways supplementing the figures submitted with my letter of February 16 to the Honorable CLARENCE F. LEA, chairman of the Congressional Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

This statement shows the index of railway employment by months for the years 1935 and 1936 and the first 3 months of 1937. Taking the employment figures for the period of 1923–25 as 100, this index shows the trend of the increase in employment since January 1935. For example, in that month the average employment was 56 percent of the average of the base figure of 100 for the period of 1923–25. For the month of March 1937, the employment had increased to 63.5 of the 1923–25 average.

In the statements submitted with my letter of February 16 to Chairman LEA, the average number of employees in 1936 was shown to be 1,065,922 as compared with 994,371 in 1935.

The attached statement shows the average number of employees for the months of January, February, and March 1936, in comparison with the corresponding period of 1937.

The attached statement also shows the following statistical items for the years 1935 and 1936: Gross revenues, disbursements for maintenance of way, structures, and equipment, net railway operating income available for interest and dividends, and net income after deducting fixed charges.

It also shows the net railway operating income available for interest and dividends for the months of January and February of 1936 and 1937 and carloadings for the first 14 weeks of the years 1935, 1936, and 1937.

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN,
Chairman, Legislative Committee.

Another contention is that the population of the inland and mountain section of our country is decreasing and the existence of the long-and-short-haul clause is given as the main reason therefor. In response to this contention, the committee asked for statistics, and the Interstate Commerce Commission presented the following table in contradiction thereto:

[1] From p. 7 of Committee Report No. 1560, House of Representatives, 74th Cong.
[2] From Ex. 733, Ex Parte 115, prepared by Bureau of Railway Economics.

The city of Baltimore, a large part of which I represent, is not only one of our great seaport cities but a large railroad center as well. The natural harbor offered by the Chesapeake Bay has been improved by widening and deepening and before long will be connected with the great Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, shortening the travel to the sea by one day, and it has naturally become the envy of many of our seaport cities. While this condition has been an incentive to the growth and development of Baltimore, that has come about through the effort of local ingenuity along with the inestimable value of contributions from the Federal Government.

Baltimore is one of the many termini of the Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio, and Western Maryland Railroads. Competition from very extensive truck and water transportation has not retarded the development of these railroads, but, to the contrary, they are in a healthy condition today compared with that of a few years ago. The Pennsylvania Railroad has been within the last few years and is now electrifying at a heavy cost, its entire system between New York and Washington, and is now on the way to Harrisburg and Pittsburgh. The other railroads have kept step with this progress.

It has been always my desire as a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House to assist in bringing about legislation helpful to the railroads and their employees. With this I think they will agree.

I am proud of the service rendered by the railroads entering Baltimore; proud of the fact that the great Baltimore & Ohio has its main headquarters in the city; proud of the service rendered through new rolling stock to the patrons of this road and the vision they have shown in meeting competition legitimately.

I have not had, in my association with this bill, a single railroad official approach me in support of this measure. I am advised that the Baltimore Association of Commerce, one of the most helpful civic organizations we have, has given this subject very serious consideration. I am sure that happened because the railroads, as well as many other interests, belong to that organization and are represented on its board of governors. This resulted in their opposition to this measure. Just as I am sure this association had before it, so have I, a broad picture not only of the railroad systems, rapidly recovering as they are and expanding throughout our city and State, but also the harbor development, much of which is owned by and helps to support the railroads. Baltimore, of necessity, is the hub of many of our fine highways and has become a metropolis of first concern in the development of motor transportation. This, too, is obviously in the picture.

I am sure it is generally known that the railroads in Baltimore have many employees, much valuable property, are heavy taxpayers, and all of us are proud of the contribution they and their employees make to the life of our State, at the same time, the railroads, because of their close contact, I might say, to a very large extent, depend for the fine position they enjoy in the port of Baltimore, upon the highways bringing traffic via truck and the great harbor bringing to the railroads and taking from them intercoastal and ocean traffic of real value. The same applies to other large coastal cities. During the fiscal year of 1936 the ports of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore handled the following tonnage:

Port	East-bound	West-bound	Total
Boston	417,920	74,224	492,144
New York	1,808,392	566,960	2,375,352
Philadelphia	798,190	468,116	1,266,306
Baltimore	405,635	632,589	1,038,224

On a national basis Baltimore stands fifth in the volume of intercoastal tonnage received, and ranks third among the American ports nationally in the tonnage shipped or forwarded during the fiscal year of 1936.

The total investment in the port of Baltimore is $151,540,000. Included in this amount is $90,495,000 in waterfront terminals. Municipal docks and terminals are valued at $15,015,000. Privately owned docks and terminals make up the balance of $75,480,000, and these, to some extent, are owned by the railroads.

My study of our transportation problems, influenced by my membership on this committee now for a number of years, has convinced me that legislation dealing with our transportation, regardless of what character or type involved, should not be decided entirely from a local viewpoint, but should be influenced by a broad national outlook. It is essential, therefore, that I take into consideration in this debate not only the appeal of the railroads, with which I do not entirely agree, but the fact that the passage of this bill presents, so they state and I think justifiably so, alarming consequences to our water and truck transportation activities.

It is unfortunate, I think, that labor has been brought into the consideration of this measure to the extent it has. Railroad labor is increasing in number, and will continue to do so, because of the natural development ahead of our railroads regardless of what competition is presented. They have been, and will continue to be, an indispensable part of the life of this country. But to tell me that the approval of promiscuous violations of the present long-and-short-haul law would add to any appreciable extent to the number of employees on the railroads is too ridiculous for any serious consideration, and I am sure was made by the proponents of this bill solely for the purpose of strengthening an admittedly weak case by bringing to their side a statement that labor is with them at the time when such endorsement is, as we all know, tantamount to the support of many Members of Congress.

Let us apply practically this new bill. Assume that immediately upon its passage rates from Chicago to the Pacific coast will be announced much lower than the rate from Chicago to a number of intermediate points and that this will attract additional traffic to the railroads. That means the placing of some additional cars on the trains already scheduled instead of the making up of many or of any new trains. If this is true, let anyone familiar with the railroads state how many additional employees would be placed on such trains or used in the terminals of such railroads as a result thereof. I am willing to concede in such situation, if the rosy picture painted by the railroads were realized, that should additional traffic, both passenger and freight, be attracted as a result of such reductions, that some new labor would be required, but let us not lose sight of the fact that most of the new traffic obtained thereby would be taken from the other means of transportation now handling such traffic, and in that event it follows, as night follows the day, that employment would be decreased on other transportation lines. I am not going to pursue this further, because I cannot believe that railroad labor is serious when it contends through its Washington representative that passage of this bill is going to inure to their benefit in any serious degree.

I agree that the farmer shipping his produce as a general thing from inland or intermediate points is going to be the main victim should this bill pass. The National Grange has opposed the bill in no uncertain terms. Quoting from their statement, this sentence is sufficient:

> The passage of this bill would work irreparable injury to agriculture.

It was stated that the farm bureau supports this bill. When I heard this statement made during the hearings, not by a representative of the farm bureau appearing before us but by insertion in the record of a statement prepared by the executive committee of the farm bureau federation, passed at a session in Washington and not at a convention of the farm bureau, as a member of the farm bureau, I could not believe that the Maryland bureau of this national organization, knowing the facts, were in sympathy with such declaration, and I therefore asked for the views of my own State farm bureau and am happy to report that in a letter to me under date of March 9, 1937, the executive committee of the Maryland Farm Bureau, at a meeting on March 6, 1937, voted to oppose the Pettengill bill, and I congratulate them upon the stand they have taken and their willingness to differ with the executive committee of their national organization, which does not, in my judgment, reflect the opinion of the farmers of this country taking sides in support of this measure.

The American Farm Bureau Federation in its convention of 1931, when they had before them the long-and-short-haul controversy stated "the Interstate Commerce Commission should be denied the authority of allowing railroads to charge more for a short than a long haul"—page 405 of the hearings. In every convention since that year, the same resolutions have been passed in reference to transportation and in 1935 and 1936 while the bill now before us was in Congress, had been the subject of lengthy hearings and was prominently before the country, no reversal of the foregoing declaration made in 1931 was entered in the proceedings and I prophesy now that none will be entered in the farm bureau conventions when the facts are known to the members.

It is my purpose to offer a substitute for the present bill, which will amend the existing section 4, paragraph 1, by striking therefrom the so-called equidistant clause. If that amendment is adopted, it will provide for the only change in section 4 which I believe to be necessary and which the Interstate Commerce Commission advocates. In support of this statement, I support herewith a letter from Commissioner Joseph B. Eastman, legislative representative of the Commission.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, as one now serving his ninth year as a Member of this House, and for three terms a member of the great Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, I am going to be bold enough to offer this advice to my colleagues: There is nothing more controversial in our system of government, more difficult of interpretation than the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, and when we look back over the past 50 years since Congress took its first bold step to regulate our then main systems of transportation, the wisdom of what was done at that time, the evolutions of the conceptions then formed and the gradual expansion through Court interpretations of the powers granted the Interstate Commerce Commission as an independent, dignified agency of the Government, compels me, aside from my own individual opinion to consider very, very seriously before I vote in opposition to the express, and enthusiastic opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I believe each and every Member of the House should do. You are asked to do that today.

I need not present any bouquets to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a branch of this Government which I hope will always remain independent of any departmental control. It is free from political influence and yet it commands the respect of all Members familiar with its conduct. It will be a sad encroachment upon the otherwise dignified and glorious history of that Commission which was celebrated last month upon its fiftieth birthday, should we today, in the face of the bitter opposition of that Commission, strike from the statutes governing it, and which I have shown to you to have been admittedly one of the most important parts of the Interstate Commerce Act at the time of its enactment and in every subsequent serious consideration of the act by Congress, especially in 1910 and 1920.

On the occasion of the semicentennial of the Interstate Commerce Commission, celebrated in this city on April 2, 1937, I was privileged to be present and enjoy two addresses by our colleagues—one of whom possibly had more to do with the maintainence of the basis law under which the Interstate Commerce Commission functions than any Member of the present Congress. I refer to the former Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and now our distinguished floor leader, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. RAYBURN. The other was by our colleague and present able chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from California, Mr. LEA. I commend both of these speeches to your reading and am sorry the estimate they placed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission cannot be translated to you at this time while you are in serious deliberation of the question involving a change in the law under which the Commission has functioned for the past 50 years and which this bill seeks to bring about in spite of the differences explained by the Commission.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, a year ago I made it very clear that I am opposed to this bill. At that time I emphatically stated that while there may be some evidence that the fourth section may be too drastic in its application, I also said at that time I would be pleased to cooperate in amending the fourth section to make it more flexible, but I did not want to destroy all the value that has been obtained from the application of the present fourth section in the railroad industry of the United States.

It has been brought out here today that the National Industrial Traffic League sponsors this legislation. This is true, but I have here a letter from Gilbert & Barker Manufacturing Co., of Springfield, Mass., which states:

> While this bill was introduced at the request of the National Industrial Traffic League, it does not receive the support of the entire membership, as there is a very large minority, including the writer, opposed to this bill. There has been considerable propaganda sent out regarding this bill in the past 2 years, and some of it has revealed very clearly that the main reason for the change is desired by the rail carriers to enable them to meet water competition of the Panama Canal.

Something was also said here about Youngstown, Ohio, and I have here a letter from the Youngstown Chamber of Commerce which states:

> We have consistently opposed the Pettengill bill, despite the tremendous pressure that has been brought to bear among Congressmen and Senators to approve the above measure. By referring to the record in the previous hearings it will be noted that Coordinator Eastman and the Interstate Commerce Commission voiced their views that this bill goes too far and legally gives the railways too much leeway in the making of rates. This was exactly what the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act was designed to restrict, and we feel that inland cities, who compete with manufacturers located at points adjoining water transportation, would be hurt by the passage of this proposed legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, there have been so many requests for time on the part of the friends of the bill, as we only are allowed 60 minutes of general debate, I am not taking any time at all, and I now yield the balance of our time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the passage of this legislation, not only from the viewpoint of the railroad employee but likewise from the viewpoint of the general public, who are dependent almost entirely on railroad transportation in carrying on their business and for the transportation of themselves and their families. However, the loss of business by the railroads to competitive forms of transportation has been so great that the passage of this legislation is a matter of great concern to all railroad employees.

Railroad employment is only a little over one-half of what it was in 1920. Since 1929 there has been a decrease of 500,000 employees. In 1929 there were more than 1,600,000 railroad employees. Today there are approximately 1,100,000 men and women employed in railroad service. Men who have worked more than 20 years now find themselves out of service because of a lack in volume of business. These men were trained for railroad work and are at a terrible disadvantage in any other field. They are home owners and citizens of good standing. Their monthly pay is highly important in supporting local merchants and the general community. Surely they are entitled to fair consideration in maintaining their employment and should be protected by their Government against unfair trade practices, particularly from the types of competition made potent because their employees on the average receive less compensation for their services and whose labor relations are not regulated.

The class I railroads of the United States have modernized their equipment, both plant and rolling, to such a degree that it is conservative to say that they could handle 40 percent more business than they are at the present time without any material increase in their overhead outside of the increase in pay rolls. Without volume of business, the railroads will never be able to pay a reasonable return upon the valuation of the properties, and certainly without increased volume of business there is no way in which railroad unemployment can be relieved.

There is approximately $26,000,000,000 invested in our railroads. Normally their gross operating income is more than $6,000,000,000 annually. But because of general industrial conditions now existing and unfair competition permitted by Federal statute that gross revenue has dropped 45 percent to $3,451,929,411 for 1935. We find also that only about 60 percent of the plant equipment is being used. We are all hoping and striving for a general reduction in the rail rate structure. This necessary objective can only be accomplished by restoring to some semblance of normalcy the volume of freight the railroads handle.

The opening of the Panama Canal aggravated the difficulties of our transcontinental railroad carriers. Railroad employees recognize the necessity and the desirability of the Panama Canal, but we do protest against existing laws which make it impossible for transcontinental railroad carriers to compete with intercoastal water carriers, who were made potent as competitors only because they use the Panama Canal. Particularly do we protest when these competitors are in no way under the control of the Federal Government. They go unregulated, they do not have to publish their rates, are free to change them at will without previous notice, may pay rebates, give allowances, provide storage, perform special services, allow special privileges, and otherwise secretly and openly favor individual shippers. The record of the Interstate Commerce Commission clearly indicates that these special privileges representing compensation of several cents per hundred pounds are indulged in to a very considerable extent by the water carriers.

The testimony before the subcommittee clearly disclosed that the intercoastal water carriers frankly admit that they have a monopoly upon the traffic between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. That is made possible by the existence of the so-called long-and-short-haul clause in the Interstate Commerce Act, because that statute prohibits the railroads from charging a lower rate for transporting commodities over a long distance than over a shorter distance. The passage of this legislation would still permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to exercise control of rates charged by the railroads. The railroads merely having the right of putting into force rate structures without prolonged and exhaustive hearings being held by the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to their going into effect. However, the Interstate Commerce Commission would still be empowered to suspend the rates if they deemed them unfair and unreasonable and not in the public interest.

Bus and truck transportation, water transportation, air transportation, and pipe-line transportation are not subjected to restrictions such as are carried in section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Why, then, insist upon shackling an industry which has done more than its share to develop this great country? An industry which built, maintains, and owns its operating, roadbed, and signal equipment, in direct contrast to the busses and trucks now figuratively, at least, in possession of highways, which were built and are maintained by the taxpayers, and also in contrast with water and air transportation, a large portion of whose operating cost is actually borne by the Federal Government. Why circumscribe the railroad industry with regulations preventing it from meeting competitors on a real competitive basis. Certainly you have given their competitors enough trade advantages already.

The intercoastal carriers enjoy more than a monopoly of the Atlantic-Pacific coast business. They go far into the interior, with the resultant demoralization of all other transportation. This is possible because section 4 applies to the railroad carriers but does in no way restrict any other form of transportation.

The argument has been advanced that by reason of the enactment of this legislation the rate structure to intermediate points will be materially increased.

In my opinion, this argument cannot be substantiated, because in the cases where fourth-section relief has been granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the rates to the intermediate points were not increased. In fact, no witness established in any degree the probability that there would be a resultant increase. Many witnesses, however, testified that there would be no increase. Their testimony was not challenged. The absurdity of the above-mentioned argument is further apparent when one realizes that the railroads must charge a rate which will return the cost of the service rendered, said rate to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The effect on railroad freight volume, due to the viciousness of the operation of the long-and-short-haul clause, is probably best illustrated by the Panama Canal record showing that the total tonnage carried by steamship lines between the eastern and western coasts of the United States—excluding eastbound oil in tank ships—increased from 1,961,874 tons of 2,000 pounds each in 1921 to 8,230,697 tons in 1929, which tonnage for the most part was traffic which the railroads had heretofore transported, and which they would now be transporting but for the Panama Canal. This tonnage includes all sorts of traffic, including heavy articles, such as iron and steel products, as well as manufactured articles of every variety, a substantial volume of which moved from points as far inland as St. Paul, Minn., and Moline, Ill., through the Atlantic seaboard and thence by boat. For example, the rate on hoisting machinery, carloads from St. Paul, Minn., to Los Angeles or San Francisco, Calif., all rail, is $1.83 per hundred pounds, load minimum weight 30,000 pounds, while the rate from St. Paul to Baltimore by rail is 75 cents per hundred pounds, carload minimum weight 30,000 pounds, and the boat rate from Baltimore to Los Angeles or San Francisco through the Panama Canal is 75 cents, making a combination rate via this rail-and-water route of $1.50 per hundred pounds, as compared with the $1.83 per hundred pounds rate via rail direct from St. Paul to these points. This is $99 per car lower via Atlantic seaboard than via all-rail direct. The all-rail rate on agricultural implements from Moline, Ill., to Pacific coast cities is $1.86 per 100 pounds, minimum weight 24,000 pounds.

These agricultural implements can be carried by rail from Moline to the Atlantic seaboard for 54 cents per hundred pounds and thence by boat through the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast for 55 cents per 100 pounds, making a total rate of $1.09 per 100 pounds, a difference of 77 cents in favor of the rail-and-water route through the Panama Canal, or $184.80 per car.

It is cheaper to ship from St. Paul, Minn., by rail to Baltimore then by boat to the Atlantic Ocean, down the coast, through the Panama Canal, and up the Pacific coast to Los Angeles or San Francisco than by rail direct, all because by Federal statute we have "hamstrung" the railroad carriers by persisting in not modifying section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act.

For every ton of freight recovered by the railroads, they would give 2 hours of employment, to 1 hour that remained in the transportation service by water.

In addition the railroads pay approximately 7 percent of their revenue in taxes. The intercoastal water carriers pay only about one-twentieth of 1 percent of their revenue in taxes, or about 50 cents out of every thousand dollars taken in, while the railroads pay between $70 and $80 per thousand dollars in taxes, or an amount almost 160 times greater than the intercoastal water carriers pay. Surely it is in the interest not only of fairness to the railroad carriers and their employees, but likewise in the interest of the American taxpayer that a portion of this business should be restored to a real American industry.

It is generally agreed that the railroads are one of the strongest arms of our national defense. Surely if we have learned any lesson from the World War, it is that our railroad transportation facilities must be kept in perfect order. Particularly since in time of war we can expect the intercoastal water carriers to desert their regular trades for the more profitable foreign trade, as they did during the World War. Mind you, this disertion took place in 1915 and 1916, before the United States entered the World War.

If you measure our coast line and our border line, you will find that we have more land border than we have water border in transcontinental United States, all of which merely emphasizes the necessity of maintaining in a state of good condition not only actual railroad equipment but also skilled personnel who are able immediately to operate trains.

Railroad employees have always responded in emergencies both to the call of their country and to help the railroad management. An example of this was the voluntary pay reduction of 10 percent taken by all railroad employees in October 1932. In addition to this voluntary pay reduction the employees in many instances liberalized the contracts entered into with the railroad carriers. It is conservative to say that this voluntary pay reduction and the liberalization of said contracts represented a saving to the railroad carriers and ultimately to the consuming public of at least $200,000,000 annually. Certainly the railroad employee comes to this Congress with clean hands, merely asking that the industry which employs him should be given a fair opportunity to meet cutthroat competition. In doing that I know they are upon a sound premise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired; all time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. In amending the bill, am I correct in assuming that amendments are not in order until the entire bill has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The bill contains only one section. The Clerk will read the entire bill, and amendments will then be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (1) of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 4), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which common carriers may be relieved from the operation of this section: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act by virtue of orders of the Commission or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the Commission and not yet acted upon shall not be required to be changed by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the Commission: And provided further, That in any case before the Commission where there is brought in issue a lower rate or charge for the transportation of like kind of property, for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, the burden of proof shall be upon the carrier to justify the rate or charge for the longer distance against any claim of a violation of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in my remarks this afternoon I really did not get to the principal consideration influencing my judgment in supporting this measure. The principal consideration was that as the hearings progressed the picture formed clearly in my mind is that my State and our Mountain States generally are producing States. What I mean by that is that everything we produce, we produce in excess of consumption. We do not consume all of anything we produce. Therefore if we expect our producers to be prosperous we must find markets for this excess.

I became thoroughly convinced that if the railways were relieved of the restriction of the long-and-short-haul clause we could extend our market zones. I am thoroughly convinced on this point. I mentioned our attempt to get our steel into Houston against water rates and our failure to do so. I also mentioned our attempts to get our sugar into Chicago. What applies to sugar and steel applies to everything we produce in the Rocky Mountain States. We are surrounded, so to speak, by an iron ring. We are on the halter of the long-and-short-haul clause.

Several major efforts were made to relieve this situation. I believe if those efforts had been successful this bill might not have been here. The very able gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] this morning showed you by this map what had happened in the way of excess development of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the region around the Lakes, as well as the handicaps and lack of development and inability to compete on the part of the industries from Youngstown, Ohio, west.

There were what are known as the Transportation cases of 1922.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am sorry I have not the time.

They are, perhaps, the three major transportation cases that have been produced under section 4.

In the first of these cases all the transcontinental railroads joined for dollar rate per hundred from a Pittsburgh-Omaha zone to the Pacific coast, to enable all that area to compete with a 95-cent rate from Pittsburgh to the Atlantic coast and then around to the Pacific coast by water. This rate would have extended from Pittsburgh to Omaha. Mind you, Omaha would have been under the same $1 rate. This application was denied.

These three cases were presented to us by Commissioner Eastman at the hearings. They were of such importance he singled them out and concluded his argument by a reference to them.

This transcontinental rate was denied by the Commission. The Commission denied the joint application of all the transcontinental roads in the country. I had been studying this question for a year, and I saw I was closer to what I wanted to get than I had ever been before, and I asked the Commissioner, "What section was the loser by the denial of these applications?", and he said, "I think it was the Middle West."

There was a chance to put the Middle West on the map, and the Interstate Commerce Commission denied it. Then came the Western Continental Lines, west of Chicago, and they applied for a through rate under section 4 from Chicago to the coast, a Chicago-Denver zone. It would have put Denver in the Chicago zone, but at a lower rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this is all in the RECORD. I have copies of it right there on my desk. Denver would have been in this blanket rate, and at a lower rate than Chicago from there to the coast. That application was denied. It was not necessary to ask Mr. Eastman what section of the country lost by that. There was a chance to put Denver on the map on an equality with the eastern points, and he said so. He said that would have put these western points on an equality with Pittsburgh and the eastern coast, while retaining their advantages of location, and, therefore, the application was denied. The third was the Southern Pacific cases. They were denied. There were three major cases where relief was denied, that, if it had been granted, probably this bill would not be here today. The present law was called by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] an equality law. I think it is an inequality law. We are not so much interested, in the mountain country, in rates that will bring things in as we are in rates that will take things out. [Applause.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. In reply to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] I ask this question: Is there another ton of freight to come from anywhere under this legislation? Is it not to divert freight from one line to another? That is all. You are not going to make any more freight. There is nothing making any more business. It is simply changing the trend of it. Why has this country grown around the southern part of the lakes and along the Atlantic? Because they have had cheaper rates. Why have not we grown? We have not had the rates and enjoyed them. Do you expect we are going to grow because we will have to pay more freight? The object is to get more money into the hands of the railroads, and to kill water and truck transportation as far as possible. There cannot be any other object. I shall never forget, and I believe the experience can be repeated when this bill passes, the time when I needed a car of copper wire in eastern Oregon. I purchased it in New Jersey. The rate from the New Jersey point to Portland, by water, was $720 for the car. The back haul, 300 miles, $480. When the car of copper came to North Powder I had paid the entire freight bill, $1,200, which was the rate through to Portland and the back haul. It did not take that joy ride. I had the copper and used it, and I read the extra freight into the capital structure of the power company that I controlled at that time. That kind of freight rate had been read into the capital structure of all freight-using enterprises in Spokane, Salt Lake City, and every city in Colorado, all of the great mountain region. There is no question about that. What are you after? You are seeking to destroy competition. You say you cannot get through rates now. You can if you will give the same rates to us in the interior.

I am pleading for the great mountain interior. Our friend from Colorado makes out a case because the Interstate Commerce Commission in that particular case denied fourth-section relief. They had a right to deny it. Do we mean here in the House, with just a few days or hours of study, to set ourselves up as having more knowledge of this freight situation, of this rate schedule, than the men of the Interstate Commerce Commission? Oregon has furnished two men on that Commission, able ones. Two of them are on that Commission now. They have given a lifetime of study to the rate structure. They say do not disturb the fourth section. They not only say that individually but they said it in the record. Are we going to set ourselves up as superior to them? Are we going to override their judgment of 50 years of Federal experience with the Transportation Act? I do not think we should. I think we should allow it to stay as it is because it carries with it the decisions, through these long years, and the construction that they have put upon it. There is but one object, and that is to get more money into the railroads, not for their employees but to pay more dividends on watered stocks and bonds. Railway labor is helping to put over this bill while the railways have been betraying them and attaching to every letter for this bill a letter against all labor legislation. That is the sole and one object. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of Maryland: Page 1, after the enacting clause, strike out all that follows and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That paragraph (1) of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 4), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"(1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this part to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this part, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this part to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, That upon application to the Commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the Commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such destinated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the Commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from a more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed; and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence, as a through rate then the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which common carriers may be relieved from the operations of this section: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act by virtue of orders of the Commission or as to which application has heretofore been filed with the Commission and not yet acted upon shall not be required to be charged by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the Commission: And provided further, That in any case before the Commission where there is brought in issue a lower rate or charge for the transportation of like kind of property for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, the burden of proof shall be upon the carrier to justify the rate or charge for the longer distance against any claim of a violation of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, is this to be taken from my time?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland had not been recognized when I submitted my parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Virginia that he had already recognized the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BLAND. I was on my feet and submitted a parliamentary inquiry immediately upon the conclusion of the reading of the substitute.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, my parliamentary inquiry is this: If the substitute should be voted down, will an opportunity then be given to perfect the original bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland be extended to 30 minutes, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] and one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this substitute for the pending bill is to remove from the present long-and-short-haul clause the so-called equidistant provision. In other words, if this substitute is approved, it means that the law will be as it is today with the exception that this language will be eliminated from existing law. The language to be eliminated reads:

And if a circuitous rail line or route is, because of such circuity, granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct line or route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on the line, the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points.

Obviously this language is meaningless and has proven so. The proponents of the Pettengill bill, now before the House, have condemned this language. I think I can state that every member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is in favor of removing it from the present law. The difference arises, of course, that others want to take so much more from existing law. My substitute is, in substance similar to a bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] last year. One of the main witnesses before the committee had this to say as to the equidistant clause:

The so-called equidistant rule added by the 1920 amendment is a nuisance to everybody, including the Commission, which has recommended its repeal. It has accomplished nothing in the public interest but has had the effect of driving railway rates to mileage-rate scales in disregard of the true circumstances and conditions, economic and otherwise, surrounding the production and movement of the traffic. In addition, it is in part responsible for the filling up of the rate schedules with useless and unused rates and routing provisions, so much so as to make such tariffs exceedingly complicated and costly. It is further unfair, because at equidistant points it frequently requires at those points lower rates than the conditions thereat warrant, in that the special conditions may be present at the competitive point which prevent a normal rate, which conditions are not found at the equidistant point.

The report of the committee on the bill before us, with reference to the clause which my substitute seeks to remove, states:

The "equidistant clause", i. e., that the relief granted shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the carrier is not longer than that of the direct line between the competitive points; and (c) the prohibition against the granting of relief on account of "merely potential water competition not actually in existence."

It may be said that there is practical unanimity of opinion on the part of the Federal Coordinator, the Commission, the railroads, water lines, and the shipping public that the equidistant clause is a nuisance to everybody, causes needless delay and much expense and confusion to all concerned, and should be eliminated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the time of the gentleman from Maryland be extended 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I am particularly pleased at this action of the House, because I believe that what I shall say in the next few minutes will do the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey a great deal of good. Possibly I overestimate myself in view of the subject, but I shall try.

Before presenting this substitute, having the respect, as I believe the Members of this House have for the Interstate Commerce Commission, I asked for an expression of their views as to the particular amendment in the nature of a substitute now before you. That expression is in the form of a letter which I received this morning from Mr. Eastman, and is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, April 14, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM P. COLE, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COLE: You have asked my views in regard to an amendment of section 4 of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act, which would eliminate the so-called "equidistant clause", reading as follows: "And if a circuitous rail line or route is, because of such circuity, granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct line or route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on its line, the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points."

I am heartily in favor of such an amendment, and it is also favored by most of the members of the Commission. In my fourth report on transportation legislation, as Federal Coordinator of Transportation, which was transmitted to the Congress by the Commission on January 21, 1936, and printed as House Document No. 394, Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, I recommended such an amendment, giving the following reason, at pages 58–59 of the report:

"The reason for eliminating the clause described in (b), which is known as the equidistant clause, is briefly that it has given rise to serious practical difficulties in the administration of the section. In this connection reference may be made to Commodity Rates on Lumber and Other Forest Products (151 I. C. C. 763), which sets forth these difficulties in detail and the differing views which the Commissioners have entertained as to the interpretation and application of this clause. The underlying principle is one which the Commission endeavored to apply in the administration of the section prior to the insertion of the clause in 1920, and which it would in any event have continued to apply in order to avoid violation of sections 1 and 3 of the act. A meticulous application of this principle, however, as distinguished from a reasonable application creates practical difficulties in the designing of rate structures and the publication of the rates in reasonably simple tariff form which are well-nigh insuperable and ought by all means to be avoided. They have been avoided by a construction of the law which some Commissioners believe to be valid and others do not. A sound conclusion is that the clause is unnecessary and undesirable and ought to be eliminated."

The Commission's letter of transmittal contained the following paragraph, on page 8:

"(7) We approve the recommendation that legislation be enacted amending section 4 of part I, Interstate Commerce Act, by eliminating the so-called equidistant clause."

The only Commissioners who did not join in this approval were Commissioners McManamy and Lee.

Respectfully yours,

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN, Commissioner.

So, Mr. Chairman, this substitute removes from existing law a provision which is hardly capable of sensible interpretation and has been found so by those administering the act. It does nothing more. It leaves all of the present teeth and guts in the fourth section which the so-called Pettengill bill will remove. If this substitute is adopted we will still have section 4 as it is today, because the condition mentioned in the language I seek to strike out can still be taken into consideration by the Commission in the operation of section 4.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the friends of this bill that is before the House that they should vote down this substitute amendment. If the Pettengill bill carries, the subject matter sought to be stricken out by the Cole amendment will go out of the bill. His motion is to take out of the bill something that is unquestionably of no benefit to anybody. It is a milk-and-water amendment that does not do what the proponents of the bill want done, but if the bill carries, all that would be eliminated by the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] goes out of the bill anyway.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I favor this Cole amendment. I am unalterably opposed to the entire Pettengill bill, the object of which is to raise freight rates to the helpless freight payers of this country, to help pay dividends on watered stock of railroads, and to drive competition off the face of the earth.

You passed one Pettengill bill last year or the year before to outlaw motor transportation for the benefit of the railroads. What has been the result? You have inspired a system of bootlegging of freight the like of which this Nation had never seen. It is a matter of common knowledge that since the passage of that bill this city of Washington is being flooded with bootleg coal, bootlegged in here from Pennsylvania and West Virginia, to say nothing of the vast amount of other kinds of freight that is being bootlegged into the District.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I sponsored no such bill as the gentleman refers to.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Indiana supported it, and his influence helped to pass it. He is now sponsoring one that is even worse than that one.

You can go just so far with the American people in perpetrating thievery within the law, but the time comes when they revolt. How are you going to enforce this measure? How are you going to continue to wring from helpless shippers of this country annually hundreds of millions of dollars in overcharges? How are you going to continue to discriminate against the people in your own districts and your own towns by piling these enormous burdens upon them only to gratify the cupidity of the big railroads of the country?

Oh, they say that chambers of commerce have written us. Why, certainly they have, because the railroads have sent men up and down the country misinforming the people, telling them that this bill meant one thing when it meant another, and have induced them to sign petitions to their Congressmen which they are now repudiating.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Has not the T. V. A. been doing the same thing?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I say they have.

Mr. RANKIN. The answer is no. I showed the gentleman from New Jersey the other day how the people of New Jersey are being robbed by the Power Trust. [Applause.] But that question is not before the House at this time.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I decline to yield further.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the Members of the House to support the Cole amendment and help us to at least take some of the viciousness out of this bill. The passage of this measure without the Cole amendment will mean the destruction of shippers who do not enjoy the advantages of water rates.

It will remove the protection now given interior points to be heard prior to publication of lower rates through higher rated interior points to points beyond. It will cause the expenditure of large sums of money by these defenseless shippers, filing suspension proceedings and defending them, where rates are published, without due notice, and which discriminate against interior points. Suspension proceedings are not always successful. It will then cause the expenditure of large sums of money to file formal complaints and defend them on each commodity where discrimination exists because of such publication. A delay of nearly 2 years will occur even if successful at all.

During this time their competitors will enjoy the lower rates.

It will result in the reduction of numerous rail rates to water points without corresponding reductions to interior points. This will give these water points extremely low rates to destroy the interior shippers and jobbers in their competitive territory. It will bring about a reduction of rail rates to named water points and then in turn lower water rates to those points. This will be an additional disadvantage to interior points with use of trucks from water points.

It will permit water points to have extremely low water rates under rail rates and use of trucks to trade territory lower than interior wholesalers can obtain to reach the same territory. It will concentrate jobbing and wholesaling at such water points, to a greater extent than they now enjoy. We are doing extremely well to hold our own under present arrangements. Large water points admit their desire to increase their advantages.

It was admitted in House hearings in June by Mr. J. G. Kerr, assistant to the vice president in charge of traffic of the Association of American Railroads, headed by Mr. Pelly, that there was "plenty of flexibility in section 4 today, if it were utilized by the Commission to give the relief that is really needed." It will be seen that carriers admit the present law is flexible enough, if proper applications are filed and supported and the Commission will give them what they are entitled to have. Therefore no need can be shown for complete destruction of the fourth section of the act by change. Weaker interests are always entitled to protection from stronger interests.

The Interstate Commerce Commission themselves, with vast knowledge and experience of carriers' methods and past performances, is opposed to repeal of the fourth section as set forth in this bill. Mr. Joseph B. Eastman, Federal Coordinator and a member of the Commission, was formerly in favor of a change, but, after further study, is now opposed to such a change, because of its widespread discrimination. He said the fourth section was originally passed to prevent unjust discrimination and to repeal it would only cause a return of such a condition. He also stated that passage of this bill would permit carriers "to contend with force that Congress intended the Commission should change its policy in order that rail carriers would get more tonnage and water lines less."

The burden of proof, as it should be, is on the carriers to justify such departures, and the passage of this bill would postpone such burden until protest had been made to the Commission against rates filed and placed in effect. Therefore, placing the burden on the shipper to initiate action, while present status of the fourth section places it on the carrier.

It would cause a return of conditions prevailing prior to April 1, 1922, when rates to interior points were much higher than if shipped the same distance to water points. Carriers have not always protected firms in interior towns in the past because of greater pressure from large water points. We have no reason to believe they will do so in the future, with increased pressure created at such points.

It will cause the carriers loss of revenue to water points and trucks from water points to attempt such rate-cutting. It will reduce rail tonnage to and from interior points, because of reduced tonnage of all kinds to interior points as well as to water points. That is because more tonnage will be concentrated at water points to be handled at water rates on lower rates and from water points by truck to interior points. River points will play rail carriers against water carriers and truck carriers to beat down rates only for themselves. It will create a vicious circle.

When carriers' tonnage is reduced to interior as well as water points it means loss of jobs for rail employees. This creates a vicious circle.

The principal support of this bill is from shippers located at water points or where they have both water points and interior shipping points and can use both to their decided advantage.

The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee in the Senate charged that rail-employee support and petitions obtained by them from friends, chamber of commerce, Rotary clubs, and influential citizens was propaganda obtained by coercion of their employees. Therefore such support is without knowledge of the question involved and the destruction passage of this bill will cause.

Water carriers and truck carriers are not asking for permission to charge higher rates to intermediate points than they charge to points beyond. They are complying with the law. Only rail carriers desire such relief to destroy competition confronting them. They again would like to hold a monopoly in the transportation field. That should never again be permitted.

Regardless of rail carriers' assurance to protect interior points, we can only base our hopes on their past performances. Our pleas have failed in the past against such advantages enjoyed by water points and concerns have gone out of existence because of such influence. We have many examples of promises forgotten.

When this competition is driven from the field and the destruction of interior points is completed, then your river traffic will have been driven out of existence and water points will thereafter pay the penalty of their own folly in supporting this vicious legislation, and instead of helping the railroad laborer it will result in throwing more of the out-of-work on those lines now serving interior points.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much what the gentleman has had to say about power trusts over a long period of time and what he had to say about the wicked railroads. But may I say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Mississippi and to the other Members of this House this is the first time I have ever said anything on this floor, other than to ask a few questions, but when I make a statement on the floor it goes in the RECORD. I do not go around afterward and change it. About 2 months ago I asked the gentleman from Mississippi a couple of questions.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not confining himself to the last two words of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will proceed in order.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, referring to this bill and to some of the statements the gentleman from Mississippi made here today, I just want to refer back a short time when I asked the gentleman from Mississippi one or two questions. He answered those questions on the floor of the House and then inserted in the RECORD something entirely different from what took place on the floor as between the gentleman from Mississippi and myself.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. When I asked the gentleman to yield this afternoon, and when I have asked the gentleman to yield at other times, the gentleman from Mississippi refused to yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. And I also refuse to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has the floor at present. The gentleman from New Jersey will proceed in order.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this amendment that has been offered, I believe it takes all of the strength away from the Pettengill bill. May I say in behalf of the people of the State of New Jersey that this Pettengill bill will do more to help railroad laborers in the State of New Jersey than any bill that has been passed here this year? For this reason we in New Jersey are very much in favor of it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The pro-forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLE of Maryland) there were—ayes 82, noes 104.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. PETTENGILL and Mr. COLE of Maryland to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 96 and noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 2, line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"No application for any increase in rates, fares, or charges shall be received or considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission unless and until the applicant for such increase in rates, fares, or charges shall show to the Commission that at least 30 days prior to making said application the applicant has filed with the Governor of each State in which said increase will apply a copy of the tariff schedule showing all increases sought in said application, with a memorandum thereto attached explaining each and every increase requested in said application.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the paragraph under consideration. This amendment applies to all fares and rates. The bill relates only to the long-and-short-haul clause.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] wish to be heard?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is in accord with the Interstate Commerce Act and with the particular section under consideration. The amendment relates to any rates, fares, or charges that may involve a greater or shorter distance. It is not limited to any particular point. It is rates, fares, and charges generally, and the amendment deals with the procedure for the protection of the public, so that they shall know that increases are sought.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill now before the Committee, in line 10, page 1, provides that the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which common carriers may be relieved from the operation of this section; that is, relative to compensation, freight rates, or freight charges.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia deals with the establishment of rates and the posting of notice in connection therewith, and, in the opinion of the Chair, is germane. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill a great deal has been said about the water carrier and the railroad. There is a third party whose interest transcends that of either the water carrier or the railroad, and this party is the public.

The long-and-short haul provision is the simple, equitable provision that you shall not charge less for the haul from terminus to terminus than the aggregate of the charges for the intermediate hauls. This bill would do away with this provision. As a practical illustration, it would permit a rate between two distant points, say Philadelphia and San Francisco, to be reduced to a minimum, and at the same time permit the rates to the intermediate points to be raised by any amount within the discretion of the Commission.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. No; not now. If the gentleman will give me more time, I will yield.

Mr. MAPES. I do not have control of the time.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will get me more time I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLAND. The proposition here, it is stated, is to raise more money for the railroads, and to do this putting the water carriers out of commission by lowering the rates between the distant termini, and permitting the intermediate rates to be raised. If you are going to raise more money and if, at the same time, you are going to lower the rates between distant termini, where are you going to get the money except from an increase along the lines, that is, at intermediate points in the interior of the country. That burden falls upon the people in the interior. [Applause.]

Water competition exists today. The carriers can go before the Interstate Commerce Commission. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] has shown that in 250 cases the railroads have been there, and practically all of them have been granted relief in the average time of 22 days. However, the burden of proof is upon the carrier. Do away with this law and what can be done? The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] showed that all a railroad has to do is file its schedule. It posts its rates around in the stations. Did you ever try to read one of these schedules? In my time I have represented railroads, and I have tried to read a schedule, but could not make head or tail out of it until somebody came along and explained to me what the schedule meant. This is the type of notice to be given to the little towns in Arkansas, Wyoming, and all through the country. This is the only notice they get. Then they must retain a lawyer and come here to fight the change of rate. Today the railroads under this law can raise the issue, if they wish to, but the burden is upon them. By this measure the burden is placed upon the man at home, first, to know the railroad is trying to increase the rate; second, to get a lawyer to interpose objection to it; and, third, to try out the question.

My amendment in effect says if you want to increase the rate notify the Governors of the States in which the rates will be increased, so they can notify their people and be prepared to protect them against iniquitous, unjust, and unlawful increases. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLMES) there were—ayes 89, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEARHART: Page 1, line 10, after the word "act", insert "but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance."

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which has just been read is interpretative in its nature. The portion of the bill which it would interpret is as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. Chairman, all this portion of the bill means is that the railroad shall not charge more for the long haul than for the aggregate of the intermediate hauls. This provision is a joker. There is not a railroad in the United States that is thinking for even a moment of charging more for the long haul. They are looking for the opportunity to charge less for the long haul and more for the short hauls to discriminate against the inland cities and communities throughout the country.

The interpretative amendment which I offer is taken from the existing law, without change. It merely provides that in the interpretation of this joker, the first paragraph of the bill, the Commission shall not determine that, because the railroads are forbidden to charge more for the long haul, they are granted the right, by inference, to charge more for the short haul. In other words, it leaves the opening sentence to mean exactly what it states, and defeats what I fear the proponents of this bill desire. It slams the door on the argument that the Commission should regard the enactment of the Pettengill bill as a mandate to render decisions adverse to the interests of the people and in favor of discrimination and unfair and unequal rates throughout the United States.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] stated that there is a third party involved here and that is the public. After all, the public is the real party, but those of us who are older remember a statement which, I believe, was made by some railway official years ago, "The public be damned." Do you recall that? They are not saying it openly today, but undercover they have the same attitude toward the public—the public be damned.

My good friend the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] stated that what we want out in the West are lower railroad rates for what we ship out. I believe so, too, but I am here to tell you that the railroad companies do not know what is to their own interests. They are charging, for example, on apples which we ship from the West to the Midwest the price of one box of apples for shipping three boxes. Why do they not come down in their freight rates and get more traffic? The same thing was true a year ago and you recall when the order went out that they should reduce their passenger rates to 2 cents. The Pennsylvania Railroad, not knowing its own interests, opposed this order, but when they were compelled to comply with the order the same as the Baltimore & Ohio and our western railroads, and charge a 2-cent fare, what was the result? The result was they got so much more traffic that they made more money than ever. They cannot see their own interest.

I now wish to mention two other things which I did not have an opportunity to state a while ago when I had 3 minutes yielded me. Who are for this Pettengill bill? I have here, on page 37 of the report, a list of them and all of those who are for it are commercial clubs and large fruit shipping companies in the State of Washington, and not one of the real shippers. Not very many of the real public are for it, but the commercial clubs and the fruit shippers are for it. They have only personal interests. The fruit shippers of the city of Yakima and Yakima County always get their money from the growers.

They always get their pound of flesh, and so do the railroad companies, and quite often the farmer has to pay a railroad bill and get nothing for his products. It is time for the railroad companies to wake up and realize that unless the farmers get reasonable rates and prosper, neither can the railroads in the long run.

May I now read what the State Grange, which represents the real shippers and the real farmers of the State of Washington, have said on this question:

The astonishing statement that "agriculture favors repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act" was made by an attorney representing American railroads last week during a House of Representatives hearing on the Pettengill bill.

So agriculture favors the Pettengill bill! That's a new one, especially to farmers. Evidently the railroad attorney knows more about what farmers want than do the farmers themselves.

American agriculture is emphatically opposed to the Pettengill bill or any bill which would repeal the protective clause that prevents railroads from charging a higher rate for a short haul than for a longer haul over the same line and in the same direction.

Long-short-haul rate discrimination must be carried on at the expense of inland commerce in order to enable railroads to underbid cheap water-borne freight. Somebody has to pay the difference, and the farmer is the goat. The majority of farmers are essentially inland producers, intermediate shippers.

The National Grange is on record against the Pettengill bill. So are other leading farm organizations. But although the Interstate Commerce Commission has granted hundreds of concessions to railroads under present law, the railroads still insist on "whole hog or none."

Agriculture cannot tolerate this. The Pettengill bill must be defeated.

This is an editorial in the Grange News, in the State of Washington, and this represents the attitude of the farmers and the real shippers in the State of Washington.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, you should realize by this time that the intermountain country is interested in section 4.

Mr. Eastman, as Coordinator of Transportation, in a report he filed in the Seventy-fourth Congress, said that the advocates of the long-and-short-haul clause in section 4 were actuated by a zeal bordering on fanaticism. After what you have seen and heard here today I do not think any argument on my part is necessary at this time to prove that the Coordinator had a pretty good line on the advocates of the long-and-short-haul clause in section 4.

When I had the floor a short while ago, I said that notwithstanding the fact that section 4, with the long-and-short-haul clause, had been in effect for 27 years, the West had stood still or had dried up with respect to its population and its industries.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I cannot yield now. There is another of the gentlemen that Commissioner Eastman had in mind. [Laughter.]

I stated I did not claim this condition was due to section 4. I think it possible that a case could be made out for it if it were necessary. What I said was that while I do not claim this state of arrested development in the intermountain country is due to section 4, you cannot take that admitted condition and make out a case for section 4.

I want these gentlemen to get up and tell this House what section 4 has done for the West in the last 27 years. They are complaining here now of existing railroad rates. Let them give you some facts in support of the faith that is in them. They claim they are being discriminated against now. They claim they cannot ship things in and they cannot ship things out. Everything they say on this floor in this debate is an indictment of and an argument against section 4 and its administration by the Interstate Commerce Commission during the last 27 years, and yet they clamor to retain it. I cannot understand that state of mind. If the intermountain country during the last 27 years had been prosperous, if it had been progressive, if its industries had been built up instead of drying up and being removed to the deep-water ports of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts—if that was the condition, and it was proposed to repeal this section, I can see where you would have an argument, and I think I would give you the benefit of the doubt; if that great country from the Missouri River to the Coast Range had kept pace or half kept pace with development of the coasts and it was proposed to repeal this section, I think I would feel doubtful about casting my vote for it. But the way I look at the situation, the way every man from the Mountain States knows the conditions to be, I cannot see that we have anything whatever to risk by repealing section 4. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by Mr. GEARHART.

There was not objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEARHART: Page 1, line 10, after the word "act", insert: "But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "by virtue of orders of the Commission", and on page 2, line 7, strike out the word "required" and insert the word "permitted", and on page 2, line 7, strike out the word "changed" and insert the word "increased."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment will be apparent from reading the section as it will read if the amendment is adopted:

That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the Commission and not yet acted upon shall not be permitted to be increased by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the Commission.

My object in offering that amendment is this. This is a very adroit provision which has been written into this bill. It is that rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of the amendatory act by virtue of the orders of the Commission, and so forth. They have had 250 cases involving this question, and they have passed on about 194, as I recall. I understand a large number of cases involve relief to the railroads. Those are all that would be affected by this section as the committee has written it. I say that all of these rates, fares, or charges, whether fixed by schedule duly filed or by order of the Commission, insofar as this section is concerned, shall not be permitted to be increased except by order of the Commission. May I say to you that I believe this bill would fail if it could really be comprehended; that when the schedules are filed and posted in the regular way and 30 days pass, those schedules become the rates unless complaint is made by somebody against them. You or your town may think the rates are satisfactory, but unless you are diligent in watching those rates to see whether an increase has been asked, you may wake up one fair morning with a considerable increase, because automatically the schedules that have been filed by the railroads become the existing rates. I ask that insofar as this schedule is concerned, that may not be the case until the Commission expressly passes on the increase by an order. If the proponents of the bill desire to protest against increases, let them accept this amendment.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] I think wholly misunderstands the history of the act. He implies that the language he is now seeking to change has been adroitly written, as he says, into this bill for some Machiavellian purpose. I call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the fact that that language has been in the bill for 17 years and we are not changing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLDEN) there were ayes 63 and noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if it is possible to agree upon a limitation of debate. I would suggest 15 minutes. Is that agreeable?

Mr. HOLMES. No. I would have to object to that. I understand there are many Members in opposition to this bill who have several amendments to offer.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Would the gentleman suggest some other time within reason?

Mr. HOLMES. I would say about 45 minutes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona: On page 2, line 17, after the word "act", strike out the period, insert a colon and the words "And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this act to or from points other than water ports shall not be increased."

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, because, as I understand it, if agreed to, it would freeze every rate, fare, and charge in the United States, and would forever forbid the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit any change thereafter to be made. Therefore it is not germane to the section of the bill or to the bill itself which was intended to give the Interstate Commerce Commission full authority from time to time to agree to the raising or lowering of rates. It would freeze every rate in the United States for all time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arizona wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I maintain it is entirely within the domain of Congress to pass such legislation, if in its wisdom it sees fit to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the question is not whether the Congress, in its wisdom, may see fit to do so, but the question is whether or not this amendment is germane to the bill. The Chair will give the benefit of his views to the gentleman at this point, subject to change, if the gentleman submits an argument that convinces the Chair he is wrong.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, may I call attention to the fact that this bill is directed to fixing rates? That is the very purpose of the bill. Consequently, when the purpose of this bill is the fixing of rates, a provision which provides that certain rates shall not be increased is certainly germane. That is the whole purpose of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WILCOX). The Chair will give the benefit of his views at this point. As the Chair understands the bill, it seeks to give discretion to the Interstate Commerce Commission in the fixing of rates. As the Chair understands the gentleman's amendment, it would freeze all existing rates between points other than water ports at the existing rate. If that is true, in the opinion of the Chair, it seeks to accomplish directly the opposite purpose to that set forth in the bill. For that reason, in the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not germane.

That ruling of the Chair, however, is open for the discussion of the gentleman if he can convince the Chair he is wrong.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The justice of the decision appeals to me, Mr. Chairman, and I shall not comment further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEARHART: On page 2, line 2, after the words "this section", strike out the colon, insert a semicolon and the following: "but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the Commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from a more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed."

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment which has been identified as the reasonably compensatory amendment.

As the membership all understands, it is the purpose of the bill under consideration to make it possible for the railroads to discriminate in rate making, to grant favors to some at the expense of others. There is no use attempting to conceal the purpose or of attempting to explain it away. It is simply a bold scheme to amend the Transportation Act so that it will be possible for the railroads to discriminate in favor of some, to the disadvantage of others.

The amendment which I have offered assumes that premise and recognizes that that is just exactly what is going to be done to us. Since we are going to get it, it is purposed to provide a measure of protection against the overdoing of it, if you please. It says as simply as anything could be stated that, in fixing these discriminatory rates, those which they choose to fix lower than they are now, that in fixing them the railroads shall fix them at a figure which will return to the railroads a reasonable compensation for the service rendered.

In other words, it will prevent the railroads from fixing rates which will compel the carrying of freight at a loss. In a nutshell, it protects the railroads from themselves. Now, you know, and I know, and everyone knows, that if they do carry freight at a loss for one class of shippers, they have got to make up the loss by overcharging another class, and that other class may include the people whom you represent. In all probability you will get stuck somewhere along the line. The purpose of this amendment is to provide that no rate shall be fixed at a figure so low that the freight will be carried by the railroads at a loss. It is a provision to protect the people—shippers and consumers alike—from the unavoidable consequences of unjust discrimination, from special privileges unjustly extended to others.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, that I may ask the author of this bill a few questions on some points that are not quite clear. Can the author of the bill advise us how much traffic he estimates will be recovered for the railroads from the Panama Canal in the event this bill becomes a law?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not think any east-bound traffic, but there will be some west-bound traffic.

Mr. HOUSTON. How much?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not know; I cannot say.

Mr. HOUSTON. How much do the railroads say?

Mr. PETTENGILL. It might be a substantial amount of west-bound traffic to fill up cars that are going west empty, originating mostly in the Middle West.

Mr. HOUSTON. It would not be any great percentage of what goes through there today, would it?

Mr. PETTENGILL. It would be some substantial percentage. I do not know how much; nobody can estimate how much.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. If the railroads got all the intercoastal traffic, $40,000,000 per annum, as compared with $3,000,000,000 they are now getting, it would only increase their traffic 1⅓ percent.

Mr. HOUSTON. How many trains would that make?

Mr. COLDEN. It would mean $40,000,000 a year. I could not tell the gentleman offhand how many trainloads that would be.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that I intend to move to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back as amended by the Cole substitute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may answer the question he propounded?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps I can demonstrate by one instance what may be done in west-bound traffic. The city of Los Angeles, a municipality, desired a large consignment of steel to be used in the erection of a huge municipal water-supply system. It was a Government consignment and, therefore, was free from the inhibitions of the long-and-short-haul clause under the law; so the municipal authorities of Los Angeles negotiated with the railroads to find out at what rate they would ship that enormous consignment of steel from the East across the continent to Los Angeles. They agreed on a 75-cent rate. The rate fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under existing law was $1.05; but as this was a Government consignment, the 75-cent rate was permitted to be charged by the railroads, a reduction of 30 cents. The railroads transported 2,000 cars of steel from Chicago, Kansas City, Youngstown, Pittsburgh, and did it at a profit. That is what the railroads could do if given a chance. The Government is willing to get the lower rates for the longer haul but will not permit private shippers to get it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a further question along the same line?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but I do not know that I can answer it.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman cannot, then I will ask the author of the bill. Wichita, Kans., is 30 miles off the center of the United States. You can ship livestock, hogs in particular, for 99 cents a hundred, and packing-house prepared goods at $2.01 to the west coast. That gives the west coast a chance to come into the middle portion of the United States and take out the choice hogs, leave the culls, but not prepared goods; on the other hand, the New York rate on prepared goods, packing-house goods, is cheaper than that on livestock. Why is that so?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not familiar with the situation; I could not possibly answer the gentleman's question.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask a question in that 5 minutes?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will this additional 5 minutes be taken out of the time allotted for debate of amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it will be taken out of the 20 minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this time may be added to the 20 minutes allotted for debate.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] answer the question I asked a moment ago?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I am sorry, I did not hear the question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to know what effect this bill will have on Wichita, which is about 30 miles off-center of the United States, from the packing-house point of view. The rate on livestock is about 99 cents a hundred and on prepared packing-house goods about $2.01. We go to New York, the same distance approximately, and the rate on livestock is higher than on prepared goods. Why is that?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I am sorry I cannot answer the question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not found anybody who could answer that, and this is not said in disparagement of the gentleman.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not know why there is a difference.

Mr. HOUSTON. Did I understand the gentleman to say the Farm Bureau is in favor of this bill?

Mr. PETTENGILL. The American Farm Bureau has gone on record in favor of this bill, as shown by pages 18, 19, and 20 of the report.

Mr. HOUSTON. They were against it last year, but they are for it this year?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes. They endorsed it as a national organization.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield on the Farm Bureau situation?

Mr. HOUSTON. If I have the time, I will be pleased to. I understand that on the west coast for a number of years corn has been coming up from South America by water.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I understand that is correct.

Mr. HOUSTON. And that corn from the Middle West, from Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas cannot get to the west coast on account of the high rates.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will this bill affect that situation?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes. It will give a market to the middle western farmers. It will permit the middle western farmers to compete on the west coast with products brought in by water from Argentine, Australia, and the other countries.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let us take canned goods. Under the present law Wichita, Kansas City, and Pittsburgh the rate is the same. When the rate was lowered from $1.05 to 73 cents at Pittsburgh and Kansas City, the jobbers at Wichita were able to get the same rate. In the event this bill becomes law, how does that affect the situation? If Kansas City and Pittsburgh get a lower rate, will Wichita get it?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Wichita will have the right to ask the railroads to give them the rate which will permit them to get their goods in a competitive market. The purpose of this bill is to bring the producers of the Nation closer to the markets of the Nation, and the tendency will be to reduce freight rates rather than raise them.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman asked about the endorsement of the American Farm Bureau of this bill. The gentleman from Indiana stated that, from the hearings, such was the case. I want to point out that the Farm Bureau as a national organization not only has never endorsed this bill but in 1931, in so many words, opposed any change of the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act. Never in a national convention of the Farm Bureau has the Pettengill bill been endorsed, or anything like it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I just heard the question brought up that the Farm Bureau had endorsed it. I thought they had not last year, but they did this year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNELL of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I heard some of the questions that the gentleman who just preceded me on the floor asked. Of course, the answer was given as to what it is expected this bill will bring about; but there is one thing to remember. The gentleman spoke about the rate on corn and hogs; but application has to be made to the railroad. You have to go to the railroad and get its permission. When you are not at a water competitive point, when there is no water competition and the railroad can get the business anyway, you are not going to get that kind of a rate.

I heard the gentleman from Colorado say he wanted the opportunity to move some of his production in the interior to the outer market. We have been trying to do that for a long time. We have gone to the railroads and asked them for rates. We have asked them to lower their rates, but they will not listen to us. They will not listen to any of our appeals because we are not at a competitive point. We do not have water competition out there.

Mr. Chairman, the railroads have 80 percent of the traffic in the United States today and they are just as greedy today as they were in 1920. They want to hog it all. They want every bit of the traffic. They want to have the monopoly they had before the enactment of the Interstate Commerce Act. That is all they want by this bill.

We have a terrible situation in the interior. The industries at interior points are moving out. The population is decreasing. This is not because of the provisions of section four. It is because there is a huge water advantage all around the rim of the country. Now, you not only want to give the coast cities a water advantage, you want to pass this bill and give them a rail advantage, in addition, so industries in the interior will move out and leave us worse off than we were before.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot afford to destroy the interior of this country. We cannot afford to destroy the industries in the interior of this country. There ought to be coordination of transportation in the United States. There is a place in the United States for the water carriers. There is a place in the United States for the truckers, and there is a place in the United States for the railroads. This bill destroys water competition and it destroys truck competition. I sincerely hope and trust you will not permit this bill to pass. We have regulated many industries. We have regulated the coal industry and we have regulated the issuance of stocks, bonds, and other kinds of securities. Now, you want to come along and say to the railroads, "Go ahead. We are going to remove this regulation and will allow you to write your own ticket."

I sincerely hope and trust that despite all the talk there has been here today the Members will vote with the people of the United States, the consumers of the United States, because, no matter what transportation agency is involved, the final consumer is the one who pays the freight bill in the United States. I sincerely hope and trust you will defeat the Pettengill bill today. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Gearhart amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Washington) there were—ayes 63, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. WILCOX, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1668) to amend paragraph (1) of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion to recommit offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instructions to report the bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: Page 1, strike out all that follows after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That paragraph (1) of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920 (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 4), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'(1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this part to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this part, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this part to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, That upon application to the Commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the Commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the Commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed; and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which common carriers may be relieved from the operation of this section: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of this amendatory act by virtue of orders of the Commission or as to which application has heretofore been filed with the Commission and not yet acted upon shall not be required to be charged by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the Commission: And provided further, That in any case before the Commission where there is brought in issue a lower rate or charge for the transportation of like kind of property for a longer than for a shorter distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, the burden of proof shall be upon the carrier to justify the rate or charge for the longer distance against any claim of a violation of sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act.'"

Mr. BULWINKLE (interrupting the reading of the motion to recommit). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the motion to recommit be dispensed with and the motion printed in the RECORD. It is the Cole amendment, which has been read in Committee.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the motion to recommit is identical with the amendment which I offered and was defeated by such a close vote in Committee?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BULWINKLE) there were—ayes 103, noes 145.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Forty-nine Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking this vote by the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Seventy Members have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 269, nays 119, not voting 42, as follows:

Mr. Cannon of Missouri with Mr. Gilchrist.
Mr. Parsons with Mr. Kvale.
Mr. Greenwood with Mr. Goodwin.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRAY, is unavoidably away from the Hall. If present, he would have voted "aye."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from California, Mr. TOLAN, is absent because of illness. If he were present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. FREY, is absent. If present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained and was not in the Chamber at the time my name was called. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Would I be entitled to recognition by the Chair for the purpose of announcing how I would have voted had I been present?

The SPEAKER. Under a strict construction of the precedents the Chair does not think the gentleman would be permitted to do so.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Under the same circumstance, Mr. Speaker, would I be entitled to recognition by the Chair to announce how a colleague would have voted had he been present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would make the same ruling in that respect.

In view of the fact the question has been raised by the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri, the Chair will state that a practice has grown up in the House, because no objection has been raised by any Member, whereby when certain Members fail to be present and answer to their names, some of their colleagues undertake to explain how they would have voted if present. This question has been raised several times in the past, and it has been held uniformly that it is an improper practice. The Chair, therefore, is inclined to adhere to the decisions heretofore established.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed and to include therein some references to previous debates in the House and Senate on this measure and some correspondence with the Interstate Commerce Commission and a few references to the hearings on the bill.

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a resolution today requiring that all pending action on the part of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission be held in abeyance until the said Commission has held a competition for the selection of a design for the Thomas Jefferson memorial under the supervision of the American Institute of Architects and the said design so selected has been reported back to the United States Congress for final acceptance and approval by a majority of the Members of the House and Senate. It will be recalled that I introduced a similar resolution in the Seventy-fourth Congress, and it expresses a principle which I believe should become an established rule of action for the United States Government when memorials or public buildings are to be erected.

The present Thomas Jefferson memorial design was selected by the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission without any opportunity being granted for hearings, much less an architectural competition. I object strenuously to the awarding of a contract to any architect in such manner, even Mr. Pope, of New York, and especially upon the basis of a 6-percent commission when 5 percent is the customary rate, and there is a provision in the District of Columbia that limits the commission on buildings erected by the District to 3 percent on all contracts under $2,000,000 and 2¾ percent on all contracts over $2,000,000. The present situation is a result of the delegation of too much authority to congressional commissions without any supervision whatsoever upon the final action of the body on the part of the Congress which should always be the case. For that reason it is important that even after the selection of the design through a proper democratic and Jeffersonian method the results thereof should again be checked over by the legislative body and voted upon. We have more than one architect in America, although one might not think so if he were to observe recent architectural trends in Washington, D. C.

No fair-minded people, either architects or laymen, can or will object to a program of architectural competitions for the selection of the designs of Government buildings. Thomas Jefferson himself suggested such a procedure for the selection of the design for the United States Capitol and the White House and it was followed. An opportunity is thus given to young men in the profession throughout the United States to prove their ability. New thought and originality are brought to light and the average man in the street is given his chance, which principle Thomas Jefferson fought for from the beginning to the end of his public career. The response to such a program would be marked, as was evidenced by the fact that 550 artists recently submitted designs for the murals on the walls of a new post-office building to be erected in the State of Texas.

The creative ability of young men and women of this Nation ought to be so inspired and encouraged by the United States Government. Who knows but what another L'Enfant or great genius might be brought to light; and certainly the author of the Declaration of Independence, the founder of the Democratic Party, would be the last one on earth to object to such new thought. He was in the vanguard of those who struck out from the shelter of the British Crown and founded a new nation. No one can make a pilgrimage to Monticello, which to my mind is the most beautiful home in America, without becoming vividly aware of Jefferson's urge to give the new and the modern a chance. It was he who conceived the idea of and installed the first double doors, both of which opened, regardless of which half is moved, from which design the principle of the double-acting street-car doors was developed. It was Jefferson who conceived of and built recessed beds in his home, rolling doors that slid into the walls, concealed dumbwaiters, the first revolving chair, a combination music rack and tea table, and other things equally as new and startling. If an architectural competition were to bring forth a new thought, a new design to memorialize a great American, I believe that none would be more inspired or more happy about the discovery than Thomas Jefferson.

It is imperative that the United States Congress prevent the desecration of the memory of Jefferson by requiring the selection of the design for his memorial to be made as a result of an architectural competition and demanding that the final action be approved by the chosen representatives of the people in the legislative branch of the Government that he who led the new and liberal thought of his time loved so well.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 15, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1937

Rev. John W. Rustin, minister of the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church South, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Father of us all, forgive us that too often when we pray we bow our heads before Thee instead of our hearts. In the busy rush of life may we stop long enough to hear the voice of the Son of Man, who said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

Enlarge, we pray Thee, our thoughts. Thou hast set us in so great a universe, deep and high beyond our apprehension. Enlarge our horizons, expand our minds, greaten our hopes. Withdraw us from the small and mean limitations of daily life and as from some high hill give us a larger outlook on life. Enlarge our sympathies lest we who are more fortunate than our brothers forget that great band of underprivileged people who so sorely need our help.

Bless, we pray Thee, this Nation of ours, and give to this body of men, charged as they are with the responsibility of its leadership, strength of body, clarity of mind, and moral and spiritual courage to lead us.

Cross Thou the inner thresholds of our lives so that this day we may find spiritual peace.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

REPORTS OF GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint letter from the Secretaries of State, Agriculture, and Commerce, members of the United States Great Lakes Exposition Commission, submitting, pursuant to law, a financial statement of expenditures, together with other reports concerning the character and extent of Federal participation in the Great Lakes Exposition in Cleveland, Ohio, during the year 1936, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Senate joint resolution petitioning Congress to make theft of livestock on land under Federal control a Federal offense

Whereas under the Taylor Grazing Act a great area of the Western States comes under the control of the Federal Government; and

Whereas there has been an increasing activity in the theft of livestock on the open ranges in the western country in the last few years; and

Whereas, on account of the immense area to be supervised, it is practically impossible for State and local authorities to suppress these crimes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of Nevada, That Congress be requested to enact such legislation as will constitute livestock theft on areas under control of the Taylor Grazing Act a Federal offense; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, to the legislatures of our sister States, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress at Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas there is now pending in the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States, S. 1375, which is "A bill to provide for the punishment of persons stealing animals moving in interstate commerce, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas stealing of animals is rapidly reaching alarming proportions and the apprehension and conviction of persons engaged in the stealing of animals is becoming increasingly more difficult because of modern means of transportation and the inability of State governments to afford protection to its citizens beyond the borders of the State; and

Whereas the passage of S. 1375 would enable the Federal Government to apprehend and convict persons transporting, concealing, or receiving stolen animals, who are now able to evade punishment; and

Whereas the passage of said S. 1375 would be extremely beneficial to the State of Texas and all of the States in the United States which are concerned with the establishment and protection of the livestock industry of the State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the forty-fifth legislature, That the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to give every consideration to S. 1375 to the end that it may be speedily enacted into law; be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Texas in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to give their support to, and vote for, the aforesaid measure, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded forthwith to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to Senators and Representatives from the State of Texas in said Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to enact bill H. R. 4009, which proposes to appropriate $50,000,000 to cooperate with the States of the United States in the eradication of noxious weeds, and urging the Secretary of Agriculture to expedite consideration favorable to said bill.

Whereas during recent times numerous noxious weeds, such as the wild morning glory, sometimes known as the creeping jenny, or field bind weed; the Russian knapweed, leafy spurge; Canada thistle; perennial sow thistle; quack grass; Johnson grass; Bermuda grass; nut grass; Klamath weed, and many others have invaded the farm and agricultural lands and gardens in most of the States of the United States, including the State of California; and

Whereas it has been estimated that noxious weeds are costing the United States $3,000,000,000 every year; and

Whereas little organized effort has been made to control such noxious weeds; and

Whereas a definite effort made in the State of Idaho to check such weeds has clearly demonstrated that the work can be successfully accomplished; and

Whereas there was introduced in the House of Representatives by D. WORTH CLARK, of Idaho, a bill known as H. R. 4009, which has as its purpose enabling each State to furnish financial assistance as far as practicable for the control and eradication of noxious weeds within such States and the appropriation of $50,000,000 by the Federal Government to aid in such work; and

Whereas H. R. 4009 is general in its application and is well designed to accomplish the purposes desired; and

Whereas not only will the eradication of noxious weeds in the State of California and other States of the Union bring inestimable benefit to agriculture, and as a result to all citizens of this State and other States at large, but it will in addition result in the employment of numerous men who are now unemployed and thereby hasten economic recovery: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully urged to enact legislation proposed by bill H. R. 4009, and that Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, is also urged to expedite consideration favorable to said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and to each member of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, and to Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in Congress, and that such Senators and Members from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Assembly joint resolution relative to the granting of travel pay and other allowances to certain soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection who were discharged in the Philippines

Whereas certain persons who enlisted in the Regular Army of the United States in the year 1898 under special act of Congress for the duration of the War with Spain, who were honorably discharged from such enlistment while serving in the Philippines, who did not there reenter the military service of the United States through commission or enlistment, who embarked at Manila within 1 year after such discharge for return to the United States, have never been granted or allowed travel pay or allowance for transportation and subsistence between the Philippine Islands and San Francisco, Calif.; and

Whereas many of these men are residents of the State of California; and

Whereas the allowance of travel pay to said men constitutes a legal and legitimate obligation of the United States; and

Whereas the Honorable JOHN F. DOCKWEILER, Representative in Congress from the Sixteenth District, on January 8, 1937, introduced a bill, no. H. R. 2279, in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fifth Congress of the United States granting travel pay and other allowances to certain soldiers in the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection who were discharged in the Philippines: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized to use their utmost endeavors to secure the passage of said bill, no. H. R. 2279, granting travel pay and other allowances to certain soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, to the members of the California delegation in Congress, and to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and to the chairman of the Committee on War Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing the President and Congress to increase the payments for old-age assistance and aid to the blind made by the Federal Government to the several States under the provisions of the Social Security Act

Whereas the present contributions made by the Federal Government to the State of California are inadequate to permit the State of California to increase the allowance for old-age assistance and aid to the blind to $50 a month; and

Whereas the people of the State of California believe that $50 a month is a reasonable amount to permit the aged and the blind to maintain suitable and respectable standards of living; and

Whereas an increase in the allowance to the aged and to the blind to $50 a month would, without increased assistance from the Federal Government, constitute a destructive financial burden to the counties of the State of California: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully urged to enact as quickly as possible such suitable legislation as will provide that the Federal Government shall pay to each State of the United States an amount equal to at least one-half of the total amount of the payments made by that State for aid to the aged and to the blind, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $50; and be it further

Resolved, That the President and Congress are respectfully urged to understand and appreciate the seriousness of a condition which is peculiar to only two States in the United States whereby great numbers of aged people are coming to California because of that provision in the Social Security Act which makes them eligible for a pension after only 5 years residence, a condition which will before long seriously affect the financial condition of California unless the Federal Government recognizes that this is a Federal and not a State obligation and make such increases in its allowances to California as are necessary to meet this obligation; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States; and that such Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Assembly joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to initiate an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to provide that the electoral college be abolished and that the President and Vice President be elected by a direct vote of the people

Whereas electors of the President and Vice President of the United States are in effect no more than messengers whose sole duty it is to certify and transmit the election returns; and

Whereas the electoral college is not adapted to modern times and is cumbersome and expensive; and

Whereas many voters are confused by the numerous names of electors appearing on the ballot and thereby divide their vote between opposing candidates without intending so to do; and

Whereas the abolition of the electoral college would result in a great monetary saving:

(a) In shortening the ballot.

(b) In abolishing fees and expenses now paid to electors; and

Whereas, in the opinion of the members of both houses of the California Legislature, a large majority of the citizens of the United States desire that the electoral college be abolished and that they be enabled to vote directly for the President and Vice President of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to initiate an amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing the electoral college and providing that the President and Vice President be directly elected by a majority of the qualified voters of the States of the United States, with the understanding, however, that the voting shall still be on the same basis as under the present law, namely, one vote for each congressional district and one vote for each senatorial district; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to forward a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

Resolutions requesting Congress to repeal certain acts prejudicial to the oil-consuming States and to the nonproducing States

Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted legislation forbidding the interstate transportation of petroleum products made from crude oil produced in excess of the production laws of the oil-producing States (Public, No. 14, 74th Cong., ch. 18, 49 Stat. pp. 30–33); and

Whereas Congress has enacted certain legislation permitting the oil-producing States by means of State compacts to circumvent the Federal antitrust laws (Public Resolution No. 64, 74th Cong., ch. 781, 49 Stat. pp. 939–941); and

Whereas Congress has appropriated special funds to the Bureau of Mines of the Department of the Interior for the purpose of issuing forecasts of market demand for crude oil and refined petroleum products, and recommended production to come from the respective States; and

Whereas Congress has enacted certain legislation to provide revenue in connection with the importation of crude petroleum and its products (Revenue Act of 1932, as later amended); and

Whereas all the above-mentioned statutes have proven unfair to the wholesaler, dealer, and consumer of petroleum products in the nonoil-producing States, resulting in the nonproducing States subsidizing the producing States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby requests the Congress of the United States to repeal immediately the four items of legislation herein referred to, and to refrain from passing any additional legislation inimical to the welfare of the petroleum-consuming States; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress is hereby requested immediately to pass legislation forbidding the Department of the Interior or any other Federal Government department from issuing, in any manner whatsoever, forecasts of market demand of petroleum products or recommended production thereof from the respective States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of the commonwealth to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to each Member thereof from this Commonwealth.

Mr. TRUMAN presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Missouri, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas under the social-security and relief programs large numbers of citizens of this and other States are eligible for assistance; and

Whereas the General Assembly of Missouri and the legislatures of the other States have evidenced a desire to fully provide for the aged and unfortunate citizens of their respective States; and

Whereas large appropriations of public funds have been made in Missouri and other States financed by heavy and burdensome taxation upon the people of the States; and

Whereas trained social workers and relief workers have descended upon the States as the plague of locusts descended upon Egypt and are eating the substance of the people and are depriving the aged and unfortunate of the money so sympathetically appropriated by the legislatures of the several States; and

Whereas these alleged trained social workers and relief workers are constantly becoming more arrogant and oppressive toward the legislatures and more unkind toward the aged and unfortunate; and

Whereas said social-security workers working under the Old Age Assistance Board under instruction of the Federal Social Security Board are about to set up budgets and approval sheets; instructions for food for the aged; food budgets; clothing budgets; weekly food budgets; household budgets; low-cost special diets, including diabetic diets, weekly orders, smooth diets, sample of menus, cardiac diets, bland diets, ulcer diets, secondary anemia diets, and a lot of other tomfoolery suggestions unheard of by the people of this State; and

Whereas the people who have attained the age of 70 years have learned how to handle their own business and economy and are entitled, as a matter of natural right, to lead and direct their own lives without interference from bureaucratic employees: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth General Assembly of the State of Missouri, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Missouri be memorialized to define and curb the powers of the Social Security Board and Relief Administration, so as to relieve the taxpayers, the aged, and the unfortunate of this and other States of the plague of social-service workers and relief workers above described, in order that we may again come back to earth and allow the people of the great State of Missouri and other States to live in their natural way, undisturbed by cellar smellers, snoopers, dieticians, and other unnecessary and overinquisitive employees of the social-security and relief program; be it further

Resolved, That such legislation as is hereafter enacted by the National Congress be considered also in the light of permitting the several States to attend to their own business without uncalled for and unnecessary interference on the part of the Federal Government, and that grants made to the several States be unconditional, inasmuch as all moneys so granted originate in and are provided by the several States; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house be instructed and authorized to send a certified copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives of Missouri in Congress.

Mr. REYNOLDS presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, which was refefred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint resolution endorsing the recommendations of the President of the United States of February 5, 1937, for reforms in the Federal judicial system and requesting the Senators and Members of Congress from North Carolina to support the measure presented to carry out this purpose

Whereas Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, in a message to Congress on February 5, 1937, recommended the enactment of a measure making important changes in the Federal judicial system, including a provision which would empower the President, when any Judge of the United States Supreme Court, appointed to hold office during good behavior, has hereafter attained the age of 70 years after at least 10 years of service and within 6 months thereafter has neither resigned nor retired, to nominate, and with the consent of the Senate to appoint one additional judge for such Court: Provided, That this increase in the number of Judges so appointed shall not result in more than 15 members of the Supreme Court of the United States, or more than two additional judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals or other specified court; and

Whereas, by reason of the recommendations of the President of the United States to Congress and action upon the bill presented by the President for the purpose of carrying out his recommendations, presents an issue of great natural importance in which the people of North Carolina and all other people of the United States are vitally concerned; and

Whereas the people of the State of North Carolina are strongly supporting the President of the United States in his recommendations to Congress and a great majority of the people of this State firmly believe that the enactment of such measure is vital to the future happiness and welfare of our people; and

Whereas the members of the General Assembly of North Carolina desire to express to the President of the United States and to our Representatives in Congress full endorsement and approval of the measure presented by the President to Congress, and to urge Members of Congress from North Carolina to support the same: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring:

SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of North Carolina does hereby fully endorse and approve the recommendations made by the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his message to Congress of February 5, 1937, and that we do hereby recommend to and urge upon the Members of Congress from North Carolina that they shall vote for and support the measure presented to Congress to carry out said recommendations.

SEC. 2. That duly certified copies of this joint resolution shall be immediately forwarded to the President of the United States and to the Members of Congress from North Carolina, and the Members of Congress from North Carolina are requested to present this joint resolution to the Congress of the United States promptly after the receipt thereof.

SEC. 3. That this resolution shall be in force and effect from and and after its ratification.

SEC. 8. The act is amended by the addition of the following section:

"SEC. 12. Whenever the President finds that a national emergency exists, he is authorized to suspend the application of this act to such contracts as he deems necessary."

SEC. 9. This act shall apply to contracts entered into pursuant to invitations for bids issued on or after 30 days from the effective date hereof.

The statement presented by Mr. WALSH, explanatory of the bill proposing amendments to the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, is as follows:

This bill is designed to reinforce and clarify the basic labor principles enunciated by Congress in the passage of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act of 1936. The principal changes contemplated by this bill are the extension of the scope of the act to all contracts in excess of $2,500 (the present limit is $10,000) and contracts for services as well as supplies; to place on the ineligible list bidders persistently remaining in violation of the National Labor Relations Act; and to require bids by dealers to contain certificates that the goods were manufactured in accordance with the labor conditions of the act.

Under this bill the wage, hour, child-labor, and convict-labor conditions remain substantially the same. Certain administrative difficulties which have arisen under the minimum-wage section and application of the safety and sanitary sections to industrial home work, however, are corrected by clarifying language. Provision is also made for preserving the basic 40-hour week by permitting contractors to allow for compensatory time off within a week for days in which their operations lasted for more than 8 hours without payment of additional overtime provided that the aggregate number of hours for the week does not exceed 40. The other amendments are chiefly of a technical character designed to clarify and retain the administrative practice which has developed under the regulations of the Department of Labor with respect to the present law.

Detailed analysis of these amendments follow:

Section 1: The corresponding section of the act contains the stipulations with regard to the inclusion of labor provisions in contracts for supplies. In addition to broadening the ambit of the act by lowering the exemption from $10,000 to $2,500 and covering contracts for services as well as supplies, these amendments specifically forbid contractors to permit contract work to be performed in homes of workers.

Section 2: This is an amendment to the enforcement section (section 2) and is intended to remedy a conspicuous weakness in the present law. At present, dealers contracting directly with the Government do not have to make any stipulations with regard to the conditions under which the goods were manufactured. A manufacturer who bids direct has to do so, however. It has been discovered in some cases that dealers have fulfilled their contracts by buying goods from factories not conforming to the act, placing these goods in their warehouses and then furnishing them to the Government. This practice is contrary to the spirit of the act and has operated to the disadvantage of manufacturers who have been bidding in full compliance. This amendment would require a dealer bidding directly to submit a certificate by the manufacturer supplying the goods containing the same representations and stipulations with regard to the labor standards of the act. It will be noticed that this amendment does not attempt to reach intermediate manufacturers shipping raw materials or parts to a manufacturer who has a Government contract. It simply places the responsibility for carrying out the labor conditions of the act in every instance upon the manufacturer who is actually fabricating the supplies for the Government. It does not make a contractor responsible for policing labor conditions in the plants of other employers.

Section 3: The corresponding section of the act contains provisions for placing delinquent contractors on a list circulated by the Comptroller General under the terms of which they would be ineligible to receive Government contracts for 3 years. The amendment would add to this list firms which have been found to be violating the National Labor Relations Act and have continued to refuse to conform to orders or instructions of the Labor Relations Board.

Section 4: The amendment proposed is one to correct an apparent typographical error in the language of section 5 of the present law.

Section 5: As section 6 reads at present the Secretary of Labor is compelled to fix an overtime rate for all employment in excess of 8 hours in any one day or 40 hours in any one week. Under the regulations issued by the Department in connection with this section, this overtime rate has been established as one and one-half times the basic hourly or piece-time rate. This has caused hardship to some industries which had four 9-hour shifts with a half holiday on the fifth day of the week. Other manufacturers operating on an 8-hour shift have also incurred penalties on days when certain conditions required overtime work even though they permitted compensatory time off on other days so as to keep the weekly hours within the 40-hour limit. This amendment would relieve manufacturers of the obligation of paying a daily overtime rate if they conformed to the 40-hour week.

Section 6: The amendments enumerated are designed to supplement the section dealing with definitions. The definitions of "person", "employed", "supplies", "manufacturer", "regular dealer" are in substance the same as those appearing in the regulations of the Secretary of Labor under the existing law (Reg. 504, dated Sept. 14, 1936). The definitions of "industrial home work", "home", and "home worker" are virtually the same as those appearing in the uniform State laws prohibiting or regulating home work. The most important feature of this section is the new definition of "minimum fair wage" which really amends section 1 (b) of the present act as well as section 7. At present the minimum wage is defined as that "determined by the Secretary of Labor to be the prevailing minimum wages for persons employed on similar work or in the particular or similar industries or groups of industries currently operating in the locality in which the materials, supplies, articles, or equipment are to be manufactured or furnished under said contract." This language is found to be ambiguous and confusing in the administration of the act because it sets up three standards for the Secretary's administrative findings which are not necessarily consistent with one another, namely, prevailing wages (a) on similar work, (b) in the particular or similar industries, and (c) in groups of industries currently operating in the locality. The principal ambiguity results from the fact that the word "locality" modifies only the last phrase. It is evident that the legislative intent of the present minimum-wage section was to direct the administrative authorities to give effect to geographic differentials. Because of the ambiguity which has been described, however, it is not clear that the present subsection does accomplish this and the word "locality" is so vague as to be almost meaningless. The amendment by permitting the averaging of different minima in industries where there was no single prevailing standard is better designed to carry out the legislative intent expressed by the last Congress since it prevents the wage standard paid in one area which has the highest cost of living from becoming the wage standard for the country as a whole by allowing each industrial section to be weighted according to the number of its employees in the minimum classification.

Section 7: These amendments clarify the statutory exemptions enumerated under section 9 of the act. It was deemed desirable to clarify the meaning of the open-market clause so as to resolve any possible doubt which may have arisen in connection therewith. The language of the first subsection is in harmony with the departmental regulations. (See art. 2 of regulations 504.) This regulation has been upheld by the Comptroller General and informally approved by the Attorney General. The other classes of exempted contracts set forth in this proposed amendment are virtually the same as those exempted by the present law except the one contained in subsection (f) relating to public utilities, which has already been the subject of an administrative exemption. (See art. 603 (a) of regulations 504.) The reason for the exemption is patent. Inasmuch as public utilities in most localities have a franchise giving them a monopoly, the statute requiring competitive bidding is generally an empty formality in these instances.

Section 8: This amendment adds a new section giving the President the power to suspend the application of the act to certain classes of contracts in the event of a national emergency. Almost identical language is contained in the Bacon-Davis Prevailing Wage Act, as amended (act of Aug. 30, 1935, 49 Stat. 1011, U. S. C., title 40, sec. 276 (a)). The President's authority has never been used to impair the policy of that act and it is not believed that the inclusion of this provision would weaken the present law.

DISPENSING WITH OATH IN FILING INCOME-TAX RETURNS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I also introduce, for reference to the Committee on Finance, a bill providing that individual income-tax returns may be made without the formality of an oath, and I ask that a short explanatory statement pertaining to the bill may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Massachusetts; and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 2166) to provide that individual income-tax returns may be made without the formality of an oath, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The statement presented by Mr. WALSH in connection with the bill is as follows:

This bill is patterned after the Massachusetts law, has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is designed to eliminate the necessity of individuals having to swear to their income-tax returns.

The statute providing for the making of income-tax returns requires the same to be under oath. The Massachusetts law, which does not require the administration of oaths on State income-tax returns but does require a written declaration that the returns are made under penalty of perjury, was submitted by Senator WALSH to the Secretary of the Treasury with the recommendation that the principle of the Massachusetts law be adopted. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his opinion approving this bill, states as follows:

"The experience of the Department is that there has been a frequent disregard of the prescribed formalities incident to the administering of oaths by notaries public and other persons authorized to administer oaths. As a result, much of the solemnity and psychological effect usually attached to the proper administering of an oath is lost. Because of some formal defect in the administering of the oath, the Government, in numerous instances, has been unable to prosecute taxpayers for perjury for false statements made in their income returns."

He further states that, in his opinion, a law such as proposed would discourage the making of dishonest returns at least as effectively as the present requirement of an oath. He recommends that the taxpayer's signature should be affixed or acknowledged before two individuals in order to enable the Government to prove the authenticity thereof if such becomes necessary.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 5966) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, by unanimous consent granted on Monday last the bill was reported during the recess, and it was understood it might be taken up today. At that time I reserved the right to object if any Senator desired the bill to go over another day. I do not desire this morning to object. I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5966) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland explain why we have such a large appropriation as $24,000,000 plus for a Federal agency which, though important, requires but a limited personnel?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the legislative appropriation bill, as will be seen by reference to the report of the committee, carries $1,035,680.22 less than the estimate for 1938. It is $1,316,121.22 under the appropriation for 1937. I can say with absolute candor that the committee attempted in every way it could to reduce the amount of the appropriation.

The only increases in the bill are small ones. The total of those increases over the amount carried by the bill as it came from the House is $86,462.76. Demands were made upon us for many large appropriations. For instance, leading from the power plant to various Government buildings is a pipe line which, having been in the ground for some 30 or 40 years, is beginning to show serious signs of decay and has to be replaced. Items of that kind, which could not be postponed in the interest of economy were consequently adopted. Outside of that, and items for moderate repairs here and there in the Capitol, there were no extras added to the bill. Only $86,462 was added by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

As the bill is read for committee amendments, several small amendments will be noted providing increases of salaries. I may say that nearly every employee of the Senate came or sent someone to see the committee in an effort to obtain an increase in salary. We would have liked, of course, to have been in a position to act favorably on all such requests. We did not grant any increases in salaries except where there was special merit back of the request, and only then in a few cases.

In view of the fact that the amount carried by the bill is considerably under that of last year and considerably under the estimate approved by the Bureau of the Budget for this year, I hope the Senate will find that the committee have done a fair job in the interest of reducing Government expenses.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Senate—Office of the Secretary", on page 2, line 22, after the word "Parliamentarian", to strike out "and Journal clerk,", so as to read:

Parliamentarian, $5,000 and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 24, after the word "incumbent" and the semicolon, to insert "Journal clerk, $3,780."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 25, after the word "clerk" and the comma, to strike out "$3,600" and insert "$3,780", so as to read:

Principal clerk, $3,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 6, after the word "librarian" and the comma, to strike out "and" and insert "$3,120", so as to read:

First assistant librarian, $3,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 7, after the word "stationery" and the comma, to strike out "at $3,120 each" and insert "$3,320", so as to read:

Keeper of stationery, $3,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 9, after the word "incumbent" and the comma, to strike out "four" and insert "three"; in the same line, after the word "each" and the comma, to strike out "one at $2,640" and insert "two at $2,640 each, clerk in Disbursing Office, in lieu of position created by resolution of May 12, 1932, $2,400"; and at the end of line 11, to strike out "five" and insert "six", so as to read:

Clerks—one at $3,180, one at $2,880 and $300 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, three at $2,880 each, two at $2,640 each, clerk in Disbursing Office in lieu of position created by resolution of May 12, 1932, $2,400, six at $2,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, after the word "each" and the semicolon, to strike out "two at $2,040 each, two" and insert "three"; in line 13, after the word "each" and the comma, to strike out "four" and insert "three"; in line 14, after the word "laborers" and the dash, to insert "one at $1,740"; and in line 15, after the word "each" and the comma, to strike out "two in Secretary's office, at $1,680 each" and insert "one in Secretary's office, $1,680, one, $1,560", so as to read:

Three at $1,860 each, three at $1,740 each; special officer, $2,460; laborers—one at $1,740, one at $1,620, five at $1,380 each, one in Secretary's office, $1,680, one, $1,560; in all, $136,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, at the end of line 16, to change the total appropriation for salaries in the office of the Secretary of the Senate from $130,500 to $136,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill of what the increases with reference to the office of the Secretary consist. I see they amount to $6,380. What are the increases?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it would be difficult for me to give the Senator exact information as to each of the increases. We originally rejected them in the committee, and there was some thought that we had acted too quickly in the interests of economy; that there were certain employees of long standing who were being underpaid in relation to comparable pay in other Senate offices where the same kind of work was being done and the same hours of work were being put in.

The committee therefore went carefully into each case, and made some moderate adjustments. The pay is not in excess of—in fact, I do not believe it approaches—the pay for similar offices at the other end of the Capitol; and when it was shown to us that the employees in question were doing a type of work for which the pay was not adjusted in keeping with the pay of the same class of work performed elsewhere, we allowed these moderate increases.

Mr. BORAH. Were there any increases of positions?

Mr. TYDINGS. In the office of the Secretary? Yes; I recall that there was one increase in position. I will explain to the Senator what that is, because we had considerable debate about it in the committee.

At present, the parliamentarian is also the journal clerk. He is one of the most efficient men in the whole Capitol. He not only has to keep a series of documents at the desk, but when the calendar is being acted upon very rapidly it is necessary for him at the same time to keep a very comprehensive record. In the House those duties are separated, because it is found to be conducive to accuracy to do so; so we have separated the office of journal clerk from the office of parliamentarian of the Senate. That is the only case in which a new office has been created.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Committee employees", on page 4, line 3, to change the appropriation for salary of assistant clerk to Committee on Appropriations from $4,200 to $4,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, at the end of line 5, to change the total appropriation for committee employees from $503,460 to $504,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper", on page 7, line 23, after the figures "$2,100" and the comma, to strike out "one $2,000, two at $1,800 each" and insert "two at $2,000 each, one $1,800"; on page 8, line 1, after the figures "$1,500" and the semicolon, to insert "assistant doorkeeper, $2,880"; in line 2, after the word "messengers" and the dash, to strike out "one $2,640; four" and insert "three"; in line 3, after the word "doorkeepers" and the comma, to strike out "including one for the minority"; in line 4, after the word "each" and the semicolon, to strike out "twenty-nine" and insert "thirty-one"; in the same line, before the word "for", to strike out "two" and insert "four"; in line 5, after the word "door", to strike out "$2,400" and insert "$2,640"; in line 13, after the word "passage", to strike out "$1,680" and insert "$1,740"; in line 16, after the word "chief" and the comma, to strike out "$2,460" and insert "$2,740"; in line 20, after the word "one" and the comma, to strike out "$1,920" and insert "$2,169"; in line 21, after the word "at" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "$1,320" and insert "$1,380"; in line 22, before the word "at" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "thirty"; and in line 25, after the words "in all", to strike out "$259,664" and insert "$264,704", so as to read:

Salaries: Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, $8,000; two secretaries (one for the majority and one for the minority), at $5,400 each; two assistant secretaries (one for the majority and one for the minority), at $4,320 each; Deputy Sergeant at Arms and storekeeper, $4,800; clerks—one $3,000, one $2,100, two at $2,000 each, one $1,800, one to the secretary for the majority, $1,800; one to the secretary of the minority, $1,800, one $1,500; assistant doorkeeper, $2,880; messengers—three (acting as assistant doorkeepers, at $2,400 each; thirty-one (including four for minority), at $1,740 each; four, at $1,620 each; one at card door, $2,640, and $240 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; two special messengers, at $1,800 each; clerk on journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be selected by the Official Reporters, $3,360; upholsterer and locksmith, $2,400; cabinetmaker, $2,040; three carpenters, at $2,040 each; janitor, $2,400; five skilled laborers, $1,680 each; laborer in charge of private passage, $1,740; three female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring rooms, at $1,500 each; three attendants to women's toilet rooms, Senate Office Building, at $1,500 each; telephone operators—chief, $2,740; fourteen, at $1,560 each; laborer in charge of Senate toilet rooms in old library space, $1,200; press gallery—superintendent, $3,660; assistant superintendent, $2,520; messengers for service to press correspondents—one, $2,160; three at $1,440 each; laborers—three, at $1,380 each; thirty, at $1,260 each; three, at $480 each; special employees—seven, at $1,000 each; twenty-one pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $4 per day each, during the session, $15,204; in all, $264,704.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Library of Congress—Increase of the Library", on page 35, line 13, after the numerals "1939" and the comma, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$110,000", so as to read:

And if any amounts for printing and binding, including the total cost of work produced on the multilith, multigraph, and other similar equipment, are included as a part of any estimates for any other purposes, such amounts shall be set forth in detail in a note immediately following the general estimate for printing and binding: Provided, That the foregoing requirements shall not apply to work to be executed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the committee amendments. The bill is before the Senate and is open to amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, now that the committee amendments have been disposed of, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has an amendment which has received the approval of the committee. It would have been incorporated in the bill, but because we did not think the language was sufficiently exact we asked the Senator from Arizona to perfect the amendment. The committee is unanimously in favor of the amendment about to be offered.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

Section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, shall not prevent adjustments in the established hourly rates of pay of the employees in the Government Printing Office whenever it is determined, as provided by the act approved June 7, 1924, that such established rates were on June 1, 1932, inequitable, unjust, or unfair.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Public Printer appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and stated that there was considerable embarrassment in the operation of the existing law, which requires that if an employee is temporarily transferred to do other work at another hourly rate, his pay must automatically change for the number of hours he is engaged in the other type of labor. The result is that if an employee drawing a lower hourly scale of wages is selected to do, for a short time, work at a higher scale of pay, there is a feeling among the employees that favoritism is shown. The Public Printer indicated that the existing situation is bad for the morale of the Government Printing Office. He further stated that if this amendment should be adopted there would be quite a material saving in the operation of the Government Printing Office.

There appeared before our committee the head of the Typographical Union, Mr. William Field, who said that he spoke for the organized employees in the Government Printing Office, and that they heartily approved such a change in the law.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona if in fact this amendment does not go far beyond what is necessary to accomplish the desired purpose.

As I understand, all that is desired to be acomplished is that a man who is on a regular scale of pay may be transferred temporarily to another position at a different scale of pay without affecting his basic hourly pay. As I caught the phrasing of the amendment, it would give to whoever has the authority to fix wages the power to change the wage scale whenever he thought an injustice was being done.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, let me explain to the Senator from Colorado that the amendment is strictly limited in its scope. A change in the hourly rate of pay can be made only in accordance with the basic law which applies to wages in the Government Printing Office. That law is found in section 40, title 44, of the United States Code, which provides that the Public Printer is authorized to fix the wages of all employees, and if there is any disagreement about the rates of pay, the dispute is to be settled by the Joint Committee on Printing.

I ask to have the section from the code to which I refer printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section is as follows:

40. Employment by Public Printer of employees; pay: The Public Printer may employ, at such rates of wages and salaries, including compensation for night and overtime work, as he may deem for the interest of the Government and just to the persons employed, except as otherwise provided herein, such journeymen, apprentices, laborers, and other persons as may be necessary for the work of the Government Printing Office; but he shall not, at any time, employ more persons than the necessities of the public work may require or more than 200 apprentices at any one time. The minimum pay of all journeymen printers, pressmen, and bookbinders employed in the Government Printing Office shall be at the rate of 90 cents an hour for the time actually employed. Except as hereinbefore provided, the rate of wages, including compensation for night and overtime work, for more than 10 employees of the same occupation shall be determined by a conference between the Public Printer and a committee selected by the trades affected, and the rates and compensation so agreed upon shall become effective upon approval by the Joint Committee on Printing; if the Public Printer and the committee representing any trade fail to agree as to wages, salaries, and compensation either party is hereby granted the right of appeal to the Joint Committee on Printing, and the decision of said committee shall be final; the wages, salaries, and compensation determined as provided herein shall not be subject to change oftener than once a year thereafter. Employees and officers of the Government Printing Office, unless otherwise herein fixed, shall continue to be paid at the rates of wages, salaries, and compensation (including night rate) authorized by law on June 7, 1924, until such time as their wages, salaries, and compensation shall be determined as hereinbefore provided. (Jan. 12, 1895, ch. 23, secs. 39, 47, 50, 28 Stat. 607, 608; June 6, 1900, ch. 791, sec. 1, 31 Stat. 643; Mar. 4, 1909, ch. 299, sec. 1, 35 Stat. 1021, 1024; Aug. 24, 1912, ch. 355, sec. 1, 37 Stat. 482; July 8, 1918, ch. 139, sec. 1, 40 Stat. 836; Aug. 2, 1919, ch. 30, 41 Stat. 72; Feb. 20, 1923, ch. 98, 42 Stat. 1278; June 7, 1924, ch. 354, sec. 1, 43 Stat. 658.)

Mr. ADAMS. But does not the amendment give the Public Printer the power to increase the basic hourly wage, and thus increase the pay?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not think the amendment can be so construed, and there is no intention to change the basic wage rates by its enactment.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it not possible to put in the amendment a specific provision limiting it so that where a man having a definite pay scale is temporarily transferred it shall not affect his hourly rate, either up or down?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not happen to have an extra copy of the amendment. Will the Chair have the amendment restated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be restated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 42, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following words:

Section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, shall not prevent adjustments in the established hourly rates of pay of the employees in the Government Printing Office whenever it is determined, as provided by the act approved June 7, 1924, that such established rates were on June 1, 1932, inequitable, unjust, or unfair.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I somewhat shared the opinion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS]; but after carefully reading over the amendment it seemed to me that if it means what it says, perhaps we would have the safeguard which he desires.

As this is a Senate amendment and calculated to reduce expense, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that if the door is left open as might be supposed from a hasty reading of the amendment, I am sure that in conference the House and Senate conferees, with the full consent of the Senate, will feel at liberty to add such words as will carry out what is known to be the intent of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that I do not read the amendment as tending to operate to reduce expenses. It reads to me as if it would tend inevitably to increase the expenses.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I desire to read the amendment to the Senator, and ask wherein it would be possible to save any money.

The amendment reads:

Section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935 shall not prevent adjustments in the established hourly rates of pay of the employees in the Government Printing Office whenever it is determined, as provided by the act approved June 7, 1924, that such established rates were on June 1, 1932, inequitable, unjust, or unfair.

The Public Printer may change them if he determines that they are inequitable, unjust, or unfair. Manifestly, the only object of this amendment would be to increase and not to decrease compensation. To decrease compensation, the Public Printer would have to determine that the compensation was inequitable, unjust, or unfair to the Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is, in truth and in fact, the condition now. It is inequitable, unjust, and unfair to pay a higher hourly scale of wages for temporary work, whereas the custom in every other Department of the Government is that an employee detailed to perform a service nominally requiring a higher rate of pay, retains his lower rate of pay unless he works for 90 days or more in the higher-paid employment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, would not the Senator agree that under the language used discretion would be left to the Public Printer to increase the salaries?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think that what the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Colorado desire is what the committee wanted in the form of an amendment when they asked the Senator from Arizona to prepare this amendment. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that it is very difficult to interpret the language other than as the Senator from South Carolina at first blush would interpret it; but it has to be read in connection with the entire measure.

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senate is willing to have the conferees perfect the amendment beyond the peradventure of a doubt so as to avoid increasing the salaries, the conferees will endeavor to interpret the Senate action in that regard.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as I understand, what the Senator from Arizona desires to avoid is the bookkeeping incident to adjustments which are now being made, when employees are shifted from one scale to another; but this amendment authorizes the adjustments, the very thing we are trying to avoid.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state the grounds of his point of order.

Mr. BYRNES. I make the point of order on the ground that the amendment is legislation. The only effect of the amendment would be to repeal section 23 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1935.

Mr. HAYDEN. I concede that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senator from Arizona to withdraw the amendment. I think it ought to be in a little more perfect shape, and we can take care of the matter in the deficiency bill, or in some other bill, if it is in the interest of economy.

Mr. HAYDEN. Inasmuch as a point of order has been made, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona withdraws the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to bring another matter to the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee. I notice from a reading of the bill that apparently the committee overlooked two positions under the Senate which are no longer necessary. If the Senator from Maryland will look at page 8, lines 7 and 8, he will find that provision is made for two special messengers at $1,800 each. Those two special messengers were heretofore provided, one for the former Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. Gore, and one for the late Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Schall, both of those Senators being blind. There being no Senators at the present time suffering from blindness, I move to strike out, on lines 7 and 8, the words "two special messengers at $1,800 each."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, while the committee evidently overlooked this matter, because it was in the estimate that came to us we assumed the messengers were for routine work connected with the Senate. In view of what the Senator from Arizona has said, I feel at liberty to state that we gladly accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. In view of the fact that the Senate had adopted the amendment of the Senator from Arizona, it will be necessary that the totals be corrected, and I ask that the clerk be authorized to make the totals conform with the appropriations in view of the amendment just adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I notice that in the item on pages 30 and 31 pertaining to the Botanic Garden, which is under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, the Senate committee retained the amount appropriated by the House. I shall not offer any amendment, but I should like to have an explanation from the Senator from Maryland.

When the former Director of the Botanic Garden resigned, or was retired, instead of appointing a new Director at the salary which the law carried, the joint committee authorized the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. David Lynn, to perform the duties of Superintendent of the Botanic Garden. He has continued for the last 2 years or more to perform those duties without any additional compensation. Of course, that is only a temporary or tentative arrangement; it may be necessary or advisable later to employ a regular Director or Superintendent of the Botanic Garden, which, as the Senator knows, has been greatly improved in recent years.

I wondered whether it was the intention of the committee, by this reduction in the appropriation, to carry the implication that the Architect of the Capitol would be expected to continue to perform these duties, somewhat in the form of ex-officio duties, because of his position at the Capitol, or whether, if the joint committee decided to select a regular superintendent, there would be any way by which the compensation could be paid.

Mr. TYDINGS. It could be taken care of in a deficiency bill. The Architect of the Capitol called this situation to our attention, and made a note in his recommendations that the place was unfilled, and I think he recommended that it should be filled. However, the House committee in its report made this statement:

The total recommended for the Botanic Garden is $101,662, which sum is $13,325 less than the 1937 appropriations and a like amount under the estimates. The appropriation for salaries is reduced by $4,600, being the amount carried for the salary of the Director. For several years the Architect of the Capitol, acting under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, has performed the administrative duties of Director in addition to his other duties and has assigned the active supervisory work to the landscape engineer of his office. The salary of the director has, therefore, not been used, and the committee feels it should be deducted from the appropriations until the need for its reinsertion arises.

The amount for annual maintenance of the conservatory, greenhouses, and the Poplar Point nursery is reduced from $28,725 to $20,000.

It was only in view of the fact that in the hearings and in its report the House committee seemed to have considered this matter, and decided not to make provision this year, the Senate committee, with some degree of reluctance, did not insert the provision in this year's bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the Architect of the Capitol and the Acting Director of the Botanic Garden appeared before the House committee. My information is that he knew nothing about this reduction until the bill had been reported to the House or had passed the House. In the last 2 or 3 years, and since he has been acting as Director, we have reduced the expenses of the Botanic Garden by omitting to fill positions where employees have died or resigned. That has been partly due to the fact that we have ceased congressional distribution of bulbs, shrubs, or seeds, or anything else, out of the Botanic Garden. However, I hope this provision is not to be regarded as settling the question as to whether we shall at any time in the future, when the committee shall consider it advisable, appoint a regular Director of the Botanic Garden.

Mr. TYDINGS. Our action at this time was based on the fact that in the House report the committee of the House singled this matter out without adverse comment. We did not want to insert it in view of the report which I have read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, I think the committee ought to be commended for being able to save this amount by the employment of one of our employees rather than filling the place when it is vacant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCCARRAN, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 4064, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

April 12, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 11, 12, and 13 to the bill (H. R. 4064) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 8 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert: ": Provided further, That no part of the appropriation or of the reappropriation contained in this paragraph shall be used to pay the compensation of any employee of the Social Security Board not appointed pursuant to the civil-service laws and regulations"; and

That the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 5 and 7 to said bill.

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment 8, and also further insist upon Senate amendments numbered 5, 7, and 8.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. I now move that the Senate ask for a further conference with the House on Senate amendments numbered 5, 7, and 8 and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. STEIWER conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference.

NAVAL PETROLEUM AND OIL SHALE RESERVES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 323, being Senate bill 1131, the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves bill.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, at the time of the calling of the calendar on Monday I objected to the consideration of this bill because I did not feel that sufficient explanation had been given of its provisions. At this time I should like to have some disposition made as to the calendar before we take it up piecemeal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is not contemplated that the calendar will be called today except for the consideration of the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts has referred. I hope the Senator from Oregon will therefore not object. The Senate considered the calendar last Monday.

Mr. MCNARY. I suggest that we dispose by unanimous consent of the question of calling the calendar at this time, and proceed to the consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the calendar be dispensed with for today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1131?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1131) to amend the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920, relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the amendments are taken up I should like to make a brief explanation of the bill, which has been requested.

The bill deals with our oil reserves. A brief statement on the subject was made a few days ago when the bill was reached upon the call of the calendar. I then called attention to the fact that under the law of 1920 the Navy Department was entrusted with the conservation, care, control, and protection of our naval reserves. The power given to the Navy at that time was limited to lease making if, in the opinion of the naval authorities, our oil could best be conserved by making leases to those who possessed adjoining acreage of oil lands.

I pointed out the fact that we have four oil reserves. One is in Alaska, so remote from transportation facilities that for the purpose of this legislation it need not be considered. It may, however, some day be of great value.

Another oil reserve is the famous Teapot Dome, which is located in Wyoming, and which, since the investigation of a few years ago, is closed, capped, and the oil that remains there is being conserved. In that reserve there are approximately 17,000,000 barrels of oil.

The other two reserves are of importance in connection with the proposed legislation. They are located in California and are known as naval reserve no. 1 and naval reserve no. 2. They are adjoining each other, and in a moment I shall point out to the Senate the location and the importance of these reserves and some other facts by referring to the map which is placed on the wall in the rear of the Chamber.

Before taking up reserve nos. 1 and 2, I call to the attention of the Senate the fact that there are two shale reserves, one in Colorado and one in Utah over which the Navy has jurisdiction but at the present time no other authority. It is expected that these shale reserves will be of great value after the present known supply of oil in this country is exhausted. A retorting process recently discovered will make it possible to extract oil from shale at about double the cost of present oil production per barrel. The proposed bill turns these shale reserves over to the Navy for conservation and protection. That is one of the new provisions of the bill and is in addition to the authority given to the Navy under the act of 1920.

I shall now turn to the map, because it very clearly explains the situation of these reserves. I am sorry the map is not larger. The irregular black line at the top of the map and the irregular black line at the bottom of the map show the limits of the two reserves. Reserve no. 1 is divided from reserve no. 2 by the black crisscross sectional line. Reserve no. 2 is the acreage below the black line to which I have just referred. Reserve no. 1 is the acreage of land above the black line and reaching up to the line at the top of the map.

Let me talk first about reserve no. 2. The squares marked in blue upon the map are sections 1 mile square in area. The sections marked in blue are Government-owned sections. The sections marked in red or pink are privately owned sections of land of the same size as the Government sections, each being about a square mile in area. Until leases were made in reserve no. 2, all the sections marked in blue were in the possession of the Government and contained valuable oil deposits. The sections marked in red were then owned and are still owned by private companies.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. When did the Government acquire title to the sections designated by the color green?

Mr. WALSH. I am pleased that the Senator has called attention to that subject. There are two sections colored green. One is section no. 36 and the other is section no. 16. They are colored in green to indicate that they are still in litigation. It is expected that the litigation will end satisfactorily to the Government, and that those sections will eventually come back into the possession of the Government. They are patented school sections, and were first conveyed to the State of California, and were in turn conveyed by the State of California to private oil companies. The United States Government is seeking to set aside those conveyances to the State of California on the theory that the land was known to be mineral land or to contain minerals or oil at the time of conveyance, and therefore the conveyances are not valid. They are important sections, and much litigation has resulted in connection with them.

The black marks all over the map indicate where wells have been drilled. In some cases the oil has been exhausted. In other cases it has not been exhausted. In still other cases operations are being carried on.

The blue strip in the northeast corner of the map is a very important strip.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. When did the Government acquire title to its property in reserve no. 1?

Mr. WALSH. It was always public land. By Executive orders in September and December 1912 it was reserved for the Navy and by the act of 1920 it was transferred to the Navy for conservation and protection. I am about to explain concerning the leases.

Mr. McNARY. The sections colored pink are privately owned?

Mr. WALSH. These outside sections are all privately owned.

Mr. McNARY. But are the sections colored pink in reserve no. 1 privately owned?

Mr. WALSH. The sections in reserve no. 1 colored pink are all privately owned, being owned by the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. McNARY. Did the private owners get title to that land from the Government?

Mr. WALSH. They got title to the land indirectly from the Southern Pacific Railroad Co.

Mr. McNARY. Are all the sections colored pink in reserve nos. 1 and 2 owned by the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. WALSH. Not all in no. 2, but all in no. 1 are so owned. I think there are some other interests located in no. 2.

The section colored blue, which I now indicate on the map, is Government land where leases were made because wells had been drilled in the adjoining private land; and in order that the Government should not have its oil drained into private wells, leases were made so as to provide royalties for the oil which would have seeped into the privately owned wells. The number of leases that have been made in reserve no. 1 is four. In reserve no. 2, 20 leases have been made.

The number of wells in reserve no. 1 is 54. The number of wells in reserve no. 2 is 420. All these leases were made since 1920. Had no leases been made in reserve no. 2, the Government would now own all that oil.

I shall now give the Senate the acreage. Reserve no. 1 contains over 38,000 acres. Reserve no. 2 contains over 30,000 acres.

The amount of oil which has been extracted from Government-owned land in reserve no. 2 is over 100,000,000 barrels. The amount of oil that is estimated to remain there is about 50,000,000 barrels. Thus two-thirds of the oil is gone.

The leases are still in operation on reserve no. 2. They are 20-year leases; and, as Senators know, they were made soon after Mr. Fall became Secretary of the Interior. Most of the leases would expire in 1942.

One of the important provisions of this bill is designed to give the Secretary of the Navy authority to terminate the leases in reserve no. 1 at their expiration, if he sees fit to do so. It is claimed that the terms of the leases are such that they can be renewed by the private companies. An act of Congress preventing the renewal of the leases will permit the Secretary of the Navy to terminate the leases at their expiration. That is one of the powers granted by this bill and one of its principal features.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is it very clear that the persons who have leases may not set up a valid claim that provisions are found therein under the terms of which the Government may not cancel or revoke them?

Mr. WALSH. I assume the legal question propounded by the able Senator from Utah is worthy of consideration but, in any event, it will help to strengthen the arm of the authorities of the Government if, by the provisions of this bill, authority is vested in the Secretary of the Navy to terminate the leases. It is the opinion of the Navy Department, and I assume that the Department has given a great deal of thought and attention to the legal question raised by the able Senator—that they can terminate the leases if they choose to do so.

Mr. KING. But we do run the risk of having suits against the Government for alleged damages sustained by reason of the cancelation of leases which the lessees contend to be valid?

Mr. WALSH. I assume there is such a possibility. The enactment of the bill, however, will afford the further advantage that the Government will be able in any new lease it may make to limit the amount of oil which may be extracted. It has already been able to do so under some of the modified leases now extant. That advantage will accrue after the present leases have expired. But, for all practical purposes, reservation no. 2 is gone; it is no longer valuable as a permanent reserve, and all we can do is to collect the money on the oil it produces. Wells have been drilled all over it; the leases are continuing in operation, and so that vast oil reserve is practically of little value except for the royalties which the Government is receiving each year and which have amounted to about $2,000,000 a year on both reserves since the leases were made in 1920. The total amount collected to January 1937 is about 32,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I thought there was a question of fraud entering into these leases in the first instance, was there not? I thought the Government had made some charge of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. I said the other day that, in reviewing the conclusions in the report of the committee which investigated the so-called Fall leases, I was surprised to find there were no recommendations for additional legislation, it apparently being the opinion of the late able Senator from Montana that the Government could not show fraud on the leases in reserve no. 2. The wells here had been in operation for some time before the investigation. However, suits were instituted in the case of sections 16 and 36, and also in the yellow areas on the chart, which represent the Doheny leases, and which have been restored to the Government. All these areas [indicating on chart] were leased at one time by Fall, and all the sections represented on the chart by the yellow coloring are now in possession of the Government as the result of the revocation of those leases. These two sections [indicating on chart] are still in litigation. I am pleased the Senator asked the question, because it enables the point to be brought out that the result of the suits instituted following the investigation has been not only to restore to the possession of the Government the two sections indicated but has also brought about the restoration of the entire acreage marked on the map in yellow from the Pan American Petroleum Co. This valuable asset is the result of the persistent and courageous leadership and public spirit of the late Senator of Montana, Senator Walsh.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the areas in the lower section in green or blue are leased?

Mr. WALSH. The areas colored blue are Government owned, but the black marks indicate wells, showing that the area is all being drilled and that the oil is being extracted from them all. That area is all leased.

Mr. BORAH. The areas marked in blue are Government owned but leased?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. Has there ever been any question raised as to the validity of those leases?

Mr. WALSH. I understand not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Apropos to the question propounded by the Senator from Idaho, I have a rather indistinct recollection of a suit having been instituted by the Government, when Mr. Palmer was Attorney General, for the purpose of reclaiming lands owned by or claimed by a number of persons, including railroads and oil companies. The suits were determined adversely to the claim of the Government; and after a full investigation, my recollection is, by one of the agencies of Congress, the conclusion was reached that the facts presented would not warrant carrying the case to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the decision of the lower court, probably of the circuit court of appeals, became a finality.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct and has made a valuable contribution by his suggestion. Most of the pink sections in both reserve no. 1 and reserve no. 2 represent sections in litigation where cases have been decided against the Government. Some of the yellow-colored sections represent those decided in favor of the Government.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think the case to which the Senator from Utah referred was the case against the Standard Oil Co. of California involving section 36. The question in that case was as to whether it was known mineral land at the time the State of California selected it. That question was not raised, as I recollect, in any of the other cases.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator from Nevada. I should not let the RECORD appear to indicate that a tremendous contribution was not made by the late able Senator from Montana, because, though there was no legislation, suits were instituted and prosecuted which resulted in restoring to the possession of the Government whatever we have in these oil reserves at the present time which, of course, is of tremendous value.

Mr. President, I have said that little legislation can be enacted or little action taken on the part of our Government to save this great reserve no. 2 to our country, except when the present leases expire, if it is wise to do so, to cancel them or to extend them and limit the amount of oil that may be taken out over a long period of time, so that the Government may have a reserve supply of oil. But what our course of action shall be in reference to reserve no. 1 is of tremendous importance. Here is a vast deposit of oil, estimated to be of a value of $600,000,000, or having a known value of that amount. If it is found, as it is expected and hoped, that underneath the present sands there are other oil deposits, such as I understand have been discovered in other parts of California, we will have another oil deposit of equal value to the $600,000,000, making this reserve worth over a billion dollars. We still have hope that in the event of there being a deposit below the present known sands in reserve no. 2 the Government will also have that oil in its possession.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator are there any operating wells owned by the Government on Government property in the area indicated by the blue color in reservation 2? Are there any wells on that Government property?

Mr. WALSH. There are 400 wells in operation, but not Government operation.

Mr. McNARY. That is what I thought; there is no Government operation there.

Mr. WALSH. There is no Government operation there at all.

Mr. McNARY. Then, the Senator is proceeding upon the theory that wells being operated on privately owned property are draining the Government deposits?

Mr. WALSH. The Government property itself has been leased and the oil is being extracted from the Government property on a royalty basis. The authority has been only to lease for conservation purposes. This authority unfortunately was apparently disregarded.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but that is on leased property.

Mr. WALSH. It is on leased property; it is practically all leased.

Mr. McNARY. I did not know that the areas indicated by the blue color on the chart were leased; I thought they were still within the possession and ownership of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. The title of the land is in the possession of the Government; but the black marks indicate areas on leased land where wells have actually been drilled and are in operation under leases made by the Government. The title only is in the Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understood, those areas indicated by blue are all leased?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly, in reserve no. 2.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Originally there were a great many mining claims on reserve no. 2. All the blue sections there were claimed by someone under a mining location, which was the only way one could locate before the enactment of the leasing law. When Mr. Taft, I think in 1909 or 1910, declared that area to be a naval reserve, a question arose as to whether he had authority to do it. Then Congress passed what was called the Pickett Act, which was intended to allow those who had started oil operations on the area indicated by blue in reserve no. 2 to proceed with those operations to patent, provided that they conducted the work diligently and continuously. In a great many cases they did not do this, or, at least, the Government so alleged. Suits were brought to evict them. Then Congress began to try to get a leasing law enacted, a uniform law for the location, acquisition, and development of mining and oil property.

In drawing that bill it was contended before the committee that a great number of those who were then claiming the blue sections in reserve no. 2 were entitled to patents because they had complied with the Pickett Act; that others, while technically not having complied with the Pickett Act, possibly because they had ceased to work for 30 or 60 or 90 days, as the case might be, at least had equities, and so the bill provided for three classes of equities. Under those equities, various of the former claimants on the blue sections were granted leases. That is the reason why the Government is leasing in the blue sections today.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator's observations are very helpful. I had just entered the Senate when the leasing bill was before the Senate, and I recall the very great interest the Senator from Nevada took in that measure. If he did not actually introduce the measure, I know he supported it on the floor. My own study of the question has not gone back of 1921. Therefore, I am very glad to have the previous history, which indicates the reason why there have been some sections in the hands of private owners.

The Navy Department wants authority to engage in negotiations with the Standard Oil Co., who own the pink sections, and to exchange, for example, section 31 for section 34, to exchange section 29 for section 28, to exchange section 19 for section 16, and so forth, with the purpose of having all of the Government's sections united and together, and putting the sections owned by private companies along the boundaries of our reserves. Had this been done in reserve no. 2, instead of the leasing policy, we would now have reserve no. 2 in our possession.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In view of the geological formation in reserve no. 1, to what extent will there be draining of the total deposits by operations on the exchanged sections even though they are on the periphery, so to speak, of the reserve?

Mr. WALSH. My information is that the drainage will extend not more than 1 mile from the privately owned property. The reason why wells have been drilled on the blue section in reserve no. 1 was on the theory that there was drainage from the Government-owned land into the wells owned by private interests adjoining.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They were so-called offset wells to take care of and extract oil which otherwise would have been drained by operations outside of or near the boundary of reserve no. 1. Is not that correct?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUFFY. Does the bill give to the Secretary of the Navy the power to negotiate with reference to exchanges? If there should be some differences, would he have the power to make some adjustments?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; he would have that power. The Navy Department has sought to conduct negotiations already, but the Standard Oil Co. has refused, saying "You have no authority to do it, and we do not know what Congress might do. You must get some official authority before we can negotiate with you."

The Navy Department believes the Standard Oil Co. is willing and perhaps desirous to enter the negotiations, because it is also to their advantage to have their acreage contiguous.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I am in entire sympathy with the suggestion, and approve of it, to give authority to make the exchanges between the Government and the Standard Oil Co., or any other organizations or persons who may own oil lands. I am disturbed, however, over the provisions beginning on page 3 of the bill, which read as follows:

> In the event of the inability of the Secretary of the Navy to make satisfactory exchanges of land or agreements for the conservation of naval petroleum with the private owners of lands or leases within or adjoining naval petroleum reserve no. 1, as provided for in this act—

> he is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President, to acquire such privately owned lands or leases in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 by purchase or condemnation. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

It seems to me that authority is being given to a Federal agency to entail upon the Federal Government a burden of many millions of dollars because, as the Senator knows, and from his statement it is evident, these lands contain large deposits of oil, many millions of barrels of oil of great value, and if we should be compelled to condemn the property containing the oil a burden might be imposed upon the Government amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. WALSH. The provision to which the Senator has referred was inserted in the bill at the request of the House of Representatives when the bill was there in 1930. Personally I am of the opinion that the best thing the Government could do would be to buy out the Standard Oil Co. I personally favor that plan, from the limited information I have been able to obtain in reference to the subject matter. However, the Navy Department does not contemplate that plan, and it is believed that the existence of the proposed power would be very helpful in entering into negotiations. In fact, it is the one thing the Standard Oil Co. does not want; that is, any legislative act giving authority to condemn. I have reached the conclusion that the provision ought to be retained in the bill.

Mr. KING. Of course, the limitations indicated in the last sentence of the Senator would mean really authorizing the Navy to expropriate any of these oil lands and that whatever price they may agree to pay for the same, Congress will make the necessary appropriations. It seems to me it is legislation that is rather dangerous and I shall feel disposed not to vote for the bill only because of that provision, because I heartily approve of the rest of the provisions. I do not like to give such unlimited authority to the Navy without the Congress having a voice in the matter, to expropriate lands which may cost us hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the Navy Department appropriation bill, which passed the Senate recently, was an item setting aside $10,000,000 for protection of oil in oil reserve no. 1. I do not know whether that is to be used for buying other lands or not, but that amount was set aside for protection of oil in reserve no. 1 for the use of the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. I am informed by the expert from the Navy Department that that appropriation will probably not be used, but it is made available so that in the event the Standard Oil Co. proceeds to drill wells in the pink section, we also can drill wells to protect our interests. The information which the expert from the Navy Department gives me is that the appropriation is available for that purpose only, but it is not contemplated that it will be used unless the Standard Oil Co. starts to drill wells.

Mr. FRAZIER. Are there any producing wells in Reserve No. 1?

Mr. WALSH. In the blue section at the end there are 54 producing wells.

Mr. FRAZIER. What is the condition in the pink sections?

Mr. WALSH. Only in section 31 are there producing wells. That section is owned by the Standard Oil Co., and they are not operating the wells. I assume that is because of the litigation in reference to the next section, and because the Standard Oil Co. are disposed to wait for the termination of that litigation before they go ahead.

Mr. FRAZIER. In the other pink sections are there wells in operation?

Mr. WALSH. No; not in any other pink section. This is the only section in which there are producing wells.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment running along these lines?—

That the Navy Department, or such official as deemed most appropriate, is hereby authorized and directed immediately to enter into negotiations for the acquisition of these lands, as well as the others, for the purpose of obtaining title, with a view to acquiring the lands and the oil wells, and to submit to the Congress or to the President the result of the negotiations.

I would also authorize the officials to enter into contracts subject to the approval of the Congress of the United States. I will say very frankly that I do not like to have us commit ourselves to the expenditure of an unlimited sum that may be required where we authorized the purchase of lands without any limitation whatever. I am perfectly willing to authorize the proper officials to enter into negotiations for the acquisition of these lands and the termination of the leases, and to submit the result of their negotiations to Congress in a tentative agreement, so that, if we desire to approve them, we may do so, and then make the necessary appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. I will say again to the Senator that I should be willing, if he desires it, to have the power of eminent domain removed, although I think it would be unfortunate to do so. I should agree with the Senator in all he says if we were sure the power would be exercised. Of course, everything here is subject to the President's approval, and we had an unfortunate experience heretofore with the same reserves; but I can see that it is going to be of great advantage in dealing with the Standard Oil Co. to say, "All right, now; if you do not enter into this deal, we will have eminent domain." The Navy Department itself has not asked for that. It is in this bill because the House committee inserted it in the bill.

Mr. KING. I am willing to follow the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. As I said to the Senator before, I think, there are only seven sections which are owned by the Standard Oil Co., and the number of sections owned by the Government is 49. It would be of great advantage to get rid of the seven.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. POPE. About when do these 20-year leases expire?

Mr. WALSH. In 1941 and 1942.

Mr. POPE. Do the leases contain an option of renewal?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; the lessees claim they have a right to renew them.

Mr. POPE. That is the legal question which the Senator from Utah raised a few minutes ago?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. POPE. This bill, however, attempts to give to the Secretary of the Navy power to terminate the existing leases and to make releases, and then to make certain changes which the bill points out?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

Mr. POPE. Does the bill do anything else besides those two things?

Mr. WALSH. Those two things are the main features of the bill. The bill has a provision that no benefit from any leases heretofore or hereafter made shall extend to foreigners whose governments do not grant reciprocal privileges to citizens of the United States. The bill vests in the Secretary of the Navy necessary administrative authority, and it provides that all revenue accruing under the act shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. POPE. But those two things are the substantial things in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; they are.

Mr. President, I have not any further statement to make in reference to the matter. It is a very important measure from the standpoint of oil conservation. It has been thought out very thoroughly by the Navy Department. Extensive hearings have been held by the Naval Affairs Committee; and we all feel very strongly that steps should be take immediately, especially as the leases are expiring, to retain, as far as humanly possible, all the oil in reserve no. 1.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As I understand, the power of eminent domain referred to in the question asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] could only possibly involve those seven sections. Is that correct?

Mr. WALSH. That is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So we have at least that limitation on the exercise of the power. Is it not the Senator's opinion that in these negotiations it might strengthen the position of the Government tremendously to have that power in the hands of the Navy Department, and is not that the reason why the House incorporated that provision in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Unquestionably. The Senator has stated the situation just as it is and just as the Naval Affairs Committee felt it to be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. One other question, if the Senator please: As I understand, the only authority existing anywhere for the extraction of oil from reserve no. 1 rests in the Navy Department, in the event of operation on privately owned sections in reserve no 1, to drill offset wells in order to protect the Government's interests?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator again has correctly stated the facts.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The bill does not in any way alter that policy, nor does it confer any additional authority upon any department or agency of the Government?

Mr. WALSH. None whatever.

Mr. President, I suggest that we now act upon the committee amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Appropriations have been holding daily sessions, morning and afternoon, during the past 2 weeks, and I have not had an opportunity to read the pending bill or to read the report. I understand that the Senator now proposes to proceed with the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I, then, have an understanding with the Senator that while he is proceeding with the consideration of the amendments I may seek an opportunity to read the bill and the report?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think the Senator will have time to do so, because the consideration of the committee amendments will not take long. Briefly stated, the bill gives authority to the Navy Department to negotiate exchanges of sections of oil lands.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In what States?

Mr. WALSH. Not in the Senator's State. I said earlier that Teapot Dome has been capped, and its operation is a closed incident. The reference is to oil reserve no. 1 in California.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This bill deals with California only?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And the authority granted here is, briefly, an authority to exchange lands?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; to enter into negotiations for the exchange of lands, and then to exchange them with the approval of the President. The officials now have no authority to do anything but lease in the event there is a seepage of oil.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Public Lands Committee was not consulted with respect to the bill?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The bill has been fully considered in the Naval Affairs Committee, and hearings have been held?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; in past years a similar bill was considered by the House Naval Affairs Committee and favorably reported; action was not taken in the House.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. How does the bill provide for the consummation of any exchange?

Mr. WALSH. The bill only provides for opportunity to enter into negotiations, and then to conduct negotiations subject to the approval of the President. It is assumed that the yellow Government-owned sections will be exchanged for pink sections privately owned. In fact, it is thought that the changes will be limited practically to section 31, section 29, and section 19; that these three will be pushed back and take the place of sections 18, 20, and 28.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The object, then, is to consolidate holdings?

Mr. WALSH. So that the Government lands will be contiguous and one whole area, and that the privately owned lands also will be contiguous.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Can the Senator advise me as to whether or not any grazing land is involved in this matter?

Mr. WALSH. It is not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. None of this land is within a grazing reserve under the so-called Taylor Grazing Act?

Mr. WALSH. The expert of the Navy Department informs me that there is none.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So, in the opinion of the Senator, the consideration of this bill at this time will not affect the jurisdiction of any other department?

Mr. WALSH. That is my opinion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments of the Committee on Naval Affairs were, in section 1, page 2, line 10, after the word "otherwise", to insert "such use and operation to be for the protection of the aforesaid reserves or for carrying out the provisions of this act"; on line 17, to strike out "all" and insert "those"; on page 3, line 7, before the word "extraction", to strike out "illegal" and insert "wrongful"; on line 13, after the name "United States", to insert "no contract to sell the oil and gas products thereof, other than royalty oil and gas products"; on page 4, line 8, before the word "submit", to strike out "annually"; on line 9, after the word "law", to insert a colon and "Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report annually to the Congress all purchase and condemnation proceedings entered into under the authority herein granted"; on line 23, to strike out "1936" and insert in lieu thereof "1937"; on page 5, line 1, to strike out "1936" and insert in lieu thereof "1937"; on line 3, after the word "authority", to insert "limited as provided in such plan or lease"; on line 13, to strike out "1936" and insert in lieu thereof "1937"; on line 15, after the word "benefit", to strike out "of" and insert "from"; on line 18, after the word "this", to strike out "act. In", and insert "act, and in"; on line 19, after the words "violation of", to strike out "the foregoing" and insert "any of these"; and on page 6, line 3, after the word "form", to strike out "and upon such blanks", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the part of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes", approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 813), relating to the conservation, care, custody, protection, and operation of the naval petroleum and oil-shale reserves, contained in the paragraph entitled "Investigation of Fuel Oil and Other Fuel", and embodied in the United States Code, title 34, section 524, be amended so as to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Navy is directed to take possession of all properties within the naval petroleum reserves, naval oil-shale reserves, and other naval fuel reserves as are or may become subject to the control and use by the United States for naval purposes; to conserve, develop, use, and operate the same in his discretion, directly or by contract, lease, or otherwise, such use and operation to be for the protection of the aforesaid reserves or for carrying out the provisions of this act; and to use, store, exchange, or sell the oil and gas products thereof, and those from all royalty oil and gas from lands in the naval reserves, for the benefit of the United States, subject to the applicable limitations and restrictions of this act; and to exercise exclusive jurisdiction and control over those lands within the borders of naval petroleum reserves nos. 1 and 2 which are embraced by leases granted pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1920, entitled 'An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain' (41 Stat. 437).

"In order to consolidate and protect the oil lands owned by the Government the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract with owners and lessees of land within or adjoining such reserves for conservation in the ground of oil and gas and for compensation for estimated drainage in lieu of drilling or operating offset wells, and to exchange Government land in naval petroleum reserve no. 1, the right to royalty production from any of the naval petroleum reserves, and the right to any moneys due to the Government as a result of the wrongful extraction of petroleum products from lands within naval petroleum reserve no. 1, for privately owned land or leases within naval petroleum reserve no. 1: Provided, That no lease of any portion of the naval petroleum reserves, no contract to alienate the use, control, or possession thereof from the United States, no contract to sell the oil and gas products thereof, other than royalty oil and gas products, no contract for conservation or for compensation for estimated drainage, and no exchange of any land, any right to royalty production or any right to any moneys as hereinabove authorized shall become effective until approved by the President: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report annually to the Congress all agreements entered into under the authority herein granted.

"In the event of the inability of the Secretary of the Navy to make satisfactory exchanges of land or agreements for the conservation of naval petroleum with the private owners of lands or leases within or adjoining naval petroleum reserve no 1, as provided for in this act, he is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President, to acquire such privately owned lands or leases in naval petroleum reserve no. 1 by purchase or condemnation. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Such sums shall be expended under the direction of the President, who shall submit to the Congress estimates therefor in the manner prescribed by law: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall report annually to the Congress all purchase and condemnation proceedings entered into under the authority herein granted.

"Leases of lands of the United States within the naval petroleum reserves, in existence prior to July 1, 1936, excepting those leases which have become a part of an approved unit or cooperative plan and agreement, shall terminate at the expiration of their initial 20-year periods, and the lands covered by such terminated leases may be re-leased upon such reasonable terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, with the preferential right in the former lessees to leases of the same if and when the lands are re-leased: Provided, That every unit or cooperative plan of development and operation entered into after July 1, 1937, and every lease entered into subsequently to July 1, 1937, with respect to lands owned by the United States within the naval petroleum reserves, shall contain a provision whereby authority limited as provided in such plan or lease is vested in the Secretary of the Navy to alter or modify from time to time in his discretion the rate of prospecting and development on, and the quantity and rate of production from, such lands of the United States under said plan or lease, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Citizens of another country, or corporations controlled by citizens of another country, the laws, customs, or regulations of which deny the privilege of leasing their public lands to citizens or corporations in this country, shall not by contract made subsequently to July 1, 1937, or by stock ownership, holding, or control, acquire or own any interest in or right to any benefit from any lease of land in the naval petroleum, naval oil-shale, or other naval fuel reserves at any time made under the provisions of the Mineral Leasing Act of February 25, 1920, or of this act, and in the event of any violation of any of these provisions, the Secretary of the Navy shall have the right to cancel such lease forthwith.

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to prescribe necessary rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary or proper to accomplish the purposes of this act. All statements, reports, and representations required thereby shall be under oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form as the Secretary of the Navy may require.

"Except as otherwise provided in this act, all moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act, or of the said act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437), from lands within the naval petroleum reserves, naval oil-shale reserves, or other naval fuel reserves on account of the petroleum products extracted therefrom shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts; and any or all oil, gas, gasoline, or other hydrocarbon substances accruing to the United States as royalties from leases of lands within the naval petroleum reserves, the naval oil-shale reserves, or other naval fuel reserves under authority of this act shall be paid for in money or be paid in kind as the Secretary of the Navy may elect.

"Any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes and for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof."

SEC. 2. All acts or parts thereof in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Create in me a clean heart, O God.

We pray, blessed Heavenly Father, that this immortal prayer may voice the longing of every breast. Hear us, for we are poor and needy, but Thou dwellest in eternity and Thy estate is boundless and transcends every measure we have on earth. We praise Thee that Thou dost not move in the narrow sphere of time. Let us listen to that richer and greater wisdom: The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. Almighty God, Thou art ever sounding across the years the law of right and wrong; it is the secret that can harmonize and stabilize the world. May we lay hold on the greatness of God and be clothed with the spirit of the Master. We pray that our people may be patient, and may they live not alone for outward prosperity. Oh, let cooperation prevail among us and our Republic become a song and not a strife—a poem of human brotherhood. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On April 12, 1937:

H. J. Res. 278. Joint resolution to make funds available to carry out the provisions of existing law authorizing the purchase and distribution of products of the fishing industry.

On April 14, 1937:

H. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes", approved July 1, 1902, as amended.

GOLDIE SCAGGS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 186) from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 186

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Goldie Skaggs, widow of J. C. Skaggs, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said J. C. Skaggs.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF SALARIES FOR DECEMBER EACH YEAR

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer House Joint Resolution No. 228, authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December on the 20th day of that month each year, and ask for its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 228

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol Police and Office of Legislative Counsel, and employees paid on vouchers under authority of resolutions, their respective salaries for the month of December on the 20th day of that month, each year, except when the 20th of the month falls on Sunday, in which case the said salaries shall be paid on the 19th of December.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us why it is necessary for this legislation?

Mr. WARREN. Prior to the ratification of the Norris amendment this resolution was passed by each body every year at the December session. I have looked it up and find it was passed for the past 30 years in the December sessions. It has been approved by the Clerk of the House. I may state it is one of the few resolutions that I can bring before the House that does not cost anybody anything. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is to be congratulated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred without amendment in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title: "House Concurrent Resolution 10, concurrent resolution relating to the enrollment of H. R. 4985."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5232) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate further insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 4064) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes", numbered 5, 7 and 8; disagrees to House amendment to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. STEIWER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE ANTILYNCHING BILL

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, for a week or more I tried to get the floor for 15 minutes, and I had quite a time in securing unanimous consent. One of the objectors, after his first objection, came over and sat down beside me. I asked him, "For what reason did you object to my unanimous-consent request?" He said he was fearful that the time taken on Thursday might interfere with the consideration of the antilynching bill. After the request was granted, I stated to the gentleman that if for any reason the 15 minutes that might be granted me for Thursday would interfere with the antilynching bill I would be glad to yield my time to him.

I now yield to my colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. GAVAGAN, for the purpose of taking up the antilynching bill, and I hope I may secure time in the future for my remarks. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] yields back the balance of his time.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1507) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1507, with Mr. O'CONNOR of New York in the chair.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this bill is pernicious. Commendable in its purpose to suppress lynching, which no one condones and against which no one is more bitterly opposed than I, yet the means by which it attempts to eradicate this evil is revolting and shockingly illegal and unconstitutional.

Lynching and mob violence are indefensible, but they are no more indefensible than this bill, which is a reckless, arrogant, and illegal attempt upon the part of the Federal Government to usurp the lawmaking and the law-enforcing powers and agencies of the State governments.

The bill does more than destroy State rights; it completely destroys State sovereignty, and makes the States, including all State and county officers, responsible, not to the State governments of which they are a part, and to which they have sworn allegiance, but responsible to the ukase of Federal officers, Federal courts, and Federal bureaucrats.

The despised force bill of reconstruction days was no more a wanton or reckless disregard of the inherent and exclusive rights of the States than this vicious measure.

In addition to placing State and county officers of State governments, from Governor to constable, under supervision and control of Federal laws and Federal courts and subject to prosecution in Federal courts for acts committed, not in their individual, but in their official capacity as State officers; the bill goes still further in penalizing counties, which are subdivisions of State governments created by the States and which cannot be sued, even in State courts, except by grant of the State, and are in this bill made responsible in civil damages recoverable in Federal courts, in suits brought by Federal district attorneys.

Furthermore, individual citizens who are not officers may be prosecuted in Federal courts, upon the whim and caprice of Federal judges, for violation of State laws.

These recitations of the contents of the bill sound so fantastic and unreasonable where we live under a dual system of government, with State and the Federal Government each being sovereign and supreme in its own sphere, that it would not seem possible that a bill like this would be introduced, much less considered by the Congress of the United States, and in order that my indictment of the bill may be shown as accurate and not exaggerated I propose to analyze the terms of the bill.

WHAT THE BILL DOES

Section 1 defines a "mob" or "riotous assemblage" to mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority of law, to kill or injure any person in the custody of any peace officer.

Section 2 stipulates that if any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State.

Section 3, subdivision (a), makes it a Federal offense for any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual from being so injured or put to death, or any officer of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty of apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person participating in a mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of the State all persons so participating shall be guilty of a felony punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Subdivision (b) further stipulates that any officer of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who has in his custody or control a prisoner and who conspires or confederates with any person who is a member of a mob to injure or put such prisoner to death, or to suffer such prisoner to be taken from his custody shall also be guilty of a felony, and the punishment shall be not less than 5 years nor more than 25 years' imprisonment.

Section 4 provides that when a person is injured or put to death by a mob that the United States district court of that district shall have jurisdiction to try and punish all members of the mob or those who participated therein, provided that the Federal judge finds that the State has failed, neglected, or refused to prosecute such offenders; or that the jurors obtainable for service in the State court are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is a probability that those guilty of the offense would not be punished in the State court, and a failure for more than 30 days after the commission of an offense by a mob to indict the persons guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, is declared sufficient to constitute prima-facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal of the State officers to so act.

Section 5 provides that when a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage, that the county in which such offense is committed shall be liable to the injured person or to his legal representatives, if he should die, in a sum of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as "liquidated" damages, recoverable in a civil action against such county in the United States district court of the judicial district wherein such person is put to the injury or death, the suit to be brought and prosecuted by the United States district attorney, and provides that the judgment may be collected by levy of execution upon any property of the county, or the Federal court may compel payment thereof by mandamus, and any officer of such county or other person who disobeys or fails to comply with any lawful order of the Federal court shall be liable to punishment for contempt and to any other penalty provided by law, and the amount so recovered shall be exempt from all claims by creditors of the deceased.

Section 6 provides that in the event a person is injured or put to death by a mob, and should be transported by the mob from one county to another county during the time intervening between his seizure and his being put to death, the county in which he is seized and also the county in which he is put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the sums provided for in section 5.

This provision is shockingly unjust, for, even though a prisoner was never in the custody of any official of the county, if the mob should execute him in that county, although no citizen of the county participated in his execution, and possibly it occurred at night, the prisoner having been brought into the county when the citizens of that county were asleep and were unaware of it, and the county government not having participated therein, either through its officers or its citizens, the county is nevertheless liable for liquidated damages of from $2,000 to $10,000 merely because the prisoner was slain in that county without their knowledge, without their consent, and without their participation.

It will be observed that all portions of the bill, except section 4, relate not to individuals but to State and county officers.

It has been held, from the great decision in McCullough v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316), decided in 1919, that neither State nor Federal Government can impose any duty or obligation upon each other, because the power to burden or control involves the power to destroy.

The citizens of the United States owe a dual obligation to both the State and Federal Governments, and they may be prosecuted in the Federal courts for the violation of Federal laws, or in the State courts for the violation of State laws, but never before has it been proposed that the Federal Government can take over the prosecution of State laws or State officers in Federal courts.

State officers are created by the laws of the States, elected by the citizens of the States, their duties are prescribed by the laws of the States, and they are responsible alone to the people who elected them.

The State is absolutely supreme and sovereign in all of its functions of government, and it was never contemplated by our Constitution or system of government that they should be responsible to any other sovereignty.

It would be just as legal for the State governments to pass laws making Federal officers amenable and subject to prosecution in State courts for their failure to perform their duty as Federal officers as it is for the Federal Government to undertake to punish State officers in Federal courts for failure to perform what the Federal Government claims to be a neglect in the performance of duties as State officers.

Citizens of the State are amenable to the laws of both the State and Federal Government, but officers of the respective governments, in their official capacities, are amenable only to the government which created them.

The proponents of this measure base their right solely upon the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, which is as follows:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

This amendment was adopted shortly after the close of the Civil War, nearly 70 years ago, and it is significant that no law such as is proposed by this bill has ever been passed by Congress.

A careful reading of this amendment discloses that it is restrictive, and not affirmative. It prohibits the abridging of the rights of citizens, and denies to the States the right to deprive persons of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, but it does not transfer from State sovereignties or State courts to Federal sovereignty and Federal courts the police powers of the States.

Cooley, in his great work on constitutional limitations, and all other legal textbook writers and courts have uniformerly held, since the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, that its adoption did not deprive the States of their police powers, but that such powers were retained in the States, and the Federal Government has no right to usurp the function of the police powers with reference to either the making or the enforcing of State laws.

The only effect of the fourteenth amendment was to nullify any law passed by a State which did abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States, or that deprived any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and any person who felt himself aggrieved by reason of any such law passed by a State, or in the administration of a law passed by the State, had his remedy in appealing to the Federal courts for the protection of those rights guaranteed him under the fourteenth amendment. But no court has ever held that the fourteenth amendment gave the Federal Government the power to pass affirmative legislation to penalize States or State officers in the performance of duties involved in the police powers, and which powers were vested exclusively in the States.

At the time the fourteenth amendment was submitted, an effort was made to submit the amendment in a different form so that Congress should have power to make such laws, and those who favored giving Congress such power proposed to submit the fourteenth amendment in this language:

> Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to secure to citizens of each State all privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several States, and to all persons in the several States, equal protection of the right to life, liberty, and property.

But the amendment in this form was rejected. If the fourteenth amendment had been submitted and adopted in this language, then there would be some ground for the contention that the fourteenth amendment authorized this legislation, but the fact that it was rejected and submitted in a negative form, precludes any color of authority for Congress to pass a law such as is proposed in this bill. And thus it is apparent that at the time the fourteenth amendment was submitted, that it was never intended that it should give the Congress power to pass affirmative laws, usurping the functions of the State government, as is attempted to be done in this bill.

We have Federal laws dealing with many crimes, but they are all based upon the authority conferred upon Congress by the States in the Federal Constitution with reference to interstate transactions.

Kidnaping, for instance, which is just as heinous a crime as lynching, we passed in Congress a law making it a Federal offense; but only in those cases where the victim is transported from one State to another. We have also made it a Federal offense for a criminal to escape from one State to another, or to transport stolen property from one State to another, and the White Slave Act makes it an offense to transport a female for illicit purposes from one State to another, and many kindred offenses; but this is the first time it was ever proposed that Congress should pass a law making it an offense to transport from one county to another.

The tendency has been during the past decade to give more power to the Federal Government with reference to all matters, but this measure goes far beyond any other ever proposed, even in the dark days of reconstruction, when there was bitterness and hatred and ill will prevailing between the sections.

This is a direct attempt to destroy and remove the last vestige of power of a sovereign State to make and enforce its own laws. If this bill becomes a law, then we will no longer have sovereign States, but they will be mere puppets, subservient to the Federal Government. This bill is a death blow to the rights of the States to exist as such, and the Federal Government sets itself up as the guardian and administrator of State governments, State courts, and State officers, and need will no longer exist for the maintenance of State governments.

I have not undertaken to discuss the policy, the wisdom, or the necessity of any legislation dealing with lynching. Each of the States now has ample laws upon this question, and the matter of their enforcement is left to the States.

There is a serious doubt as to the wisdom of this legislation transferring the law-enforcing powers from the State to the Federal Government, even if Congress had the power so to do. Believing, however, as I do, that Congress has no such right, I base my opposition solely upon what I conceive to be the impregnable ground that the Federal Government cannot usurp the functions of the State government. If such can be done, then the State governments are not only doomed but are already dead.

I am opposed to lynch law, but I am also opposed to lynching the Constitution and mobbing the rights of the States. As one who still believes in the dual system of government and in abiding by the oath which I took when I became a Member of this body, to support the Constitution of the United States, I cannot support this measure, and I protest its passage.

The tragedy of the situation is that the bill will be passed, not because a majority believe it to be constitutional, or that Congress has the power to pass it, but because political expediency demands its passage.

God save the Republic from legislation enacted for such a purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, for many years this legislation has been agitated before the Congress, and for an equal number of years I have entertained a very profound conviction about it. I have gone on record in opposition to it a great many times, and have written letters to my constituents in great numbers. I say this not for the purpose of indicating—far from it—that I have an overweening confidence in the infallibility of my judgment but merely to indicate that, whether my judgment be fallible or infallible, my conviction upon this question is very, very deep—so deep that I find myself impelled to separate myself for a moment from many men with whom I have cooperated politically in this Chamber upon numerous occasions.

Every now and then a group of citizens, and sometimes some public officers, or with the connivance of public officers, arise in their passions and violate the laws which they themselves have made. Sometimes the incidents of that sort are horribly distressing. Doubtless every Member of this House was shocked at the news that came to us from Mississippi a couple of days ago. Doubtless an overwhelming majority of the people of Mississippi were shocked at it. It is an incident the like of which has occurred from time to time in various parts of the country. It is an incident the like of which has occurred from time to time throughout the ages, when men, swept off their feet by passion, violate the laws they themselves make.

I have always believed that the people who make the laws—and they do it in good faith and in their sober judgment—must in the last analysis be depended upon to see to it that the laws are obeyed, and that, generally speaking, it is futile for a central power to endeavor to turn its weapons against a people in the hope that they can be compelled to behave. It is far healthier that the processes of education and enlightenment and understanding be urged upon the people of the country to the end that the progress achieved shall be permanent; and I rejoice that up to this point the people of the States and the communities have shown without any doubt whatsoever a growing understanding of the horror of lynching, and by their own attitude toward that crime have achieved a very, very marked reduction in its frequency. I should hope that that tendency would continue and that as we consider this problem we shall brush aside from our minds the hysteria and passion of the moment and have regard for the long future.

It is not my intention to discuss the constitutional problems involved in this bill, but to demonstrate why I believe it to be a futile measure that can never be enforced, that it is a snare and a delusion which will bring disillusionment to multitudes of good people. In attempting to demonstrate this I am going to ask your indulgence while I paint the picture which might very well be presented to our eyes in the event of the enactment of this bill. In order to paint that picture I shall bring it down, to use a colloquial term, "to cases." I live in the county of Livingston, in the State of New York. The county of Livingston is a creature of the State of New York. Its officers are appointed or elected in accordance with the laws of the State of New York. It is a rural county. Let us assume the very, very difficult thing to assume, that a lynching occurs in the county of Livingston and that "it appears", to use the language of this act, that the local officials have failed to protect the victim. Jurisdiction is promptly given to a Federal court, and the officials of that county, of whom it is said that it appears they have failed to exercise due diligence in protecting the victim, may be indicted in a Federal court charged with a crime which is rated as a felony, and if convicted they may be fined up to $5,000 and imprisoned up to 5 years. The bill does not stop with this treatment of county officers, for section 3 reads:

> Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death * * * who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual * * * shall be guilty of a felony.

Under this section it is entirely possible that not merely the sheriff of the county or the deputy sheriffs or the prosecuting attorney may face charges, but even the Governor of New York may face the charge of having failed to exercise the power which he possesses in protecting the individual.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am sure if the gentleman had read the bill he would not have made that statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have read the language. "Any officer or employee of any State * * * who possesses the power", and the Governor of a State does possess the power, in that he may call out the National Guard to protect the life of an individual threatened by a mob. If he fails to do so, or to exercise due diligence, under this statute he may be faced with the charge of being a felon.

I am not stretching this matter beyond the language of the bill, but, however that may be, we find legislation proposed to the effect that the Federal Government may come into a county of a State and on the theory that the officials of the county have failed to enforce State law, imprison the officials. I think this cannot be doubted as an accurate analysis of the bill.

The thing does not stop there. The county in which the crime has been committed shall be held liable to pay liquidated damages to the relatives of the victim in sums varying from $2,000 to $10,000. Under the terms of this bill, the county will be called upon to pay such sum as fixed by a Federal judge.

How is this money to be collected? If the Federal authorities go to the county treasurer and demand of him the sum of $2,000 or $10,000, they will be met with the assertion, which cannot be gainsaid, that the county treasurer has no right, under the laws of the State of New York, to pay over the money. He may pay out money from the county treasury only as the result of appropriations made by the board of supervisors, or in accordance with some special State act. It is assumed the Federal authorities will then go to the board of supervisors and demand of the board an appropriation of $10,000 out of the county treasury to pay the damages. Of course, they will there be met with the assertion, the correctness of which cannot be denied, that the Board of Supervisors of the County of Livingston cannot, under New York State law, appropriate any money out of the county treasury except for purposes made legitimate by New York State law. It is impossible for them to do it under the law. Whereupon, under this bill, the county treasurer and the members of the board of supervisors may be held in contempt of a Federal court. Think of it! Because county officials and the board of supervisors insist upon obeying the laws under which they perform their functions they shall be held in contempt of a Federal court and subject to fine and imprisonment for the contempt. This means, Mr. Chairman, that the Federal Government is going to employ its power to destroy the government of the county. It can tie up the county's governmental machinery with a contempt order, and still the money will not be collected.

The bill then goes on to state the Federal Government, acting through the Federal courts, may levy upon the property of the county in order to get the money. What is the property of the county? There is the courthouse, there is the jail, there is the poorhouse, and perhaps there are one or two other structures owned by the county. The county also owns road-making machinery, which is movable, and I suppose could be seized. The county may have a bank account, which might be seized by Federal officers. The county may own a coal pile, with which it heats the courthouse and the jail. This might be seized. Under this bill the property of the county is to be levied upon by the Federal Government.

Am I overpainting the picture when I say such a thing is fantastic, and can never be enforced? This whole process will die aborning. The instant the Federal Government begins to apply the provisions of this bill, the whole thing will stop. It is unenforcible. It cannot stand the light of day in a single court, for if it be true that the Federal Government can step in and seize the property of a county, imprison its officers, and destroy its government, then, indeed, there is no such thing as a Federal Union of States under the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

The thing about which I protest in this connection is not the motive of the authors or the introducers of the bill. I protest against its utter futility. Its authors and its supporters are leading multitudes of people to believe this will be an effective police measure over the people of the counties. My solemn conviction is that it will fall down before it starts. I hate to see the Congress or any other legislative body pass legislation in the heat of the moment, whatever the motives, which will end up in dissolutionment. We do infinite harm when we legislate in that fashion.

I intimated at the beginning of my remarks my belief that slowly but surely this terrible problem involving lynching is solving itself. I know we are disconcerted at times by news which reaches us, but we ought to be tremendously grateful that such incidents are becoming less and less frequent. I entertain the philosophy, which may seem old-fashioned, that a self-governing people cannot be driven into moral conduct with a bayonet.

I have far more faith in the efficacy of an appeal to the conscience of people. This has been going on in recent years with respect to lynching. More and more communities have learned to abhor it. Public sentiment, even in those parts of the country where it was most frequent, is now piled up against it. Slowly, but surely, it is disappearing. We shall never attain, I suppose, 100 percent of perfection in this government of ours. No democracy has ever attained it, but at this moment we are the best example of democracy in the world, and this is due, in my judgment, almost entirely to the fact that under our form of government we trust the people of the localities to work out their salvation [applause]; that we have not encouraged this turning to Washington and asking Washington to wield a club over the people of the communities. Our march toward law and order has been logical and steady because the people want it so, not because they are regimented into it.

I hope I have an understanding of the exceedingly difficult problems that confront some portions of this country. I do not join in bitter criticism of great regions or great groups of our people. I am distressed as much as the next man, and perhaps more than some people, at the breakdowns that occasionally occur.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. However, I remind you they are sporadic, they are local, and they are diminishing. The disease from which they have been springing is being cured. When it is cured, or brought to a near approach to a complete cure, these sporadic outbreaks will have ceased.

I trust the people who live in these communities, faced with this very difficult problem, and I hope the Congress, neither for political motives nor through a mistaken idea of what kind of country we live in or what kind of government we live under, will not pass legislation repudiating that philosophy which has underlaid to this day the development of American democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who just preceded me seemed to think it would be some sort of reversal of court procedure if a judgment rendered at the hands of 12 jurors provided some means for its collection. I would like to ask him this question: If one of you gentleman should visit the city of St. Louis and should fall into a sewer, you would have to go into the Federal courts to get damages, would you not? The same Federal court would provide you with the same means of collection from the city of St. Louis. Is there anything strange or unusual about this? If any man, at any time, at any place, is entitled to a judgment, after a hearing of the evidence, he is entitled to a means of collecting his judgment. I take no stock in this argument whatever, although it seemed to meet with the applause of some gentlemen.

One other point the gentleman stressed is that because an enlightened conscience and an educated people had gradually deterred the commission of this crime, you need no law. I will ask you what law there is on the statute books, State, Federal, or what not, of which the same thing could not be said. Has not all crime been decreased because of an enlightened conscience and public opinion? Which of the two renders the most good in the deterring of crime, conscience, or the governing power? Why, conscience does most of it. I take no stock in that argument.

The gentleman also laments the fact that the law would subject either one of two counties that may be involved, but the gentleman forgot to tell you that it did not provide for proceedings against both counties or for two remedies, but it provides that one judgment is sufficient. If I were attorney for such a party, I would pitch the suit upon the county where I had the best case. I can conceive of a case where an officer of one county would act in collusion with another by saying, "Go over yonder and get that man and bring him over here and hang him under my protection." In such a case I would pitch my suit in the county where that occurred, but in a case where they had simply stepped over the border line of another county in fleeing from somebody else, I would not subject them to such suit. I also may say here that in a case of a spontaneous outburst of mental anger, when a man has committed some crime, but is never in custody, this law does not apply; and if it did or if it were passed with such a provision, it would never be held constitutional.

There is abundant precedent, in my judgment, for considering this measure constitutional. I used to entertain opinions to the contrary. I have changed them in the past few years. The principal is responsible for the act of his agent. Who is the agent—who is the State—any one person? Put your finger on the State. Every State officer is the State, not the Governor alone, because a constable is the State as much as is the Governor.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. This man must be in the custody of an officer; there must be collusion or failure to perform his duty. In Kentucky we used to have lots of lynchings, but we have not had one in 7 years. We passed a law providing that the Governor could remove the sheriff or a jailer if he failed to exercise due diligence or put up a sham show of resistance.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. That is an instance in our own State where the State law itself has effected the objective sought to be accomplished by this law.

Mr. CREAL. Absolutely.

Mr. MAY. Then why the necessity of this law?

Mr. CREAL. And a Federal law will reach the question. Why do not the States pass a similar law? If they did, perhaps this agitation would not be here. You admit that you are going into the Federal courts and are going to question the acts of Federal officials. Great God, you go into a Federal court now to determine how much you shall pay into a telephone booth or how many pennies you drop into a streetcar slot, under a law passed as a city ordinance. You can go into a Federal court for anything that affects a few dollars and cents, to have due process of law, but they want to deny the Federal court the right to go in to determine the question of whether a man's life was taken legally or illegally.

This is not a question of white and black. Oklahoma has lynched 64 white men and 16 Negroes since 1890. There have been decades where the white men far exceeded the number of Negroes that were lynched.

As a prosecutor for a long time I always felt that if a mob should beat me to a case that such would be a reflection on my ability to proscute and a reflection on the integrity of all officers of the court and the men who might be called as jurors. The whole public has an interest in all cases of this nature and the whole public is entitled to hear and know the facts instead of dealing with hearsay evidence that moves a mob.

I have in my time seen and heard of too many hairbreadth escapes from being a mob victim only to be vindicated and acquitted later to the complete satisfaction of all the public.

Mob violence is rapidly decreasing in the South, and, in my judgment, should there be an increase elsewhere, it will develop in the North and East from violent industrial disturbances.

This law cannot and does not affect a situation where a man was mobbed before he was ever in custody of the officers—no official or county can be proceeded against under this law, for that would be beyond their control.

Since Kentucky officers under Kentucky law might be removed from office by the Governor for failure to use due diligence in protecting a prisoner, I want these officers to have all the protection they can get by deterring people from taking prisoners from them and thus jeopardizing their official positions.

In places where a crime is bad and guilt is positive there is still less use for mobs in the South than anywhere, for that prisoner, in a southern court, before a southern jury, if guilty, would have no more chance to escape punishment than a snowball in hades. Then, if just punishment does come, the only choice is whether it should be by legal methods or illegal ways. As many innocent persons have narrowly escaped mobs it is sufficient warranty to assume that many innocent persons have not escaped mobs.

Statistics show that of all lynchings in 48 years past that only 8 percent were ever accused of rape. They have mobbed them when they have violated no law of the land and where they were not accused of violation of any law.

There may have been a time in pioneer life when courts were few and far away that there was more justification for lynching than now. But with power to call hastily a special term of court for a quick trial there is not one excuse, defense, or reason that can be given to justify.

Why, your boy or mine might unknowingly fall into company with an escaping criminal and be overtaken by a mob, who would hang them both because they had heard that there were two men implicated.

Mobs have lost reason and move swiftly and listen to no explanations. America is the only country in the world where mob custom has tried to become a part of the common law.

It is a bad, dangerous, useless, vicious custom. The people have more faith in their officers, juries, and open trials doing justice than they do in a mob acting on hearsay evidence, often incapable of analyzing evidence, and in no humor to listen to reason.

Where any State officer willingly permits a prisoner to be taken from him and lynched he should be held accountable. That is the kind of cases this bill deals with, and none other. History shows the State does not act, and in a way almost impossible to act, because such procedure would have to be where the crime was committed, and too many connecting influences block action.

Knowing that such will result in such cases is an inducement to commit this violation. But if they were to be taken to a Federal court before a jury not of their county, and know it, they would think twice before action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. I am sorry that I have to disagree with the sentiments expressed by my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I have always entertained a very high regard for him in the long period of years that it has been my proud privilege to know him. We differed politically in the past, and we differ now. Usually he is nothing, if not accurate; but he is not accurate now on this proposed legislation. I requested the gentleman twice this afternoon to yield to a question I desired to ask of him on the very point about which he was speaking. I now call his attention to section 3 of the proposed Gavagan bill. It says there in plain language that any layman can understand—and for the first time in this debate a layman is having his say, for I am not a lawyer, thank Heaven. We had enough legalistic quicksand the day before yesterday, and the debate on long-and-short-haul legislation yesterday, if it never did anything, it did take us out of that quicksand, so that we may be here today to resume this discussion of the antilynching bill.

Section 3 of the proposed bill specifically states:

SEC. 3. (a) Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof having any such individual in his custody, who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual from being so injured or being put to death, or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty of apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person participating in such mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of such State all persons so participating, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Get that point in this law.

I wish I had the power of the lungs of my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE], so that I could make my voice resound against the walls of Congress and penetrate to the people of this country.

Permit me to state in connection with the purpose of this legislation that I am not "district" minded, nor "State" minded, nor "section" minded, but I am nationally minded, having only the best interests of all the people at heart of our great Nation under the protection of the organic law of this country—the Constitution of the United States.

NOT SECTIONAL

I regret exceedingly to note the injection of sectional views in the debate on this bill. It has no place in this discussion at all. I offer as a potential argument against this sectional viewpoint the fact that a distinguished American citizen of this great Nation, a former Member of the United States Senate, and now a Member of the House of Representative, spoke against this bill in the Well of the House today—the Honorable JAMES W. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. WADSWORTH comes from the great Commonwealth of New York, the Empire State of the Union, and that of itself should signify to those raising such futile arguments of the nonsectional viewpoints of this bill. Then again, from the Commonwealth of Kentucky we find at least two distinguished Representatives in this House in favor of antilynching legislation.

Then we go to the State of California, the extreme western section of our country, and we find the same sentiment of the nonsectional type on the merit of this legislation.

I listened very, very attentively to the 50-minute address delivered by our distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee today on this proposition. I was very much impressed with the deep sincerity indicated, not alone in his remarks, but in his proven illustration of the several points he raised in his discussion against this proposed antilynching bill.

CRIME OF LYNCHING

It is pretty difficult to disagree with a gentleman of his keen knowledge of living conditions and the philosophy of life, and I read and agreed with this marvelous expression of opinion against the crime of lynching to the Governor of Mississippi in the newspapers of yesterday.

I have no quarrel with him personally in this matter; and I speak, too, with all due sincerity on the question when I mention the fact that I rose in a polite parliamentary manner and requested the gentleman to yield for a question, which he courteously complied with. Inasmuch as he had stated the States of the South were able to handle their own situation, or words to that effect, I propounded this question to him:

Is the gentleman familiar with the result of the national poll of the sentiment of the people taken during the political campaign last fall by the Institute of Public Opinion?

I could not quite understand what his reply to my question indicated except an evasion. Then I asked:

Will the gentleman yield for another question?

And he courteously granted my request for the second time.

SOUTH FAVORS LEGISLATION, POLL SHOWS

I then asked him:

Does the gentleman know the result of the national poll taken recently by the Institute of Public Opinion on the question of antilynching legislation which indicated that 65 percent of the poll in the South were in favor of antilynching?

To which he replied, "Yes."

In reply to my request that he yield for the third time, he said: "Oh, no, no, no", or words to that effect.

I then pointed out to the illustrious chairman of the powerful and important Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas] that only within the last few months, in fact last January, the report of an exhaustive poll was printed in a great many of the leading newspapers of the country. The question put to the people of the country by the American Institute of Public Opinion was: "Should Congress enact a law which would make lynching a Federal crime?" The results of this poll show the vote to be as follows:

	Yes	No
	Percent	Percent
Nation	70	30
New England	75	25
Middle Atlantic	72	28
East Central	77	23
West Central	70	30
South	65	35
Mountain	65	35
Pacific Coast	59	41
Groups:
Women	75	25
Young persons	77	23
Reliefers	72	28
Farmers	69	31
Small towns	75	25
Urban	70	30

It is noted from these figures, which are no doubt very accurate, that opposition to this legislation is not sectional. The Southern States voted 65 percent in favor of it, against only 35 percent in opposition.

These figures contravert the contentions of the opponents of this antilynching bill.

CRIME NEVER PUNISHED

To my mind the saddest tragedy in mankind is the beautiful legal theories that have been slain by ugly facts brought out in this debate. Now, a fact is just like a birthmark. You may cover it up, but it can never be wiped out. And the facts as published from the record indicate, to wit, 5,105 men and women were the victims of the atrocious crime of lynching. Of this number, 99⅞ percent of the aforesaid lynchings were never punished. There were only eight-tenths of 1 percent that were only slightly punished.

Several opponents of this humane bill submitted certain statistics indicating the gradual decrease in the number of these vicious crimes. While the statements are laudatory they do not indicate a true picture of the situation. I do not believe you can measure human values by the yardstick of a mathematical formula in this discussion. It simply does not cancel.

If we glance down through the corridor of the years to 1882, 54 years ago, and visualize the appalling panorama of brutal lynchings over these years, an unbiased mind would not alone be shocked but mortified and would be compelled by the force of concrete evidence of the merit of the proposed antilynching bill.

May I add in conclusion to the foregoing evidence in this discussion the following strengthening information? When the Seventy-fourth Congress adjourned in 1936, after sidetracking another antilynching bill, known as the Costigan-Wagner Federal antilynching bill, the opposition staged an 8-day filibuster against it notwithstanding the fact that the legislation had a total of 42,000,000 people pledged in its favor.

How, then, can any Member here say that this is not a popular bill? It is my belief that this bill should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is known as the Gavagan antilynching bill. It seeks to place liability upon the State or political subdivision in which a lynching takes place. It also makes every peace officer liable who is charged with and possesses the power or authority as such officer to protect the life or person of the individual put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage. The district court in which the offense is committed is given jurisdiction to try such cases. The county in which the individual is injured or put to death by a mob or as a result of a riot is made liable in damages to the legal representatives of such person in the sum of not less than two nor more than ten thousand dollars damages. And the Federal district courts are given the power to enforce the payment thereof by levying execution upon any property of the county and may compel payment by mandamus or other process. If the person so injured or put to death is transported from one county to another between his seizure and putting to death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is put to death are jointly and severally liable.

This extraordinary authority is claimed by the advocates of the bill under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution on the ground that the State has denied to the person injured or lynched the equal protection of the law, and that his life or liberty was taken without due process of law as guaranteed every citizen by said amendment.

The tenth amendment to the Constitution provides:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

In this amendment we have set forth the doctrine of States' rights, in which so many of us firmly believe. There is no delegation of power in Congress to control the police power of the respective States so long as the States have an organized government performing its function under the Constitution. Any effort by Congress to pass legislation as is proposed in the present antilynching bill is itself lawless and without justification. It is a greater wrong than the one it seeks to correct. It is clearly unconstitutional. We, as Members of the House, have subscribed to an oath to uphold and defend this great charter of liberty. We should not, therefore, violate it. Any effort made to pass legislation of this kind and force it upon the States in an invasion of States' rights. It is an effort to interfere with the police power of the States.

The proposed legislation is in violation of article 4, section 4, of the Constitution, which provides:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union, a republican form of Government and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the legislature, or of the Executive [when the legislature cannot be convened] against domestic violence.

Certainly lynching comes under the head of domestic violence and, according to the Constitution above quoted Federal action should only be taken when the State legislature or Governor makes application for assistance. The Congress of the United States has no jurisdiction until this is done. Mob violence is wholly a State issue. It is the prerogative of the respective States to deal with lynching committed within their boundaries. It is not within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government to dictate to, or interfere with, the local police regulations of the States. Ample statutes have been passed by each State to correct this evil. Congress should not, and does not, have this right. The framers of the Constitution wisely provided against it. No one who opposes this bill seeks to justify lynching or mob violence. It is lawless. It is indefensible.

The peace officers of my State—Tennessee—are diligent in the enforcement of the law against lynching and mob violence, and the taxpayers in many instances have suffered greatly because of the effort of officers of the law to protect their prisoners. In one instance, 2 years ago, in one of the finest sections of the South, the courthouse was burned, largely because the Governor had called the State militia to the scene to protect a Negro from violence. It also resulted in the death of some three or four citizens before order was restored, but the prisoner was protected and regularly tried by the court and jury. I refer to this unfortunate incident only to show how zealous the officers of the law and the people are to administer their own laws in Tennessee. It has been many, many years since a lynching occurred in my State. I know of no reason for the passage of this bill at this time. It will not accomplish the results intended. The fact that the Congress assumes to pass this bill and by so doing, invade the province of State sovereignty and State rights is within itself more lawless than the offense which it seeks to correct. There is no justification for the passage of this bill. It accomplishes nothing. It arouses sectional hatred. It is intended to rebuke the South, the Southern States. And, as a matter of fact, there is today less violations of the law in the South than any other part of our country.

We had better be engaged in passing legislation to outlaw sit-down strikes in America than passing this unconstitutional measure. I am a friend always to the workingman and to labor, and have supported all reasonable measures for their protection since I have been a Member of the House, but I cannot, and do not, defend their so-called right to take possession of the property of their employer and hold possession unlawfully while they dictate a wage scale. It is a well-known fact in law that force or duress vitiates and makes void every contract so entered into. The parties on each side of the agreement must have the right, and do have the right under the law, to exercise their own free will and judgment. This does not obtain when force or undue influence is applied to either side of the agreement. I am anxious to help labor and have supported legislation for collective bargaining, but cannot, and do not, approve lawlessness on the part of either the employer or the employee. Neither do I have any excuse to offer or justification to make, however well-meaning they may be, for any mob or assemblage that undertakes to take the law into their own hands and assume the right to administer it. This is contrary to orderly government, contrary to law, and cannot be justified. Neither can the Congress justify in law their action when and if they pass the present antilynching bill. It is violative of the Constitution and a clear invasion of the rights of the sovereignty of the States.

Each Member of the House has taken an oath to uphold and support the Constitution, and no legislation should be passed which seeks to destroy or undermine the principles of that great document of human freedom. We should be true to ourselves, true to our oath of office, true to our country, and thus reflect credit upon the people who honor us by their support and whose representatives and agents we are. This can best be done by defeating the bill before us, and again asserting in no uncertain terms and recognizing the sacred right of each State to administer its own internal affairs. Let each State enforce its own police regulations. They alone are sovereign and clothed with the right to so do. Let us vindicate by our action in voting against this bill the principle of local self-government and the right of a free people to administer their own laws within the States. This is the basic principle upon which the Democratic Party was founded and has lived to serve mankind throughout the years. It is loved and cherished by all free men. It is the principle for which brave and patriotic soldiers have fought, bled, and died on the field of battle to sustain. It is the principle for which great and good men have stood from the beginning of the history of our Nation to the present. Let us revere the landmarks of the fathers. Let us hand down to future generations this same inalienable right, loved and cherished by all Americans from Jefferson to Roosevelt. Let America continue to bear aloft the torch of freedom and to lead the nations of the earth in the ways of peace, happiness, and freedom. This, in my judgment, is the measure of our responsibility and the debt we owe future generations.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I approach a discussion of this question with a feeling of sadness. I do not and I shall not undertake to discuss it with any feeling of animosity toward my northern brethren, and certainly with none toward the black people of the South. In the beginning of my remarks I wish to resent just one statement that was made by the gentleman from Ohio—that these lynchings are due entirely to our dislike of the Negro. I say here and now that there is no good Negro in the South, wherever he may be, who will not have the love and the protection of his white friends. Let me tell you something—I wish I could talk to you about it: The only funeral oration I ever delivered in my life was over a colored man. He had lived with my father for more than a half a century. After age came upon him, he came to live with me. I did not ask him to do anything. I clothed him, I fed him, and, in fact, I belonged to him; he did not belong to me. Whatever he said I did without argument, without question, because I loved him, because he was honest and courageous; and when the sun set for him behind the western sky there was not a member of my family who did not give him up with the same feeling that we would feel for one of our own. And now I ask some of our northern folks, did you ever have a black mammy, any of you? These boys from the South know what it means. I just say this to you: If you ever had one to raise you and chide you and take charge of you and direct you, one to whom you could go when somebody stepped on your little toes and hurt your heart, so that she might put her loving black arms around you, I say to you, if you never had, then you have never been more than half raised. [Laughter and applause.]

Like the old black mammy that Gov. Bob Taylor used to tell about, who was in charge of some southern child. He told of one little fellow who had broken into the pantry and had gotten into the jam and had it smeared all over his clothes; and when she found him, in a very severe tone of voice, she upbraided him for breaking into Mis' Sallie's jam: "Here you are, you little rascal, all covered with jam, breakin' into that pantry. What in the world am I ever goin' to do with you?" And then as the tears came into his eyes and he came up to her, she put her arms around him and said, "Come here to me, you little rascal. Breakin' into that jam. The first thing anybody knows when you get a little bigger you will be breakin' into Congress."

I know them. Now, Mr. Chairman, I could tell you of others who have been as dear to me. I know. To quote from Whittier's Snowbound:

> And when the sunset gates unbar,
> Shall I not see thee waiting stand,
> And, white against the evening star,
> The welcome of thy beckoning hand?

And they will not all be white arms either. I shall be disappointed if there is not a pair of black arms and hands that will be there waiting, waiting for me. [Applause.]

So do not tell me I have come here in animosity to the Negro. It is our problem. I would not say a word to mar the magnificent speech that was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. His analysis of this bill has been wonderful. Do not inflict it upon us. We will take care of it in my State. Every other State in the South will take care of it. We have already done it. In my own State, in my own town, almost, within the past year were two cases that might have provoked violence, one since this bill was reported, yet our courageous sheriffs went out and took charge of the prisoners, kept them in safety. One of them was tried and the other one will be tried in an orderly way. We have real men in the South who are sheriffs and who represent the law; men who will really lay down their lives.

Just week before last—I will not go into the details of it—one was taken from a small town in my own district, when ordinarily there would have been feeling and animosity; and there was. But he was kept safely.

Let us alone. We will handle this problem. When you read this bill, as the gentleman from New York has read it to you, that an officer of the law in the discharge of his duty trying to protect a prisoner, if a mob shall take him away from him, he shall become a felon. I know you gentlemen do not want to write that on the law books.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. I want to place in the RECORD what we have done in North Carolina. I have before me the statutes. They are not recent. They were passed in 1893 and they provide rigid laws against lynching. Under those laws we have made a most magnificent record.

It has been charged that mobs go unwhipped of justice and that there are no convictions. I want to expose the fallacy of such statements as far as my State is concerned.

My colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] has told you of the action of the late Governor Bickett, of my State, in repelling a mob at our State capitol.

In 1925, in the district of my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], a fiendish outrage was committed. A young white man from New Jersey had been committed to jail charged with criminal assault on a young white woman. Pending the preliminary examination, a mob took him out of jail, carried him out in the country, and horribly mutilated him, and there left him to die. He was a stranger in my State, without friends, without money, and without influence. The State was shocked and stunned and the good name of a great county had been stained.

The forces of the law acted with incredible swiftness under the leadership of the State solicitor, Hon. Donnell Gilliam, a young man of high character and ability. At Raleigh there was a governor of force and stamina, the later Gov. Angus MacLean, who was chairman of the War Finance Corporation during the World War. He immediately ordered a special term of court. Then came confessions, but the leaders of the mob decided to fight it out. At the trial the "yellow press" of the Nation was well represented. They had come down to see a judicial whitewashing.

The men charged with the crime were well known and had large family connections. The majority of them were young men of previous good character who in the heat of passion had surrendered to the mob spirit. The citizenship of the county insisted that the trial should be held there, as they demanded the right to wipe out the blot and stain, and they did it. [Applause.]

The defendants were represented by a brilliant coterie of counsel, including the president of the North Carolina Bar Association, the Democratic State chairman, and many others. Appearing with the solicitor in the prosecution were my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who had just been elected to Congress, and Hon. Angus D. MacLean, who recently resigned as Assistant Solicitor General of the United States.

There were 32 members of the mob, and all 32 were convicted. Sentences were imposed ranging from heavy fines to imprisonment from 1 to 30 years at hard labor.

It was the first instance in America where every single member of a mob was brought to trial and every single member of that mob was convicted. The young man was then tried for his life for criminal assault and was acquitted.

It was one of the most remarkable exhibitions of law enforcement that has even taken place in any court anywhere.

In October of the year 1925 three white women in quick succession were criminally attacked by Negroes. The mob spirit was rampant. The jail was stormed, but the prisoners were protected. The same Governor called out the National Guard and ordered a special term to try both the rapists and the mob. One of the defendants was convicted and electrocuted, while the others in an atmosphere of intense hostility were acquitted by a jury of white men and were safely escorted to their homes under the order of the court. Then the mob was tried for storming the jail, and 20 of them were convicted and given heavy prison sentences.

Sometime after that in the district of my colleague, Mr. BARDEN, a brave superior court judge prevented a lynching during the trial of a case.

These, Mr. Chairman, are just some of the answers that North Carolina hurls at the measure of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], whose bill is an insult and challenge to the sovereignty of every State in the Union.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEAVER. I ask you, with this record, with the South trying to meet her problem, to let us alone. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEAVER] that next to the State of Virginia, North Carolina has the best record in preventing lynching of any of the Southern States.

The gruesome lynching at Duck Hill, Miss., of two colored men taken out of the hands of the sheriff in broad daylight proves the immediate need for a Federal antilynching law.

The victims had just pleaded not guilty when seized by a cowardly and brutal mob of lawless ruffians, armed to the teeth, who tortured and burned the two young Negroes to death by use of a blowtorch. It amounted to a rape of justice, liberty, civil rights, equal rights, human rights, and human lives and of the Constitution itself. Every member of the mob, amounting to 100, who, in definance of the law and the courts, took part in this barbaric abomination should be apprehended, tried, and convicted to long terms in prison.

This is a typical lynching case, and the actual test of the ability of certain Southern States to protect colored citizens from violence is whether the members of the mob are arrested and convicted. If they are, then there is no real need for Federal antilynching legislation, but if not then even the southern Democrats should vote for the bill.

But, judging from past experience, I doubt if the members of this atrocious, bloodthirsty mob will be convicted and imprisoned; only time will tell.

I am unwilling, however, to believe that intelligent, law-abiding southern people have any sympathy with rule by mob violence, torture, or with such bestial acts, and that they must see the need for Federal legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have the opportunity and the privilege to again register my voice in vehement condemnation of the ghastly practice of lynching, and my vote in support of legislation designed to further outlaw this relic of barbarism. An effort has been made to minimize the importance and necessity of this legislation, but I remind you that since this bill was taken up for consideration, only on day before yesterday, in the State of Mississippi two young colored men were mobbed and lynched in a manner which has shocked the conscience of the entire Nation. These two young colored men, whose guilt had not been definitely established, were seized by a mob and put to death by the application of acetylene torches to their naked bodies. In all of the annals of the horrors of the Dark Ages no more brutal, barbarous, cowardly, and inhuman crime is recorded. The history of the Spanish Inquisition, infamous for its acts of sadistic cruelty, does not afford a parallel. And yet scores of other cases in recent years of equal or greater repugnance and atrocity could be recited.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including remarks which I made on the floor of the House on January 10, 1922, when the Dyer antilynching bill was being considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The remarks are as follows:

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am in thorough sympathy with the spirit of the legislation proposed by the measure under consideration. Relief of the nature provided by this bill is absolutely necessary if the nefarious practice of lynching is to be stamped out in this country. It may be that some of the provisions of this measure are subject to criticism and should be amended, but let me remind you, gentlemen of the Congress,. that the lynching disease is so deep-rooted and malignant that it will not yield to ordinary treatment; it requires the scalpel of the surgeon; colorless and teethless legislation will not suffice.

I take it that there is not a man in this Chamber that has the inclination much less the hardihood to attempt to defend, extenuate, or justify the practice of lynching. It is universally condemned, whether committed in the North or in the South. Whether practiced in New England or west of the Mississippi, we all admit that it is a wicked, damnable, diabolical crime, disgraceful of any community in which it may be perpetrated. The mob is a relic of the Dark Ages and is a product of barbarism. It has no eyes nor ears nor conscience. It is blind to justice and deaf to reason and is void of pity or compassion. Vengeance is its sole shibboleth, and in its bloody wake is found the charred and mangled bodies of its unfortunate victims, guilty and innocent alike. Fired by the mob spirit men become veritable maniacs, their "reason flees to brutish beasts", their sense of justice departs, and often crimes are committed too horrible for description or contemplation.

An incident occurred in my own district recently which shows the grim unreasonableness, the absolute recklessness, the utter disregard for justice of the mob, and demonstrates the imperative need for some sort of legislation of this character. A white woman had been assaulted. A poor, illiterate, unfortunate Negro tramp who happened to be in the locality where the dastardly crime was committed was arrested on suspicion and cast in prison. A mob immediately assembled. A cry went up for vengeance. A victim was demanded. Fired by the characteristic spirit of the mob, the jail was stormed, and in the excitement and stress of the hour a score or more of persons, many of whom were innocent bystanders—men, women, and children—were shot, trampled upon, or otherwise injured. The officers of the law successfully resisted and repelled the attack and saved the life of the poor, unfortunate Negro. The excitement of the affair soon subsided, and in less than 10 days the innocence of the Negro was established beyond the peradventure of a doubt, and he was discharged from prison and went his way without further molestation.

We all admit that every means should be provided to protect and safeguard the womanhood of the land. We all agree that the crime of rape is the most hideous and heinous to be found in the criminal catalog. No death could be invented too cruel for the rape fiend. By his foul deed he forfeits every right to any sort of respectable or honorable consideration. Yet in the interest of law and order, yea, in the interest of our boasted civilization, his punishment must be inflicted according to the forms of law, after he has been duly, legally, and constitutionally convicted. The demands of justice may be delayed for a few days, and peradventure some guilty fiend may escape punishment; but, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it were far better that a guilty man escape punishment occasionally than that an innocent man undergo the terrible tortures and ignominy of death at the hands of a cruel and relentless mob. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, does any Member believe that the fear of the mob has ever deterred anyone from the commission of this unspeakable crime? Certainly not. The infernal brute who attacks women is so steeped in degradation and is so void of conscience and soul that neither the noose nor the torch have any terrors for him. I am not influenced in my attitude on this bill out of any consideration whatever for the rapist. I am opposed to the mob because it moves without reason or responsibility, and thus menaces the innocent as well as the guilty. I am opposed to lynching as a matter of principle. I am opposed to it because it is degrading and demoralizing in its very nature; because it is in defiance of law and breeds contempt and disrespect for our governmental institutions; and is, therefore, a species of anarchy.

The committee report accompanying and supporting this bill recites that from 1889 to 1921, 3,377 persons met their death at the hands of a mob in this country. Of the total number thus barbarously murdered, 2,658 were Negroes, 617 were whites, and 2 were Mexicans; and of this number 51 were women and 10 were ex-service men. Thus it appears that the mob neither respects the color nor the sex of its victim. If it were absolutely known that every person lynched was guilty of the crime imputed to him the enormity of the situation would be somewhat reduced, but the verdict of a mob is inexorable and is not subject to appeal or review, and therefore the guilty and the innocent suffer alike.

It is a common impression, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that all Negroes lynched have been charged with a crime against women, but the report of the committee exposes this fallacy. Less than one-third of the persons lynched, both white and black, have been charged with this unspeakable crime.

While I realize that numerous lynchings have occurred in this country which were beyond the power of the civil authorities to prevent, nevertheless, in my candid opinion, a large percent of these outrages would not have happened had the officers charged with the upholding and enforcement of the law performed their full duty.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I cannot. I have not sufficient time.

The fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution guarantees to every citizen the "equal protection of the law", and it is the solemn duty of every officer charged with the responsibility of upholding the law to employ every effort and means to make this provision of the Federal Constitution effective. This bill not only makes those who participate in a mob guilty of a felony but it also makes guilty of a felony any officer—State, county, or municipal, charged with the power or authority to protect the life of any person that may be put to death by a mob—who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all reasonable efforts to prevent such person from being so put to death. Too often, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the officers charged with upholding the law are in sympathy with law violations and merely make a pretense and a mockery of law enforcement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 2 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 2 minutes more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The whole country is sick nigh unto exhaustion with such travesty. The law must be enforced whether good or bad if our institutions shall prevail and our civilization continue. A good law should be enforced for manifest reasons, and only the genuine enforcement of a bad law will develop and expose its viciousness and lead to its repeal. With laws based on simple justice, sound human experience, and the spirit of the teachings of the meek and lowly Nazarene, and with officials with the courage, fidelity, and integrity to enforce them the future safety of our Nation is secure. The individual or community that cannot trust the regular, ordinary governmental agencies and institutions to make good the guaranties of the Republic is sadly lacking in the essential elements of good citizenship. The majesty of the law must be vindicated and upheld, and order must be maintained irrespective of cost or hazard.

Mr. Chairman, the lofty sentiments of the immortal Lincoln are peculiarly apropos today:

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in the legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the Nation."

[Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCREYNOLDS] such time as he may require.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the present bill is fraught with many dangers more far reaching than the unlawful practice which it undertakes to correct.

To my mind there are not many things more horrible than lynching, excepting the character of crime with which most of those who reap this fate are charged. Regardless of the offense, I feel that lynching is not justifiable under any circumstances; not only on the theory that the man guilty of these horrible crimes has met his death, but mob violence strikes at the very safeguard of our laws and administration. When the law is at one time taken in the mob's own hands, even under what some would consider justifiable reasons, immediately this same spirit will at once undertake to destroy the law for even smaller offenses.

No one can be more against lynching than I am, and the abuses of the result of such action, but this bill will destroy State rights if held to be valid, and in my opinion will not add to enforcement of the law against mob violence. It has been effectively demonstrated that the laws in this country cannot be enforced unless they meet with public approval. There has also been demonstrated that when the Federal Government undertakes to step in and be responsible, thus taking away the rights of the States and local courts, that it is invariably left to the Federal courts, without proper cooperation from local authorities.

For the colored race this act would be a step in the wrong direction. In some sections it would create resentment and feeling that would not be to the best interest of that race.

I fear that those who have tried to pass legislation of this kind for many years are guided and controlled by views probably coming from their own section and constituents, and not from that broad experience which might give them a proper insight as to what probably might be the disastrous results of such legislative action.

I am bitterly opposed to this legislation; first, because I think it is clearly unconstitutional; second, because it cannot be effective; and third, because it is not to the best interests of those who might become involved.

It is useless for me to go into the constitutionality of this act, that many times has been discussed on this floor as well as that of the Senate. The most able lawyers in this body for the past 15 years, as well as in the Senate, regardless of politics, have insisted that an act of this kind is clearly unconstitutional, with which opinion I am in thorough accord. For the benefit of the House, I might refer to one of the most able arguments, and which, to a great extent, was the basis of other legal arguments against the constitutionality of acts of this character. In January 1922 you will find that our most brilliant and able lawyer, who was then and is now chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House—I refer to the Honorable HATTON W. SUMNERS of Texas—went into the legal questions very extensively relative to legislation of this character and should convince anyone that this act is clearly unconstitutional. I feel that if the Members of this House would consider the legal arguments there presented, without biased prejudice or interest, they would reach the same conclusions that he reached.

The provisions of this bill are very obnoxious, and especially do I desire to call your attention to sections 5 and 6, which provide that any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representatives of such person for a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages.

In other words, you propose to tax the taxpayers of what might be an innocent county to pay damages to the representative probably of some human wretch.

Section 6 provides that if any person so put to death shall have been transported by such mob or riotous assemblage from one county to another during the time intervening between his seizure and putting to death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the forfeiture herein provided.

In other words, if a mob in one county seizes a prisoner and at the dead hours of night brings him into another county where they have no notice that a crime has been committed, and he is put to death in that county, the people of that county can be punished by damages in the amount of not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000. He may be seized from officers in New York and carried to Florida and put to death in the State of Florida where such State or county authorities have no knowledge of such action. This bill undertakes to make such a county liable. If this is justice, then I do not know what justice means.

I predict the day will come when many of those who are supporting this measure on the floor of this House will see the folly of their way and the great injustice done to the local people when an offense of this character is committed in their own county.

I am frank to say, under present conditions, that it is more likely to occur in other sections of the country than in some of the Southern States, which many of us have the honor to represent.

Of course, I recognize the fact that this bill is going to pass this House regardless of what we may say or do, because you have brought it before the House by a majority of the House. I have every confidence, however, that the Supreme Court of the United States will never sustain the constitutionality of this bill, and which, if sustained, will set a precedent giving the Federal court jurisdiction of any local offenses wherein Congress should pass such legislation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOSER] such time as he may require.

Mr. MOSER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, for some years it was in line with my public duty and privilege as well to represent the strong arm of the Government of the United States in the investigation and prosecution before the Federal courts in various States of persons charged with a violation of Federal law. It is but natural that such experience would engender convictions as to the prosecution of law and trial by jury.

I have colabored with those engaged in the prosecution for violations of the Mann Act and the Volstead Act. Both were noxious laws, designed to prevent practices therein held to be criminal in the enforcement of which the strong arm of government was invoked to stamp out the form of crime therein described by forcing violators to stand in awe of the majesty of the Government of the United States. Both failed in their preconceived purpose and only had the effect of creating contempt for the impotence of the Federal authority to enforce, by the proponents of the measures as well as those guilty of their violation.

I have sought this recognition of the House at this point and moment that my remarks may closely follow that able and masterful discussion by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who is, in my humble opinion, buttressed by experience, absolutely right on this question.

I crave the indulgence of the Committee for my sentimentality in mentioning that my earliest immigrant ancestor came to America 229 years ago last January and chose as his first abode Dutchess County, N. Y., represented in this House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], a proponent of the antilynching bill, but moved on to Livingston County, N. Y., represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], before moving on to Pennsylvania and taking land on a patent from William Penn, which from the date it was set up as a county in 1751 is now Berks County, and which I have the honor of representing in this House.

In all this span of time history available to me and tradition has failed to reveal that a lynching ever occurred. Coincidently, not one resident of the district has communicated to me a desire that I either support or oppose the antilynching bill, trusting rather to the traditional convictions inherited and developed to properly represent them on this measure. I cannot therefore conceive it to be my duty to do any other than vote against this antilynching bill. I cannot say to the law-abiding people who have never resorted to mob violence: "The Government of the United States, through the vote of your Representative in Congress, says you may not do what you have ever disdained to do."

Section 4 of this proposed bill, lines 12 to 17, says:

> A failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict the persons guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall be sufficient to constitute prima-facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal described in the above proviso.

Mr. Chairman, I have investigated cases for the Federal Government that have led to the prosecution of those guilty of crime. In innumerable instances it was not possible to apprehend within a given limit of time. The time I consumed was never restricted. In the investigations that led to the obtaining of evidence on which to apprehend, and on which to convict, frequently many months were necessarily consumed, and at times years, approaching dangerously near the deadline of the statute of limitations—3 years. I cannot under any circumstances vote to make my people liable under such prima-facie evidence amenable to the proviso therein mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to go into further detail concerning my opposition to the various provisions of this bill. All have been adequately covered by others addressing the Committee.

I yield to no one in my love for law and order and respect for constituted authority. I yield to no community, as able to present a better record than my own, on the subject matter of the purpose of this bill. I cannot support a measure that would have the effect to discourage a public official in the performance of his official duties lest he lay himself open to the provisions of this proposed legislation and render himself liable thereunder. In the light of personal experience, this bill, if ever enacted into law, will not have the effect to encourage local authorities to go forth and prosecute it. Its passage and enactment will therefore, in my opinion, have the effect to remove as well as withhold the protection of law now enjoyed by those accused of such crimes that experience has shown lead to lynching.

My vote against this bill will not be an endorsement of lynching, as has been charged from this House floor. It will be a vote of my community, saying to the Federal Government, You failed in the purpose ascribed to the Mann Act, you failed in the purpose ascribed to the Volstead Act, your impotence has proved the utter futility of attempting to police the Nation, you have failed utterly in the matter of enforcing laws requiring policing State lines; now, by the vote of our Member, you shall not attempt to interfere further with the rights of the States by attempting to police county lines for crimes never committed in this law-abiding community.

"Accordingly, all experience hath shewn" it is impossible to regiment, by legislation, the morals and passions of humanity.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have one or two very persuasive reasons for wanting to make a brief statement on this matter.

We do not seem to know these days whether a bill is constitutional or unconstitutional until it is passed on by the Court; we do not know whether it is a law or not until court procedure declares it. I have read both sides of the argument on the constitutional questions involved, which forced me to read again and again the fourteenth amendment. Briefly, the fourteenth amendment provides that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. It further states that Congress shall have the right to enforce the provisions of that amendment. I want to paraphrase that by saying that in any State where the authorities fail to protect life and liberty Congress apparently has the power to enforce the law. That is very convincing to me.

I recognize the futility of this legislation, but as old friends of the colored race the Republican Party are still with you, even though you have almost entirely deserted us. [Laughter.] But I desire to extend my sympathy, and I wish you would page Dr. Stanley High for the moment. This certainly is the beginning of the cleavage begun by those now paying the price of Negro support, as was stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] a few days ago. The Democrats from various large cities were not formerly greatly interested. They stood with the Democrats of the South, but now they have a constituency that they must represent, and they will not only represent them in this matter but other provisions of the fourteenth amendment will soon be considered. It is a beginning of the cleavage. I may say to the gentleman from Chicago that I understand perfectly well that this is only a beginning of his activities, undoubtedly, to have not only protection of life and property but may soon insist on other rights of citizens that seemingly at least have been greatly abridged.

But I know it is largely the problem of the South, and I want to say to my good friend from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] that I fully agree with him. It is their problem. You know how best to solve it. This bill will prove futile. A culprit will not be allowed to get into the hands of the sheriff. This act applies, you know, only after they get into the hands of the sheriff. They will find a way out. [Laughter.] But having the faith of my forefathers and my Republicanism, I certainly will vote for the bill; that is, I have finally salved my conscience as to its constitutionality by simply rephrasing the reading of the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the reason there was included in the bill the provision that it should apply only where a man was under arrest, was to protect the racketeers in other States where they go out and murder innocent people. Under this bill, you see, they can murder or lynch innocent people and the perpetrators would go unpunished.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. RANKIN. This bill applies only to people who are under arrest.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will answer the gentleman. In regard to gangsters, our officers really try to get them.

Mr. RANKIN. Where and when did that start?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this bill deals with a subject of great human interest. There are no questions involving complicating figures or abstract scientific problems. The only question is, has any man the right to take the life of another except by due process of law? If no one man has this right, has a mob or group of men this right? The fifth amendment of the Constitution provides that every man has the right to life. If he forfeits that right he does so because some law so provides, and if a law does so provide, that law or some other law provides how his forfeiture of that right is to be determined and how punished.

There can be no question but that out of the relation of master and slave that once existed in the Southland that there remains yet much of that same spirit. The white masters have by their natural overlording built up a sentiment that shows itself upon the least attempt of the colored man to show equality, even if shown with the finest humility. That feeling of superiority has shown itself in high places so long that those not in high places think that if they can join a lynching party and take the life of some defenseless colored man they are doing the right thing to continue to show to the world that the relation of master and slave still exist. When the southern people clear this prejudice from their hearts and really set their forces to wipe out this disgraceful system of administering the law they will eradicate lynching.

One of the most striking illustrations of this overloading in high places was shown by Chief Justice Taney in the opinion he wrote in the Dred Scott decision. Among other things, he said: "The Negro race is regarded as so far inferior that it has no rights." Further, he said: "The Negro might lawfully and justly be reduced to slavery for the white man's benefit." There is too much of that sentiment remaining yet. If there is not the proper sentiment in the Southern States to support legislation to stamp out the practice of lynching the Federal Government should intercede so as to carry to all American citizens the provisions of the Constitution. When men are being lynched and deprived of their lives without due process of law, in fact without any law and in open defiance of law, we should extend the power of the Federal Government to their protection. I shall vote for this bill with the hope that we may blot this brutal and barbaric practice from our land.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLEGER].

Mr. FLEGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take this opportunity to voice my support of the Gavagan antilynching bill. To me it is one of the most humane pieces of legislation which will be considered by the House during this session. Had this law been in effect sometime ago the horrible example of mob violence which took place several days ago would probably have been averted.

So far all efforts to give protection against mob violence through Federal means have been defeated, not because of any sound reason but because of racial prejudices that unfortunately exist in many of our States. It is difficult to assign any convincing reason why unfortunates who may have incurred the hate of their particular community should be subjected to lawless mob murder. Yet we find in Congress and in various State legislatures organized opposition to the enactment of any antilynching legislation which can be properly enforced. There is one outstanding exception, Virginia. Since the passing of Virginia's protecting law there has been not one lynching to mar the bright record of this State. Contrast this with another of the Southern States. The double lynching which took place 2 days ago is an example of uncontrolled mob violence. The newspapers tell how two colored men were tortured and lynched by a mob of over 100 white men near Duck Hill, Miss., after they had pleaded innocent in court to a charge of murdering a white man. A third colored man suspected by the mob of complicity in the slaying of a country storekeeper was severely whipped and run out of the county after narrowly escaping the same fate of the other two Negroes. One man was tied to a tree and tortured slowly to death by flames applied to his body by a blow torch. Another man was shot by members of the mob and his body burned. This, ladies and gentlemen, was not in the days of the catacombs; it occurred in a civilized country—our country—in April 1937.

The proponents and sponsors of this bill are not trying to give protection to criminals. They do, however, seek to protect those who in many instances have been innocent of any crime, yet, because of mob rule, have suffered the tortures inflicted by the mob without justification. A good example of this occurred in the past few days in the whipping of the innocent Negro bystander.

The conviction of innocent people is not uncommon. A good illustration of it centers around a case in the State of Ohio, wherein the accused being of Negro race was convicted and incarcerated in the State penitentiary for a crime of which he was innocent, and for which he was subsequently proven innocent through the confession of the guilty person. Had this man been living in the community where the lynching took place several days ago, it would undoubtedly have resulted in his death at the hands of the mob without giving him the benefit of a trial, which has been guaranteed to all citizens of the United States.

The fault, as I see it, lies with the public officials who condone such atrocities. Why is it that Virginia and the Northern States are free from this type of crime? The answer is in the proper enforcement of laws by public officials.

The present bill which we are now considering has the endorsement and the support not only of the 15,000,000 Negroes of the United States, who are praying for its passage, but from practically every organization that is interested in law and order and in the general welfare of the public.

There is nothing in this bill that in any way endangers honest public officials who are willing to do their duty as they have sworn to do it. There is nothing that in any way endangers the liberty and freedom of any individual who respects the laws of the United States.

We have had many instances in the past years where local and State governments have been powerless to cope with outbreakings of mob violence. We have had many instances where innocent victims have been cruelly tortured and murdered before any court of justice had an opportunity to pass upon the guilt or innocence of the accused.

No right-thinking American citizen should deny to any other citizen the right of a fair and impartial trial by a jury of his peers. This bill makes it possible for the Federal Government to step in where local governments and public officials condone such violence or willfully fail in the suppression of these crimes. It removes the enforcement from political influences and gives assurance of respect for law and order. It should be passed unanimously without delay. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA].

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I arise in support of the antilynching bill sponsored by my colleague from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN].

After listening to the arguments on Monday against the resolution to discharge the Committee on Rules and on Tuesday against the bill proper, it seems to me that the opponents of this legislation are trying to raise a smoke screen so as to hide the real issue that is involved in this measure.

The real issue involved in this proposed antilynching legislation is whether the wanton, brutal, cowardly, and deliberate murder and torture of colored people by lawless mobs shall continue to go unpunished, or whether the constitutional provisions that they shall not be deprived of their right to live without due process of law shall prevail.

The opponents, in trying to scuttle this measure, argue that it is unconstitutional and that we as Members of Congress have no right to legislate against the continuing of this butchery of human beings, which has been a blot on the escutcheon of this great Nation since its birth.

Truly the gentlemen that are now interposing these arguments cannot be serious in their contention, for if they are right then all of our labors as Members of this great deliberative body are but idle gestures. Of what use would it be to the 125,000,000 people in the United States for us to legislate for their material well-being if we have not the power to pass laws protecting their lives, the one thing most essential to them if they are to enjoy the benefits of our legislative efforts? While I agree that the right to protect persons in their lives lies originally with the States, nevertheless I am in full accord with the supporters of this bill that Congress has the right and the power to legislate on this subject once it is satisfied that the States have been derelict in their duty, as in the present case.

Mr. Chairman, many of the States have failed to protect the lives of colored persons from the rapacity of bloodthirsty mobs. They stand indicted on their own record of dismal failure to punish the perpetrators of these atrocities. In the face of thousands of lynchings which have taken place up to a few days ago and the small percentage of convictions obtained against the participants of this mob rule, what credence can be given to the statements made by the opposition that there is no need for passing this bill, and that the States can very well take care of this most serious problem?

If the States that now object to antilynching legislation by Congress have been unable to wipe out this horrible form of crime up to now, why must we wait until more human beings are slaughtered and tortured to death before taking this much-needed step? Let us do it now, and let the passage of this bill serve as notice to all concerned that hereafter punishment will be meted out for this particular crime.

Mr. Chairman, the crime of lynching is not committed behind closed doors but out in the open. In many cases before the crime is perpetrated, practically every man, woman, and child in the community knows about it. In some cases its gruesomeness has been so spectacular as to attract the attention of practically the whole countryside. Do the gentlemen who oppose this bill, and who stand before this House today imploring us to do nothing about this most abhorrent situation, really want us to believe that under such circumstances, with hundreds—yes, thousands—of witnesses present, that no indictments nor convictions could be had?

I may be credulous, but I am not so gullible as to believe that if the constituted authorities, from the Governors down to the prosecutors, in the States where mob rule has run rampant, were sincere in their efforts to apprehend and to punish the persons guilty of these atrocities, that the convictions obtained would not have been far greater than what they actually are. Besides, a greater number of convictions, coupled with severe punishment of the guilty, would have acted as a strong deterrent to persons who are inclined to take the law into their own hands at the least provocation.

The burning and killing at Duck Hill, Miss., the other day of two Negroes, and the beating up and torturing of a third Negro, who was innocent and had nothing to do with the crime, since he was let go, is a glaring example of the fact that no provocation is necessary to start lawless mobs on a rampage of torture and murder. From the newspaper reports it appears that the crime was committed as far back as December of last year, with more than ample time intervening to have cooled the hottest heads, and that the prisoners were in the custody of the law at the time they were seized by the mob. What reason or excuse did this mob have for taking the action which it did? None whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, it is a well known fact that lynchings are not the result of the actions of relatives of the injured party, but rather the work of outsiders whose desire to kill and torture in cold blood is ever present and encouraged by the thought that they are immune from punishment for this sort of crime.

The ridiculously small percentage of convictions for the crime of lynching is more than ample proof that as long as the perpetrators of these inhuman and lawless acts continue to remain unpunished, that this type of crime will continue to be a scourge upon the fair name of our country and a horror to the people of the colored race, who, unfortunately, have been the greatest sufferers from this form of atrocity. Since many States have shown an apathy toward punishing this type of criminal, then I, for one, am in favor of placing the enforcement of the law against such crimes in the hands of the Federal Government, under whose Constitution all of us, both white and colored, first derived our inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

In conclusion I wish to take exception to the statement of the gentleman from Alabama that those of us who are supporting this bill are ourselves guilty of mob action. This distortion of the efforts and ideals of millions of men and women, who are supporting this antilynching legislation, makes us more determined than ever to put a stop to this modern form of barbarism, which has no place in our present society and which cannot and must not be condoned under any circumstances. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I think I realize, as does each and every other Member of this House, that what I may say, or anyone else may say, on the question before us will have little influence upon the vote that is cast on this bill.

It is rather interesting that those who are opposed to the bill, generally speaking, give as their reason or excuse for opposing this measure, the ground of its being unconstitutional, and particularly in violation of the fourteenth amendment. We have during the past 2 or 3 days heard a great deal said about State's rights and their protection. I think I appreciate the earnest effort, wherever it is earnest on the part of the Members of this House in the discussion of this bill, to want to protect the rights of the States. I hope we shall be as earnest as to human rights. I have a profound respect for those Members who vote against the bill on the ground that in their opinions humanity will be better served and progress will move further if the measure is defeated by the Congress of the United States. Those persons who take such a position fairly and honestly on this question, I say, are to be commended.

But those of us who vote against it and use as an excuse, rather than a reason, that it is unconstitutional, then we are not doing our full duty as Members of this Congress.

I believe it has been plainly shown from the facts and figures which have been presented to this Congress that the States have failed in their obligation in the protection of humanity when we find that during the last 50 years more than 5,000 persons have lost their lives by mob violence. It is a disgrace, a crime, and a black spot upon the face of humanity when we are faced with a situation that proves the States and the people of the communities of the States have failed in their obligation to protect the rights of human life.

And I realize that we have not protected the interests of human lives in other respects. It is true that where murders are committed and the accused brought to trial that in many cases proper punishment is not meted out where it should be. But when we are met face to face with figures which show that during the last 50 years in 99 percent of the cases where lynchings have occurred—those who have committed this infamous crime have been permitted to go scot free—it behooves us as Americans to do something about it, and to do it now.

In the past few days we have spent a lot of time defending a constitution that provides that the enunciation of it, among other things, is to provide for the common defense, to promote the general welfare, and to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity.

I am not going to discuss with you the question of the constitutionality of this proposed measure, except to say that this same question was debated when the famous Lindbergh Act was enacted into law. This same question was debated and discussed vehemently when the so-called Mann Act was passed by this Congress.

And so I say that if we could lay aside our bias and our prejudice—and I realize it is practically impossible—we would take a different view of this legislation as it faces us this afternoon. The Negro has made progress in the advancement of civilization far more than could have been expected of him during the past 75 years; and while we give a great amount of credit to the Negro for lifting himself by his own boot straps, so to speak, yet we must give an immense amount of credit to a great many white people with whom he has been associated and who have made a special effort to assist him in the progress he has made.

So, this afternoon, the colored man of the South and of the North, and of the East, and of the West is asking for the same protection and the same right to which every human being living within the confines of the United States is entitled, and that is a fair and impartial trial and equal protection under the law. We have confused too many times during the heat of this discussion the subject of murder with that of lynching. They are not comparable. Murder is committed by an individual or individuals, who are, if apprehended, brought to trial. Lynching is committed by citizens of a community who flaunt the law, and take the law into their own hands for the purpose of meting out punishment against individuals, with the desire in their hearts that such individual shall not have or be entitled to a fair trial.

I believe that if you are opposed to mob violence, if you are opposed to savagery, and of bloodthirsty brutality on the part of enraged human beings who presume to flaunt the law by inflicting the ugliest tortures of death that human minds can conceive, if you think that every citizen in this great country of ours, regardless of race, creed, or color, is entitled to the same protection under the law, then I believe you will support this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I hope we will be able to consider this important item of legislation from the standpoint of its merits. It is not to be expected there will not be, in the nature of things, some consideration of political interest and some consideration of sectional attitude. We can only do our best to examine this question upon its merits.

FAR-REACHING EXTENSION OF FEDERAL POWER OVER THE STATES PROPOSED BY THIS BILL—NOT RESPECTFUL COOPERATION WITH THE STATES

This, Mr. Chairman, is the most far-reaching item of legislation, everything considered, which has been proposed in this country within a century. It is entirely different from the ordinary extension of Federal power, which is extended into a State in an attitude of respectful cooperation with the agencies of that State. This is a power given to the Federal Government to prosecute a State in the criminal courts.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is correct in his statement as to what is meant by the provisions of this bill, will you vote to give the Federal Government power to prosecute the Governor of your State if he does not call out the militia when some Federal official thinks he should?

Do not believe for 1 minute you can establish this sort of power in the Federal Government as against the States of the South—and that is what you are seeking to do under this bill today—and that the day will not come in our Government's life when the Federal power will be sent against your States with the same sort of overlordship. The question before statesmen today is whether or not you want to establish this power proposed in this bill as a part of the governmental policy of this Nation.

In 1922 I discussed the constitutionality of the Dyer antilynching bill. It was similar to this bill. I had in mind until a few moments ago to do a similar thing with regard to this bill. I have changed my mind. I am going to go deeper. That document over in the Congressional Library is not the Constitution of this Nation. It is a body of organic law adopted by the people. However, beneath that document, beneath its words, is the Constitution of a living government. I want to discuss it today in relation to this bill.

AT VARIANCE WITH FUNDAMENTAL NATURE OF OUR GOVERNMENT

Our Government by its nature is built upon the people. Our real Constitution is a living thing. It is rooted in the governmental concepts of the people. Unless it is sustained by their governmental capacity, it fails. If this Government of the people fail in this country, as in all other countries where such a thing occurs, government will resort to its only other alternative, a dictator. By its nature our Government is pyramidal in its shape. It starts with the individual and builds up through the community, up through the States, to the capstone, which is the Federal Government. By its nature—I mean by the nature God Almighty gave it—it functions from the bottom upward. We are trying to reverse the natural direction of its operation. It cannot be done. Neither can we stand this pyramid on its point. The members who sat in the Constitutional Convention did not try to do it. Of course, they did not write the Constitution in a creative sense. It came through the ages, every provision originating out of necessity, tested and developed by experience among a people peculiarly gifted with the genius of self-government. No political philosopher suggested its provisions. No convention fashioned them.

I do not at this moment distinguish between the written and the basic Constitution. Back in the Germanic forests in the first century, Tacitus looked in upon the people who afterward were known as the Angles and the Saxons. He saw the people gathered together to attend to the business of government. A leader submitted a proposition to them. If those people, the Anglo-Saxons, people like you and I, approved the proposition, they brandished their weapons. If they disapproved, they murmured, and that was the end of it. They, the people, spoke the voice of government. It was the voice of authority not from the top downward. It was from the bottom upward.

You cannot make a government of a free people, our sort of government, function from the top downward. Nature has fixed that as certainly as it has fixed the laws of our own bodies. We cannot violate these laws and escape punishment. With our eyes open, warned by all the lessons of experience, we propose the violation of this fundamental law today.

You cannot establish a great governmental overlord here in Washington, place the hand of superior authority above the voice of the elected representatives of the people, and perpetuate this system of government. It cannot be done. Yet today you are going to take the farthest step in that direction which has been taken in the centuries. Why? Let any statesman answer why. If there ever was a time in the history of this Nation when we needed to turn in the other direction, it is now. [Applause.]

When we began this administration, due to economic conditions, that fascinatingly interesting thing which has often happened in Anglo-Saxon governmental history occurred.

Sensing a crisis requiring a greater strength and a quicker pick-up than our institutions functioning normally afford, we concentrated in the Central Government emergency powers to deal with an emergency situation.

Do not ask me questions for a while, please. Give me your ears and your minds. I do not need your mouths. I have too much mouth now myself. Lend me your ears and your brains. I need them both. When I get through here I will give you back your ears; and if I forget and keep your brains, I will not have any too much anyhow. A lot of you fellows would never miss them, and your friends would never notice the difference. [Laughter.]

CHALLENGE TO STATESMEN

Statesmen of America, sitting in this Chamber at the high peak of human history, when you are challenged to be the greatest statesmen that ever walked the earth, what are you fixing to do to this governmental structure of ours? What are you fixing to do today, statesmen of America, against the fundamental nature of our Government? You are trying to reverse the natural direction of governmental operation. You are giving power to the Federal Government to lay its hands in coercion upon the Governor of your State and upon the officers of your State, upon the sovereign States themselves, to hale them before a Federal court and put them in stripes if perchance they fail to obey the mandate of the Federal Government with regard to procedure in the discharge of their State governmental duties.

Do you think you can establish that sort of thing in this matter as a part of the law and policy of the land, and turn back? Do you think you can make this system of government of ours function from the top downward? God Almighty has written in His great economy that you cannot do it. There is no king, no hereditary nobility to govern. There is no governor but the people. This Government is not resident in Washington. This Government is resident out in your States, among your people.

God Almighty in His knowledge and wisdom has devised the plan of teaching people how to do a thing by having them to do it. No people ever preserved the power of self-government except by exercising that power. They must govern or they lose the power to govern. That is fixed by a law of Nature universal in its application.

PRICE OF ECONOMIC RECOVERY

When this administration came into power all over the country we recognized instinctively the existence of this crisis which I spoke of; that it required a quicker pick-up and a stronger power than Anglo-Saxon institutions ordinarily afford. We made the Central Government strong by moving away from the people many of their accustomed governmental duties. That has made more necessary that all duties not associated with economic recovery falling within the governmental capacity of the people be left in the smaller governmental units where the people by doing them may give some exercise to their governmental muscles.

Let no man in America underestimate what that shift of governmental responsibility is costing us. We had to do it, I agree, but let nobody underestimate what it is costing us in self-confidence, in self-reliance, in determination of a people to work out their own problems, get to themselves thereby the ability to work out the bigger problems of tomorrow. In such a time, in such a situation, you bring in this monstrous governmental proposition that has no connection with economic problems, at a time when we need to send our people back to the discharge of their governmental responsibilities; at a time when they must assume greater duties of government or surrender the opportunity to be free.

NECESSITY FOR PEOPLE TO GOVERN

We have no foolproof system of government. Governments are subject to the laws of cause and effect.

No people ever were able to preserve their liberty who lost the ability to operate a system of free government. No people were ever able to preserve that ability or any other ability except by continuing to use it. [Applause.]

I challenge the history of the ages for an exception. No people in all the history of the ages ever were able to operate a system of self-government who lost the ability to govern. Write it down, statesmen, today. Whoever, after the formative period of a government is finished, moves away from the people the necessity to govern, moves against the best interests of his government. All true progress after that time is in that direction which moves the opportunity and the necessity to govern closer and closer to the people.

Now, what is the excuse for this bill? I will not say it is political. I am glad we did not have to vote yesterday. I felt pretty mad about that lynching in Mississippi, and I sent them a red-hot telegram. I believe if we had voted yesterday I might have joined your mob to lynch the Constitution as you are proposing to do today. I had the mob spirit pretty high in me yesterday.

Why are you going to do this? Does anybody underestimate the importance of what we are going to do? It is a major thing. We are a nation now. The States have grown together by natural processes at the points of physical and governmental contact. We are a nation, created such not by the Constitution. It never constituted either the fact or strength of union. It was as the tape of the horticulturist, holding the parts together until Nature could tie in the fibers of union.

All true progress in this Nation from now on has to be in that direction which puts the necessity of government and the power of government closer and closer to the people. This bill moves it away. This bill interferes with the development of community responsibility and capacity to prevent lynching.

LYNCHINGS REDUCED—NO OTHER CRIME CAN SHOW SUCH REDUCTION

I come from the South, and I speak advisedly about this thing. We do not want the necessity to govern in this matter taken from us. Is it because we want to see these poor people lynched? No. We know that only the communities can protect. We know that public sentiment, public purpose, and public capacity of the communities of the right sort is rapidly developing under the fact of exclusive responsibility. We come here and appeal to you of the other States not to interfere with that development.

We live in a peculiarly difficult situation with two dissimilar races living together, trying an experiment that has never succeeded in the history of the ages. It is a difficult situation, a dangerous situation, a delicate situation, and we know better how to handle it than you do. We know the probable effect of this invasion of the States, directing their official personnel under threats of Federal punishment. We come here and ask you to give us a chance to finish this work.

Are we making progress which justifies that request? Here are the lynchings [indicating on chart] from 1882 to 1892, inclusive; there was an average of one lynching for each 380,000 people; and here is the period of the next 11 years, 1893 to 1903, inclusive, one lynching for each 555,000 population. Here is the next 11 years, 1904 to 1914, inclusive, one lynching for each 1,308,000 population. Here is the next period, 1915 to 1925, one lynching per 2,129,000 population. The next period, 1926 to 1936, inclusive, one lynching per 7,488,000 population. During last year there was one lynching per 15,000,000 population.

Are you honest about this thing? Do you want to see lynching stopped in America? I would be willing to make the proposition to any Member on the floor of this House that I would be willing to vote for this bill if you could point to a single major crime in America that has been reduced as rapidly as this crime of lynching. [Applause.]

I did not want to be interrupted, but I yield now, and I want the RECORD to show that I yield and no Member accepts.

This is the record between 1892 and last year. On a basis of population the number of lynchings in this country were reduced over 5,000 percent. (I mean on a population basis there were over 50 times more lynchings in 1892 than in 1936, over 5,000 percent more.) You do not give us any encouragement for this. I have seen in my own city the sheriff put up machine guns and shoot down the mob. Do we hear anybody say anything about that? You point to 5,000 who have been lynched, but do you tell the people the truth—that last year there were only nine; as a matter of fact, eight? Why is it you want to say things like that, which appear in the papers and are uttered on this floor, about us of the South?

GIVE US A CHANCE TO FINISH THE JOB

We have the same sort of spirit you have. We are men of the same blood. Why do you do it? We have reduced lynching 5,000 percent and we can finish the job. We know how to do the job. We can say things to our people you cannot say, just as you can say things to your people that we could not say. I can talk to the people of Texas. I am a southern man and I can talk to the Governor of Mississippi. Human nature is the same everywhere. Why do you not leave us alone and see what we can do about it? I put it to you, man to man; why do you not give us a chance? What would you think if you had some major problem in your country that your people had been working on for many, many years, and we of the South and the West would get together and come up there, over your protest, when you had said, "Boys, stay out; we have a bad situation; we have a difficult situation; we have a dangerous situation, and we know more about it than you do. Stay out; for God's sake stay out, and see if we cannot stop it." How would you like it? Do you think our coming would help you?

What would you think if we came in there over your protest because we had the major number of votes, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and did what you are proposing to do to us today? You can do this thing to us today; but as the God of justice reigns in the heavens, there will come a day when the law of retribution will send somebody to do a like thing to you. You are establishing this power of the Federal Government going into sovereign States, and of the United States marshal laying his hand upon the governor of a State, charging him with some violation of Federal law in dealing with the people who elected him to office. Do you think that you can establish that principle and power in the Federal Government and not have that thing come home to plague and bedevil the people who do it?

We are standing at the high peak of history this day. All the world is in strife and confusion. Whether we can win through our difficulties no sober person will hazard a prophecy. A united, governmentally capable people should be able to win. This bill operates against unity and governmental capacity.

We do not need 2-by-4 politicians, not in an hour like this. When we look to the future we do not know. We ask the watchman on the tower, what about my Nation, and he says, "I do not know." No man can see through this curtain of smoke that enshrouds the earth this day now while you sit there and I stand here.

COMPARE LYNCHINGS WITH GANGSTERS

You indict my people of the South. Read the speeches in the RECORD day before yesterday. What is your proof? What is your case?

Here is your case: Eight or nine lynchings last year, 1 for each 15,000,000 population, a reduction of over 5,000 percent since 1892. And you people who are all hot and bothered about it, you people living in these big gang-ridden cities, where combinations of crooked politicians and gangsters murder and terrorize and rob, are looking with a spyglass into my section of the country for something to bestir your righteous indignition. Do you believe that these gangsters of yours are murdering and robbing by due process of law? Are you affording their victims due process of law? Why do you not include them in the denunciations of this bill?

I am not talking about the written Constitution; I am talking about the fundamental constitution that underlies this Government. That is what is being violated by these provisions. Tell me now, honest, man to man, would you pass this law—and I am asking you on your conscience, man to man under your oath—would you pass this law today, would you vote "aye" for this bill today if you did not think it was necessary? Would you do it anyway? In the secret recesses of your conscience, answer the question. Would you vote for it if you did not think it was necessary? Do you tell me that when the people of the States have reduced a major crime to 1 in 15,000,000 population, making a progress of 5,000 percent since 1882, that you think it is necessary—man to man, before your God, to do this monstrous thing, weakening the structure of your Government? Of course you do not; we had just as well be candid about it.

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE PREDICTS CONTINUING DECLINE IN LYNCHINGS

Mr. Chairman, down in Alabama there is the greatest constructive agency dealing with the colored man in this Nation, the Tuskegee Institute. They are very high-class people. The president of that institution, recently discussing the decrease in lynching, had the following to say. Remember this is not a white man who is speaking; this is a colored man, a colored statesman, the same type of man that this man MITCHELL, who comes from Chicago, is. [Applause.] And if MITCHELL holds himself throughout the years as he is today, his head on his shoulders and his feet on the ground, he stands a chance to be recognized by the historian of the future as the greatest statesman his race has produced in a century. [Applause.] I want now to have read to you what the president of Tuskegee Institute says about it, and I ask my friend, Mr. MILLER, of Arkansas, to read this:

Mr. MILLER (reading):

There are a number of interesting features to be noted. From 1882 to 1885 there were more whites lynched than Negroes. Concerning the decline of lynchings in the United States, I call attention to sheet no. 2, "Lynchings, white and Negroes, by periods, 1882–1936." You will note that there has been a steady decline in the number of lynchings for each of the 10-year periods, 1887–96 to 1927–36. Judging from the trends shown in this table, there is every reason to believe that there will be a further decline in lynchings.

There are probably three major factors that have contributed to this decline. The first of these is the tendency for frontier characteristics in the South to disappear (lynching was a special characteristic of the frontier in America, both in the West and in the South). Second, the breaking down of isolation in the South by increased facilities: (1) Rural Free Delivery; (2) more telegraph offices; (3) more telephones in small towns and rural areas, and (4) recently the radio and paved roads. Third, increasing agitation within the South during the past 40 years against lynchings. This has resulted in an increasing sentiment against the evil. This sentiment has expressed itself in the increasing efforts to prevent lynchings.

From 1914 to 1919 the number of persons lynched was much greater than the number of persons prevented from being lynched. From 1920 to the present the number each year prevented being lynched has greatly exceeded the number lynched.

These facts and trends seem to indicate unquestionably that there will continue to be a decline in lynchings in the United States. Not only in these statistics but in many other ways is there employed a growth in the humanitarian attitude of the American people. This growth, I believe, has paralleled the development of educational and social agencies, all of which bid fair to rid this Nation of the barbaric practice of lynching.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, that is the testimony of a colored man on the ground. Here is what we are interested about. How do you think that decrease could have happened? It happened only by the development of a sense of community responsibility and community outrage at the offense of lynching. That has to go first.

It could not have happened any other way. The purpose and capacity of the people of the South to stop this barbarous practice has grown. Why am I apprehensive about this law? I live in the South. I would not lie to you about this. I know that when there is danger of lynching there is no possible defense of the person in danger except the people in the community at the time. These lynchings happen in isolated communities, and that is an interesting fact. We in this country, in our westward migration from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific Ocean, have moved, the population has moved in advance of organized government. When these populations moved into these isolated valleys government sprang up.

LYNCHING FORM OF EXECUTION OF PIONEER HOME-MADE LAW

Home-made government. Life and property were made safe. The most perfectly functioning democracy of all time, because they did not even require the paraphernalia of government. Lynching was the method of execution of that home-made law. As organized government has moved on as the communities have settled up, as roads have been opened up, as it has been made possible to get officers out there quickly, people have come to be protected in their communities by a regular constabulary. This home-made law, this home-made government has passed out of the picture. In some rural communities yet there is practically no police protection. The people protect themselves. In such a community, when a crime is committed, there is a feeling of personal responsibility and of personal and family danger and concern that does not obtain in a city, because these people are their own police officers. Not only is that true but because of lack of police protection the sense of community danger is greater. If there is a cry of distress, everybody grabs his gun and goes. It is his business. In the city we grumble at having our slumber disturbed and wish the police would hurry up and quiet things down so we may go to sleep again.

By the way, I want to make this statement——

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; not now. Perhaps I will later. I want to make this statement: There are 14,000,000 colored people in these United States, and we sometimes read in the papers of a horrible crime committed by one of them. It is an infinitesimal percentage of the people who do these things. The few people who do these horrible things are not representative of the colored people of the South. [Applause.]

I will cite you a case to illustrate what I am talking about, and I am going to show you the dangers of this law. In my State, in a community made up of Bohemian citizens, one day when the family went away to the field they left a little 14-year-old girl at home. When they came back home they found this little child weltering in her own blood. They found a man on the railroad tracks, about 3 miles away. He was detained. The whole countryside was aroused. Why? Because every father in that community knew that it was just a matter of accident that it was the daughter of that family and not his own daughter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself additional time. I may use it all.

Now, I am not trying to make a constitutional speech, but I am talking about something that is as fundamental as the Constitution. I am talking about the instincts of the people. I am talking about how you would have felt if you had lived there. I am trying to show what we have to deal with and how hard it is. This man was identified by the little girl; still they did not do anything. They took him down about 3 miles to a little village and the constable had him in charge. Really the people had him in charge, the father, brothers, and neighbors. Can you not understand? Somebody said, "If this man committed that crime, unless he has bathed his body, he has this child's blood on his person.

They examined his body and he was clotted with blood; and they killed him on the spot. Bad? Yes. But suppose you had this law on the books, what would have happened in that community? As it was, when the people had calmed down and cooled off and had come to their senses, they began to say, "We must not do this any more; we must control ourselves." A little child ruined for life by a brute, as unworthy of human sympathy as a lion in a community. Only one constable. People are close to each other in such communities. They are exposed to common dangers. It is not easy.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. The gentleman made a big speech a little while ago. Let me make a big one now.

I know what is making this reduction in lynchings possible; and I tell you, and you will not believe me. Suppose a United States marshal had gone into that community and had taken the father and brothers of that child away off to the Federal court and put them in jail and sent them to the penitentiary as you provide for in this bill. Do you think that would have helped to strengthen those people's purpose to prevent lynching in the future? I do not mean this in any offensive way; but has anybody got little enough sense to believe that if you had taken that father away from the bedside of that little torn girl it would have helped to stabilize the people? And then, in this great bill, you would have levied a tax on the father of that child and the neighbors of that child to raise $10,000 to pay it over to the estate of this hound of hell that had destroyed that child's life. That is what you propose to do in this bill. You strut around here and talk about being statesmen!

DIFFICULTY OF SEPARATE RACES LIVING TOGETHER

And why are you doing it? Does anybody fail to know that the purpose to defend has got to precede defense? We have a pretty difficult situation down there, not insofar as the mass of colored people are concerned. It is these rare exceptions which are magnified by outsiders for financial or political profit.

We do not understand these lines of racial cleavage. They do not seem to be noticed until large numbers of dissimilar races are thrown into intimate contact. It is an interesting thing, not that one race is better than the other, but these lines of racial cleavage seem to have been drawn in the counsels of infinite wisdom, and the instincts of racial self-preservation seem to have been placed there to guard them. We do not understand it. We can see the phenomenon at work. That is all we know about it. When are they to be broken down, I do not know, and you do not know. But we are doing our best, these colored men and women, white men and women, trying their best to live together; and only here and there some member of the colored race or some member of the white race, an exception to the rule, goes bad.

UNFAIR TO SOUTH

What I think is the most unfair thing you men from the North are doing in this debate, and it is unfair—I leave it to you when you reach your calmer moments—to talk about these 5,000 people that have been lynched as though that number is associated with our present problem. You do not point to the fact that we have reduced the number of lynchings to nine last year. You almost seem to regret that fact. Not a man from the North has stood on this floor and in justice to his fellow countrymen of the South let the world know the truth. It is not right, boys; it just is not right.

We did wrong when we violated the great law that God Almighty announced to Adam at the gates of the Garden of Eden when we brought these colored people here to do our work; it was not right. I cannot understand at all the horrible institution of slavery. Every drop of my blood revolts against the lynching of a human being. We have been paying the price. For a long time we have been paying. You sold them to us, you brought them in your boats from New England and sold them. You stole them out of Africa and sold them to us. [Applause.]

As soon as you got your money you got all hot and bothered about their being in the condition into which you sold them. I am glad they were freed. Slavery was not only wrong to the black man, but it was fast destroying the civilization of the South. And there is an interesting thing about that, too. It seems that a divine providence has guided and guarded these colored people since they came here, the most interesting chapter I know of in the history of the races of men. There was no door that was open to them that could liberate them from the jungles of Africa except the door of slavery. They had lived through ages and ages in Africa, in the tropics. Living was easy; they did not have to struggle, their minds were not developed. Nobody would have hired them and brought them out. Only slavery opened this door. Horrible as it was, it was the only possible escape. If they had got out and had not had the protection of ownership of their bodies they probably would have been destroyed by the white man's vices.

Because of the fact that they were brought into close contact with white men and were compelled to work, they improved. Ages and ages of inaction made them indisposed to work. They were compelled to work, and through the use of their hands they developed their brains.

Even the War between the States seemed to have been necessary for them, because if they had been freed—and they would have been freed long before they were if you people from New England had left us alone; but if they had been freed without your interference they would have settled down on their masters' plantations. War seemed to have been necessary to break even in a measure the old attachment. I am not sure that the carpetbagger was not necessary to drive this line of cleavage a little deeper. It was a pretty hard one to drive through.

I am not sure but that the carpetbagger was necessary—and, to be truthful with you, I am not sure that the pestiferous interference of you people from the rest of the country, such as is manifested by this bill, may not have been necessary—I am not certain about it. If our situation had been reversed, I suppose we would have misbehaved as badly as you have, so I am not angry with you. You have not paid your share for this thing yet. We have been paying, and paying, and paying, and paying for the violation of that great fundamental law when we were not willing to do our work. You brought them into slavery. We were each section responsible for the tragedy of the terrible war. After the war no helpful hand was extended to that battle-cursed country. Maybe that was good, too, but you have not paid your part. You keep this thing up, this thing being done for political profit, and finally this great big question is going to move up into your part of the country and you will not know what to do with it. [Applause.]

I do not believe you have stopped to think about what you are doing. There has got to be an end to this holier-than-thou bedeviling of your brethren who live in the South. It is a bad habit. It may become an expensive habit.

FUTILITY OF THIS BILL

Now, may I say to my friend who has been wanting for a long time to ask me a question, go ahead.

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman has spoken of a great many of these isolated communities. May I ask if the gentleman thinks this bill applies to situations in communities of that kind, except where the persons accused are in custody?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What you are fixing to do by this bill is to have the constable leave these persons wandering around out there, where there is a disposition to lynch them, until the folks can go and get them. Then they would not have been taken from the custody of an officer, and under this bill there would be no lynchings. [Applause.] Do you think that in any community where the sheriff is not willing to protect the persons accused against those who want to lynch them, he would arrest such a person, knowing he could be sued and prosecuted? Oh, you are a smart bunch. This is what people do when they monkey with something they know nothing about. [Laughter and applause.] You had better leave it to us, and attend to something you know something about. [Applause.]

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CURLEY. What is the gentleman's opinion of the poll which was conducted last fall by the Institute of Public Opinion?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. You mean of my people?

Mr. CURLEY. No; I mean about general public opinion in the political campaign, the Institute of Public Opinion poll as published in the Washington Post is the one to which I refer.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Wait a minute. I spoke several times in the last campaign, and I thought it was over and gone. I do not want to talk about it again.

Mr. CURLEY. I will bring it right down to the present issue then. What is the gentleman's opinion about the statement made by the same institute to the effect that a recent poll showed that 65 percent of those polled in the Southern States are in favor of this antilynching bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not claim to know about that particular poll, but I do not claim the rest of the country has a monopoly on people who have no more sense than that.

Mr. CURLEY. You do not think much of 65 percent of the Southern people, then.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right; I will say it to them. Do not bother about me and my people.

Mr. CURLEY. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I am afraid you would make it too long.

"FEDERALITIS"

May I say that we have some editors down in my country advocating this bill. What I am afraid of is that in this whole country we have a chronic acute attack of "federalitis." [Appause.] You cannot find better evidence of it than that in this year 1937 the American Congress actually has in contemplation the passage of this bill. We have down in the South some editors, too, who favor the bill. The people have a notion that if anything is wrong, they want Uncle Sam to come and remedy it. They cannot build a hogpen down in this country now without wanting some Federal man to come in and show them how to build it. They really prefer to have him build it. You are voting to put some little 2-by-4 Federal marshal astraddle the neck of your Governor in this bill. We have some editors down there who ought to know better but who do not.

I want you to understand, also, you do not have the only editors in this country who can compete for the booby prize in statesmanship and editorial wisdom. We have some in the South of such ability that you can bring the best you have and our fellows will go around the track twice before yours get started. [Laughter and applause.]

Are there any more questions? I do not want to take up any more time. If I have been mean, I have not meant to be.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In regard to this "federalitis" about which you are talking, was it a part of it when they sent 30,000 colored people up into Michigan before last November and kept them up there until after this April election?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. You mean they did not vote for you? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Let me answer the gentleman's question. In spite of the fact these people were brought up there and were paid for it, they did not vote for me, but I am here. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman I am glad he is here.

Mr. HOFFMAN. So am I.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If we have to have a Republican.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the discussion has wandered far afield and is not in order under the rule under which we are proceeding to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; if the gentleman will ask me a question which will not take me out of order.

Mr. MAY. I hope the gentleman will be patient enough to let me state my question.

In the great debate of 1832 between Webster and Haynes, back close to the time when the Constitution was written, the question was whether or not ceding to the States just a little bit of our public domain would purchase the States and destroy their liberty. How does this apply to the situation today, when the States are coming here and asking for everything in the world they want, and getting it? Is this bill an outcrop of this spirit of trying to let the Government run everything? [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know, but I am not in favor of this bill outcropping any further. Is the gentleman?

Mr. MAY. Neither am I.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does anybody else want to ask me any questions?

I want everyone to understand I know better than to close a speech this way, because the thing to do is to make the speech and close with a grand peroration. I do know better.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. Aside from the lawyers who are immediately involved and are attempting to pass this bill, does the gentleman know of any first-class lawyer in the United States who thinks this bill is constitutional?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I do not; and if I heard of one who thought it constitutional, I would not think he is a first-class lawyer. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman return with me to this "federalitis", as the gentleman calls it? I think everyone in the country knows there has been a tremendous growth of this so-called "federalitis", and will the gentleman agree with me that the inspiration for most of it has come from mighty high places in this Government?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We have this thing in our own hands today, and we want to show "high places" how things ought to be done. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to ask the gentleman further if he does not believe it would be a good thing to get away from most of this "federalitis" and not stop at this point.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right, but let us start right today.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I rather took the gentleman's statement to mean that this antilynching bill is an outgrowth of this recent "federalitis." It is a fact, however, is it not, that a similar bill has been introduced in the Congress from time to time and the first agitation for this measure came up long before "federalitis" seized the country?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right; yes.

May I make this statement? When this bill was pending in 1922 there were 63 lynchings, I believe, that year, and it was predicted that if the bill did not go through and become law, we might expect about every other colored person in the country to be lynched in about 12 months. The truth is that since about 1922, as I have already indicated, notwithstanding the increase of population, and as stated by the president of Tuskegee Institute, we have been constantly decreasing the number of lynchings, constantly increasing our purpose and efficiency in the protection of those in danger; in fact, making progress in the suppression of this crime, which has no parallel in this country. I believe that every unbiased, fair student who wants to see lynching stopped, who is familiar with the condition, who is not the head of some organization that is getting money by scaring people and taking up a collection and saying, "We will take care of you for so much per head", will agree that there is neither necessity nor justification for this proposed legislation. [Prolonged applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man here in admiration for the speech to which we have just listened. I yield to no man here in admiration of the character and the capacity of our colleague who delivered the speech. All the more do I regret that he should have built that speech on so fragile and indefensible a foundation. The gentleman gave us to understand that we ought to act in this matter in consonance with the theory of State and local responsibility, and that we have no constitutional warrant to proceed otherwise.

I admire his description of the origin of our Constitution, the growth of the spirit that led to its framing. I regret he has forgotten the language of the fifth amendment. I regret he has not recalled it was one of the 10 articles demanded by the people as a condition to the adoption of the Constitution. I regret he has forgotten that the article to which I refer has been described by authority as a repetition of the common law, and I appeal to the common law of a thousand years, I appeal to those who wrote the Constitution, I appeal to those who have sworn to support the Constitution, and I ask them—I demand of them—that they remember the language:

> No person shall be deprived of life without due process of law.

This provision was a condition precedent to the adoption of the Constitution, demanded because engrained in the Saxon character. It is the embodiment of our belief that no person shall be deprived of life without a fair trial by his fellows. Being in the Constitution it is the warrant, the justification, the cause, the demand why we should give it effect. That it has not been enforced is no excuse, that the violations of it have decreased is no palliation.

Furthermore, observe that the constitutional provision carries with it by implication power to enforce obedience. To this end Congress may enact as it sees fit, save that cruel and unusual punishments are forbidden by the eighth amendment. I have found no judicial decision to the contrary. This it is that dissolves all doubt as to the constitutionality of the provisions in the measure before us.

Also there can be no valid question on the score of States' rights. Remember that the amendment was one of the 10 adopted within 3 years of ratifying the Constitution itself. The power in this matter reserved to the States remained exclusively to them only during that period. Since then the Federal power has been paramount, even if not exercised. Federal powers do not lapse by lack of use.

In the exercise of such power the Federal Government has no exclusive privilege. It is still the duty of the States to see that no person shall be deprived of life without due process of law. We all rejoice that the extent of the wretched evil has been greatly lessened.

You say there were but nine lynchings last year. Thank God, there were only nine lynchings, but they were nine lynchings too many. Those of day before yesterday were too many. Until we can wipe out this stain altogether we shall have forsworn the Bill of Rights that prescribes our duties. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS OF CITIZENS SHOULD BE GUARANTEED

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I am from the South, and I never knew that a Republican was white until I was 21 years old. [Laughter.] When I think of Republicans I can always remember such words as "Black Republicans" that I learned as a child. All of my people were Confederates. The men in my family ranked from privates, corporals, and sergeants up to generals in the Confederate Army.

I am in favor of an antilynching bill. I am not in favor of any Federal bill that takes over local law enforcement. But I am in favor of a bill which guarantees constitutional rights of all American citizens within the United States of America. [Applause.]

In the last few days we have heard a lot of speeches about "racketeering organizations"—and the reference is made to colored organizations. I do not approve of them. I approve of neither colored nor white racketeering organizations.

I have also heard a great deal about States' rights, about how we should "thank God for the Supreme Court", how this legislation is directed at the South. I have also heard that this is some evil move by Tammany Hall, which operates in New York City. Further, I hear it is an appeal for the colored vote. The last few days have been the greatest field days for emotion and excitement that Congress has had in many years.

As far as I am concerned, I would like to see the South be willing to give a Federal bond that this lynching be stopped for all time. That is because it is not only a disgrace to the South, but it is a disgrace to the whole United States of America.

NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS—"POLITICAL PURPOSES"

Several have made reference to the fact that the northern Democrats are proposing this legislation for "political purposes." Whereas this may be true, it also may be true of southern Democrats that they are opposing it for "political purposes." You can vote for or against this bill and still be honest.

The fact is, this is a political Government, and its purposes are fundamentally political. There is nothing strange about that.

But, as I have said, insofar as I am concerned, I am a southerner and live in a southern district. In my district the colored people do not vote, and if they did they would probably vote against me. I am therefore not for the lynching bill to get colored votes. I am doing it because I think it is right, and because it will take a stigma from the escutcheon of the United States of America.

ANGLO-SAXON INSTITUTIONS—LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

Today, also, we have heard a great deal about Anglo-Saxon institutions. How our forefathers were for local self-government. The truth is that historically in the entire world the only place that lynching has been practiced or is being practiced today is in the United States of America. It is peculiarly an American institution.

ORIGIN OF TERM "LYNCH LAW"

The word "lynching" came from the Lynch family, who lived in Virginia, and I am descended from that family. (See below II, Origin of Lynch Law.) But the Lynches never lynched anybody. All they did was to enforce the law against Tories and reactionaries during the Revolution.

I feel this way about it. One of our speakers read a report of a colored college professor at Tuskegee Institute to the effect that there were more white people lynched than there were colored people. Well, then, let us vote for this bill, so that white people are not lynched any more anywhere in the United States.

Let us do it for the white people.

Realizing that this is a 100-percent American institution, since we are talking about percentages of the reduction of lynching, let us get rid 100 percent of this 100-percent American institution.

SOUTHERN PEOPLE OVERWHELMINGLY OPPOSE LYNCHING

Every American, no matter where he lives, should have his constitutional rights protected and guaranteed. And down in the South, according to the Gallup poll, more than 65 percent of the people are in favor of a Federal antilynching law. The people there are as much opposed to lynching as the people anywhere in the United States of America (IV, Attitude of the South). A very small minority—an infinitesimal portion of the population—have occasionally disgraced the various States.

But the stigma has been put on the whole South. Yet, as I said in the first place, it covers the whole Nation, so I am in favor of blocking it out by guaranteeing the constitutional rights of all American citizens and punishing such officials as do not conscientiously do their duty.

Mr. Chairman, the first man to oppose slavery was the founder of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson. He wrote a clause for the Declaration of Independence, but it was taken out. (See below, I, Lost Clause.)

This fastened slavery on the South, and the Dred Scott case made the Civil War certain. (See below, III, Dred Scott case.)

We in the South today (V, South Today) need to become an integral part of the economic and political picture of the Nation, and we should have minimum standards for the people everywhere (VI, This Is a Nation).

Mr. Chairman, exercising my privilege to extend and revise my remarks, I am going to discuss some important phases of American history. The South has had unfortunate things happen to it time after time. I shall discuss them numerically, and they are as follows:

I

THE LOST CLAUSE OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Jefferson tried to prohibit slavery

When Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence he bitterly opposed slavery. His hope was to abolish slavery at the very birth of the Nation. He had slaves himself, but he realized that it was a political institution that should be abolished; that economically it would destroy the people. For these reasons, when he wrote the Declaration of Independence, he included a denunciation of the slave traffic.

Speaking of the English King as the Government in connection with slavery, this "lost clause" of which I have obtained a photostatic copy from the library, is as follows:

LOST CLAUSE OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

He has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating its most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people who never offended him, captivating and carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of infidel powers, is the warfare of the Christian King of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where men should be bought and sold, he has prostituted his negative for suppressing every legislative attempt to prohibit or to restrain this execrable commerce; and that this assemblage of horrors might want no fact of distinguished die, he is now exciting those very people to rise in arms among us, and to purchase that liberty of which he has deprived them by murdering the people upon whom he also obtruded them, thus paying off former crimes committed against the liberties of one people with crimes which he urges them to commit against the lives of another.

The original Declaration of Independence, as signed, is on display and has been seen by millions of Americans. This lost clause has probably only been seen by a handful of people—probably only a few hundred, but much less than a thousand. It is in the original draft of the Constitution which was not signed, but from which the final draft of the Declaration was copied. In this final draft the antislavery clause was omitted.

This lost clause is deeply interesting to every American. Had it been adopted, undoubtedly slavery would have been eliminated in the Constitution when it was written. But due to the fact that people from the New England States were shipping slaves to the South, and because of the recorded objection of South Carolina and Georgia, this clause was eliminated.

Thus slavery was fastened on the South. The result was, included with a few other events, that the people of the North and South had to endure a bloody war.

II

HISTORICAL ORIGIN OF LYNCH LAW

Statute of the State of Virginia

In the State of Virginia there lived Col. Charles Lynch, Jr. He was the son of Charles Lynch, Sr., who came from Ireland. Charles Lynch, Sr., was kidnaped and highjacked out of Galway, Ireland, brought to Virginia, and sold on the block to the highest bidder as an indentured servant.

But he was an apple-cheeked Irish boy, and he soon married the landlord's daughter. They had several children, one of whom was to become the famous Colonel Lynch, of Lynch's court, a brave Revolutionary soldier and a cavalry officer of first rank. He had a sister, Penelope, who married Robert Adams, Jr., and from which union I am descended.

Col. Charles Lynch was a member of the Quaker Church. The country around Lynchburg and Bedford, Va., was settled by Quakers, and Lynchburg was established by the colonel's brother. Colonel Lynch was put out of the Quaker Church for taking solemn oaths. That was when he became a member of the house of burgesses just preceding the Revolution.

At the outbreak of the Revolution he was a justice of the peace with William Preston, Robert Adams, Jr., and James Calloway, all living near Bedford. While he was not off at the front fighting, he was at home handling Tories and the Liberty Leaguers of the day.

THE LYNCH COURT OF BEDFORD, VA.

Now this is to point out the actual origin of lynch law. The court greatly exceeded its authority. It exercised the power of a district court. It imprisoned Tories, and it also sentenced them to 39 lashes, and until they cried "Liberty forever." On one occasion a Tory was fined £20,000. It is pointed out this was no very heavy fine on account of the great inflation of the currency, but at any rate they exercised the power of a district court.

After the war the Tories and reactionaries who had suffered at the hands of Colonel Lynch, Adams, and the others, began filing suits. The Virginia Legislature soon met and in the October term of 1782 passed the following act:

LYNCH STATUTE OF THE STATE OF VIRGINIA

An act to indemnify certain persons in suppressing a conspiracy against this State.

I. Whereas divers evil-disposed persons in the year 1780 formed a conspiracy and did actually attempt to levy war against the Commonwealth; and it is represented to the present General Assembly that William Preston, Robert Adams, Jr., James Callaway, and Charles Lynch, and other faithful citizens, aided by detachments of volunteers from different parts of the State, did, by timely and effectual measures, suppress such conspiracy. And whereas the measures taken for that purpose may not be strictly warranted by law, although justifiable from the imminence of the danger;

II. Be it therefore enacted, That the said William Preston, Robert Adams, Jr., James Callaway, and Charles Lynch, and all other persons whatsoever concerned in suppressing the said conspiracy, or in advising, issuing, or executing any orders, or measures taken for that purpose, stand indemnified and exonerated of and from all pains, penalties, prosecutions, actions, suits, and damages, on account thereof. And that if any indictment, prosecution, action, or suit, shall be laid or brought against them, or any of them, for any act or thing done therein, the defendant, or defendants may plead in bar, or the general issue, and give this act in evidence.

I suggest that this be read very closely where it says:

Whereas divers evil-disposed persons * * * did actually attempt to levy war against the Commonwealth * * * which looks mightily like Colonel Lynch wrote the legislation himself; for he had a good sense of humor. Indeed, since the Revolution had been started by the State of Virginia, apparently the writer of the statute simply reversed the language for the fun of it.

In the history of lynching it is well to remember this, because the origin of the name was of a legally constituted tribunal exceeding its authority, due to the emergency of war. But lynch law within a generation or two began to mean the exercise of rough frontier justice in western places where there were no peace officers. Because of rapid migration to the West, especially in such times as the gold rush, there would not even be a Federal marshal anywhere near a given community. The citizens, lacking any form of law, would get together at informal meetings in order to protect themselves.

This was the only law they had, but it was called lynch law and was reasonably respectable. However, there were many instances of barbarities and cruelties, because of the lack of proper rules of legal evidence.

TERM OF "LYNCH LAW" CHANGES IN MEANING

Thereafter lynch law began to mean the summary hanging or burning of a Negro for committing some offense, either of murder or the raping of a white woman. However, it is now grown to such proportions that lynching means the summary punishment by death of anyone, white or black, anywhere in the United States, for any cause suitable to the mob.

It is strictly an American custom and exists nowhere else except in the United States of America. Its origin is strictly through the Lynch court. This is indicated by the act passed by the Legislature of Virginia.

III

DRED SCOTT CASE

Supreme Court case is leading cause of Civil War

In this case the Court said:

This case involves private rights of value and constitutional principles of highest importance, about which there had become such a difference of opinion, that the peace and harmony of the country required the settlement of them by judicial decision.

This was the astonishing attitude of the Supreme Court. Imagine writing an opinion and thereby settling the vast social and economic forces of the day. By declaring the Missouri Compromise unconstitutional it meant that slavery could not be adjusted or compromised by the elected representatives of the people.

It meant slavery could be extended to the entire West.

It meant economic destruction to the white settlers, or "free soilers" of the West.

It was not moral indignation that led the free soilers to immediate opposition, but they knew that they would be destroyed by competition of slave labor. Vast millions of acres of agricultural and mineral wealth, great forests and rivers where human beings could live, would thus be destroyed economically, and as a place for free representative government.

The Iowa Legislature and most of the western legislatures and northern legislatures immediately denounced the Supreme Court, stating that they did not intend to obey its opinion. So I shall read some typical resolutions of different legislatures.

This particular one is an excerpt from the New Hampshire Laws, June 1857, chapter 1999, page 1925:

NEW HAMPSHIRE RESOLUTION ON THE SUPREME COURT

First. That the great power vested in the Supreme Court of the United States and the permanent tenure of office by which it is removed from the direct control of the people, require that its action should be the object of constant and vigilant observation; that an influence upon it can be exerted only by public expression of censure upon any attempt of the Court to transcend the limits of its authority; and that it is especially the duty of the legislatures of the several States to expose and denounce any such attempt.

Second. Resolved, That the decision of the Court in the case of Dred Scott v. John F. A. Sanford, as pronounced by Chief Justice Taney, contradicts the facts of history, is repugnant to the Constitution, and subversive to the rights and liberties of the people.

Seventh. Resolved, That the expression of extrajudicial opinions from the Supreme Bench, on subjects agitating the public mind, is undignified and unbefitting the position, and the use made of such position to propagate political doctrines tends directly to destroy confidence in the integrity of the Court and respect for its decisions.

Eighth. Resolved, That in undertaking to decide those questions which, according to its practice, were not in issue, the Court evinced a desire illegally to control the action of Congress; that such course justifies the apprehensions entertained by the framers of the Constitution that there might be danger from the too great latitude left to the discretion of the Court; that a repetition of and persistence in such action would confirm the belief that there was a design and purpose on the part of the Court to usurp the functions of the legislative department, and justify the State in resisting, by all constitutional means, the enforcement of laws dictated by the Court.

VERMONT RESOLUTION

From the Vermont Laws, November 1857, page 83:

Resolved, That Vermont reasserts the constitutional right of Congress to regulate slavery in the Territories of the Union by legislative enactments; that such right is clearly conferred by the Constitution itself, and its timely exercise is indispensable to the safety and perpetuity of the Union.

Resolved, That these extrajudicial opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States are a dangerous usurpation of power, and have no binding authority upon Vermont or the people of the United States.

Resolved, That no ingenious sophistry of the judges of that Court can make it appear that the citizens of each State are not citizens of the United States, and citizens when in the other States, and entitled as such to all rights and privileges of citizens in the several States.

Resolved, That whenever the Government or judiciary of the United States refuses or neglects to protect the citizens of each State in their lives or liberty, when in another State or Territory, it becomes the duty of the sovereign and independent States of this Union to protect their own citizens, at whatever hazard or cost.

SEVENTY TO EIGHTY-FIVE PERCENT WHITE SOUTHERNERS NONSLAVE OWNERS

Just previous to the Civil War from 70 to 85 percent of the white population were nonslave owners. President Woodrow Wilson made long research on this subject, which he reports in Division and Reunion, Epochs of American History. He says that only one in six of the whites were slave owners, and at most one in five. That means from 80 to 85 percent of the white people were nonslave owners. Woodrow Wilson further refers to the poor whites who belonged neither to the ruling class nor the slave class but were despised by both.

Then, in reference to the tiny white population controlling southern society and, as a matter of fact, the entire Nation, he says:

The ruling class in each State was small, compact, and on the whole homogenous. It was intelligent, alert, and self-conscious. Its feeling of separateness from other sections of the country grew more and more intense * * *.

In my opinion, by far the majority of white people were opposed to entering the Civil War upon any theory of either slavery or States' rights. The nonslave owners had nothing whatever to gain except to fasten upon themselves an economic system which would continue to destroy them and their white descendants.

As a result, whole regiments from Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, Missouri went into the Federal Army. Large groups of people from all the Southern States, even Texas and Alabama, went away to join the Federal Army.

But the slave-owning class controlled the South, just as the industrial class controlled the Union during the administrations of Coolidge, Harding, and Hoover. And so, when they forced a war and the drums began to beat, people who did not join the Army were called slackers and cowards, just as they were in the World War.

MEMOIRS OF MARY A. MAVERICK

I am going to read from the Memoirs of Mary A. Maverick, my grandmother:

The Civil War soon came on and Mr. Maverick and my sons did not shrink from what they conceived to be their duty. Mr. Maverick had always been a Union man in sentiment, he loved the Union of the States, and although he may have believed (before the question was settled) that we had the abstract right to withdraw from the Union, he thought the Union was sacred, and that the idea of a dissolution of the Union ought not to be harbored for a moment.

Having such ideas and convictions, he found life to be uncongenial and unpromising for him in South Carolina, where the doctrines of nullification and ultimate secession were aggressively espoused by an overwhelming majority of the ruling class. He came to Texas, but all doctrines and issues of the former time bloomed into life about him when Texas became a member of the Union.

Creeping beneath the shadow of the manifold blessings of the Union came the bitter and unceasing strife. At last he came to believe the quarrel was forced upon us, and that there was before us an irrepressible conflict which we could not escape no matter where we turned.

The secession convention of 1861 met; there was intense excitement and, need I say, deep gloom; the hour came at last when he was compelled to take his choice for or against his kith and kin. The question was no longer whether secession was right or wrong, wise or unwise; the question was now narrowed down to this, Even if you could sever your fate from that of your people, would your heart permit you to do it?

Thus it appeared to him, and he did a simple, straightforward, unselfish act, and an act which, nevertheless, gave him deep pain, when he cast his vote for secession.

When the war was ended the sentiment was unanimous in our family that all the old issues had been settled and that the result of the conflict was right.

IV

ATTITUDE OF SOUTH ON SUBJECT OF LYNCHING

Gallup poll shows 65 percent in favor of Federal law

The people of the South who have engaged themselves in lynchings are of such a small proportion of the population as to be not worth counting. You can go from one end of the South to the other, and even where lynching is condoned you will not find any man who is proud that he ever was in a lynching bee. As much as I have traveled over the South I have never had a man admit that he actually helped commit a crime, or conspired to take a man out of a jail and participate in a lynching. I have had a very few tell me that they happened to be near a lynching and saw it. But never have I had one man admit that he really participated in the criminal act of lynching.

The American Institute of Public Opinion, which held the polls on the Presidential election, and proved to be very accurate, recently held a poll in the South. It was shown that something like 65 percent of the people of the South favored a Federal antilynching law. This poll was of white people. The number of people in the South opposing lynching was much greater than California.

VIRGINIA HAS GOOD LAW AND NO LYNCHINGS FOR 10 YEARS

It is true that consideration should be given the objection to the Federal antilynching law on the basis of violating States' rights and local self-government. Indeed, the State of Virginia has passed an antilynching bill of its own, providing for severe punishment and the use by the Governor of the power to spend money and enforce the law. As a result Virginia has not had a single lynching since the law was enacted 10 years ago.

Some of the Southern States who object to the Federal antilynching bill have done nothing to pass laws of their own. Had they done so and eliminated lynching, the Federal antilynching bill would not now be considered.

It is to be understood that the Federal antilynching bill does not set up a system of Federal officers and spies throughout the South. It merely provides that in case the law is not faithfully carried out by officers, that those officers shall either be fined or imprisoned, and that counties permitting violation of the law shall also pay fines.

GIVE DEATH PENALTY IN ORDERLY FASHION RATHER THAN BY SCREAMING MOB

It is also said that this will increase lynching. I do not believe it. I believe that if the Federal Government cooperates with the State government, and it is known that officers must follow the law; and if the people know that there is a certainty of prosecutions, I believe that lynchings will cease probably altogether.

There is one principal point to be understood in the lynching matter. Horrible crimes committed by persons that have been lynched are admitted. Emotional reactions of the relatives must be considered. But—and this is the point—why not penalize the person committing an offense, with the death penalty in an orderly fashion rather than have a screaming mob committing bestialities and horrible maimings?

Some say that if the courts have the matter of carrying out penalties against guilty persons, there will be prolonged hearings, mistrials, and appeals, and the defendants will not eventually suffer the penalties.

In my opinion, any Negro who is guilty of murder or rape will certainly be convicted, and certainly suffer the penalty of the law.

V

THE SOUTH TODAY

King Cotton makes slaves of us all

The situation of the South must be considered in relation to the economic and political background that I have here stated. At the Battle of Appomattox, when Lee surrendered to Grant, the South was broken.

Ever since then we have been starved and kicked around by the financial interests of New York, and the South has been operated as a colony, about on a basis of any other colony. Whatever wealth we had has been taken away from us.

As a result of this, we have been forced to live off of glory and magnolia blossoms. Having little economic power ourselves, we have worked harder and harder. We have worked cotton season after season, and King Cotton has just about destroyed us.

As a result—and this can be authenticated by authorities in the universities of the South—the following is the status of the South. It has—

First. The lowest soil fertility in the Nation.

Second. Lowest wages.

Third. Worst labor laws.

Fourth. Worst housing.

Fifth. Worst condition of land utilization and ownership.

These conditions are in the face of marvelous basic resources. Even our soil-fertility condition can be corrected by an intelligent plan of rehabilitation. Our job in the South is to use our resources properly.

However, the way things are now, many of our white sharecroppers are fully as bad off as the Negroes. Worse, they live no higher in their standard than did the Negro slaves before the Civil War, largely because they have no regularity of food and clothing, as the Negro slaves did who belonged to their masters.

We must also understand that numerically the white-tenant group is far more important in the South than the Negro. There are 1,200,000 of these white tenants, including sharecroppers, and only 700,000 Negro tenants. Thus we cannot view these problems of the South purely from a racial viewpoint. It is an economic question, involving our whole society. If we improve economic standards of all the people, white or black, many other bitter problems will be solved also.

VI

THIS IS A NATION

Minimum standards and protection for all citizens

Mr. Chairman, as I have said in the first place, I am proud of being a southerner. I do not hope to influence anyone who is a Member of Congress, or do I have egotism or vanity enough to think that I could.

My southern colleagues are able, honorable, and conscientious men. A majority of them have served their country in Congress much longer than I have, and with great distinction. It is not easy to differ with such fine and patriotic men.

But for me, I believe the time has come for the South to break its isolation. Economically we must be an integral part of the Nation. The Democratic Party has a mission to perform and we should have unity, North, South, East, and West.

Whereas we speak of States' rights and the Constitution, we must know that the Constitution was written by the people for all the people of the United States. We want everyone to get decent treatment. We want the Negro to have economic justice just as much as we want the white man to have justice.

We need better wage scales in the South. That is good business. If we have a high purchasing power, then we can have a generally higher standard of living. Our merchants can make money. We can prosper.

If we, considering the situation of our soil and lands, take full advantage of our connection with the Nation, we can make our land the most flourishing in the entire world. From the lowest of fertility in the Nation we can rise not only to the highest in the country, but the highest in the world.

There are dozens of things more important and vital to the South than an antilynching law. For my part, I am willing to see it enacted, and I doubt if there will ever rise a necessity of prosecution. At least, if it becomes necessary it will not be over one or two times; thereafter black criminals as well as white criminals will suffer the extreme penalty through due process of law for violating the peace and dignity of our States.

Let us move forward to our serious problems of land and humanity, the conservation of our natural resources, of wages and working conditions, better business, and higher living standards for all.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the arguments, both pro and con, on this bill. Like most propositions that come before us, it does not present a question where all the right is on one side and all the wrong on the other. No one has taken the floor and stated that he was in favor of lynching. On the contrary, every speaker without exception has denounced and deplored the rule of the mob.

The argument against the passage of this measure is that it is unconstitutional. I make no pretense at being an expert on the Constitution, but I am of the opinion that it is a fair statement to both sides to say that the unconstitutionality of the measure is debatable. No man, whether he poses as a constitutional expert or not, can state with certainty that the measure is or is not constitutional. The best that he can do is state his belief and opinion. Cases have been cited to support both sides. When I am confronted by a question of constitutionality such as this bill presents, I am content to let the Supreme Court decide whether it is or is not constitutional. Whenever I favor a legislative measure about which there is a constitutional doubt I wish, of course, to resolve that doubt in favor of its constitutionality and let the Supreme Court have the last word on it. The argument of its unconstitutionality, therefore, does not deter me from voting for it.

To my mind, a much more impressive argument advanced by the opponents of this bill is that the question of lynching is a local one and presents a problem for local authorities who are on the ground floor, who have to live with it, and who, therefore, ought to be more vitally interested in its solution than anyone else.

A careful reading of this bill, however, discloses that it does not interfere with the local authorities dealing with the situation but by its provisions sets a time limit of 30 days in which the State and local government has free and unrestrained authority to take action. If a State does take action within 30 days on a situation which calls for action, it will not be affected by the provision of this bill. If it fails to take action within 30 days, then I do not see how it or its representatives can complain if the National Government steps in and puts into effect the age-old American idea of law and order so that the stigma of lynching may be a thing of the past, no longer staining the name of American justice. That the fear of prompt national action will act as a deterrent to lynching is my honest belief because men who take part in mob action are without moral courage. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWEY].

Mr. TOWEY. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I have listened with intense interest to the debate upon this antilynching bill, both in committee and on the floor of the House, and I have reached the conclusion that there is not a man or a woman in this House who in their hearts are not bitterly opposed to this tragic and indefensible crime against human life and against the due processes of orderly government.

When I raise my voice today in favor of this bill I speak not my thoughts as an individual, but I believe I express the sentiments of the entire people in my State when I say that the crime of lynching has disgraced America long enough, and if States and other governmental bodies involved cannot and will not stop lynching, then the aroused public sentiment of the entire Nation must stop it.

Throughout the debate much has been said about the lack of merit of this bill, but if it lacks all other merits it has this merit, that when the law-enforcement authorities fail to perform their duties and hand over a man presumably innocent in the eyes of the law to a riotous mob, then, unless the State takes the necessary action to punish the perpetrators of the crime, a Federal offense is committed, and there is brought into play the great power of public opinion which will be added to that campaign of education which those in opposition to the bill say is the proper solution of the problem.

This bill is not directed against the good people of the South, but is directed only against the lawless elements which are not solely found in the South, but in all sections of our land, and the purpose of the bill operates wherever there may be committed the crime of lynching and remains unpunished.

This bill, contrary to some opinions expressed here on the floor, does not deprive the States of their rights. It is only when the States fail to carry out the orderly processes of government that the act becomes operative, and only after a finding of fact by a Federal judge sitting in a Federal court, that the State has been negligent and neglectful of its duties.

We have had a terrible example of the crime of lynching within the last 48 hours in a State of our Nation. The officer in charge says he does not recognize the perpetrators of the crime. It seems rather strange to most of us that in small communities, where these lynchings usually occur, where everybody knows everybody else, that the perpetrators of the crime are never known and that they go unpunished.

It is the belief of the proponents of this bill that if the perpetrators of these crimes were brought to justice and made pay the penalty for their inhuman and unholy acts, that legislation of this character would be unnecessary and there would be no lynching. It is the failure of the States to take action when crimes of this character occur that renders legislation on the part of the Federal Government necessary.

The entire Nation now looks to Mississippi to see if these murderers who committed this brutal lynching will be brought to the bar of justice. The action taken by the State officials in this case will prove a real answer to the necessity for this legislation.

I believe this bill deserves the support of all who believe in the due processes of law and order and in the sanctity of human life, and I shall vote for it based upon these considerations.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing what is to my mind the most important piece of legislation insofar as the Negroes of the United States are concerned that has been brought before this House during the Seventy-fifth Congress. Many things have been said in the debate, which I am inclined to believe were said either for political purposes or in the heat of argument. This is the first voice that has been raised by that group of people who have suffered most, of course, from mob violence. You have been told of the large number of people who were mobbed in this country. You have been told the number is more than 5,000. We have been asked to be absolutely truthful in all of our assertions, and I shall endeavor to be.

Mr. Chairman, there is not any danger in this country that so terrorizes the Negro and hinders him along all lines of development as this accursed thing we are talking about this afternoon. Think of what happened in Mississippi only 24 or 48 hours ago. Men who had been convicted of no crime, men who had pleaded that they were not guilty, not only was the law taken out of the officials' hands, but the officers of the law said the mob was orderly and they proceeded to let them take from them those prisoners and snuff out their lives in the most horrible manner that could be conceived by human beings.

Now, what is the purpose of government except to protect the lives of the individuals of that government? What was the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution written into the Constitution for, except for the purpose of protecting the lives of the newly emancipated slaves? I know what you have done with it. You have taken it and have construed it as protection for corporations and corporate interests in this country. That is to the credit of my Republican friends. It was never intended that the fourteenth amendment should do otherwise than protect human life. I ask again, if it is not the purpose of government to protect the lives of the people of the government, then what right has it to exist?

There are Negroes in all of the northern cities who would like to live in my beloved southland. They have left, as I said in my speech last Monday, quoting the words of Booker Washington, because their lives were in jeopardy; not only by this accursed lawlessness that we are talking about by which lives are snuffed out, but if they take the lives of those people does it not follow that in much greater degree they will take the property of those people? And they cannot be heard in many instances in their own defense.

Now, this is the voice of one not who belongs to the race that has constituted the mob but this is the voice of one who is representing that race that has suffered most at the hands of the mobs.

I have had my own experience. I shall never forget many years ago when I was a boy, Booker Washington, that great man whom we honored the other day, was invited to this city and dined with the President of the United States. When he returned to Tuskegee there was grave danger of him being mobbed. He had committed no crime. He was not even charged with having committed a crime, but because he was recognized by Theodore Roosevelt and was invited to the White House for a luncheon, when he returned to the South I shall never forget it was my duty to stand all night long with a rifle in my hand to protect the property of that institution and protect the life of that great man.

I am not charging the South with being any more lawless than some other sections of the country. You cannot find an instance where more brutality was resorted to than in Coatesville, Pa. I have here the sworn record. I have here a speech made by Theodore Roosevelt on that subject, that terrible crime that was committed by the State of Pennsylvania.

We are also thinking of what happened in California only 2 or 3 years ago when the Governor stood by and said:

> It is the proper thing to do to lynch them for certain crimes, if you care to do it, and I am thinking seriously of paroling or pardoning certain other criminals and turning them over to the mob to be lynched.

It was then that our present President spoke out and said:

> This is collective murder, and it is not to be condoned by those in high or low positions.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this does not seek to infringe upon the right of any State.

First of all, as individuals and as citizens of the United States we have a right to live in peace, in harmony, and in prosperity along with the other citizens.

I want to discuss just one other thought that has been offered here on this floor, and I am not challenging the thought, but I want to bring to your minds something that should go along with it. We have been told by my friends from the South—and I am from the South; I come from Alabama, and I make no apology for it—but we have been told that our best friends are in the South. That may be true; I am not disputing that, but I want to say to you people that the best friend the white man has is the Negro, the best friend that the American Government has is the Negro. We have never raised our voices and our hands to strike down an Executive of this Nation. We have never planted bombs in various places because we disagreed with certain theories. We have taken all that you have done to us. You have shortened our school terms and discriminated against us in a thousand other ways, but we have remained loyal. You say you are our friends. Then why not give us an equal opportunity along with you and let us develop our children the same as you do yours? This would prove your assertion of friendship. [Applause.]

My friends, it is upon the shoulders of this Congress to say to the 14,000,000 Negroes, at least 13,000,000 of whom are always in deadly fear that they will be attacked, to say to them that you are going to assure us the protection that the Constitution provides that every citizen shall enjoy. And I say to you in closing my remarks that I am speaking as one who has had some experience with the mob. I recall not so many years ago when I lived in the South and was president of an agricultural school. I was often referred to, as you heard my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] refer to me today, as being one of the leading citizens of my community, but do you know a bloodthirsty mob formed on one occasion and marched within 3 miles of my school for the purpose of snuffing out my life. I had not been charged with any crime. The only thing I had done was to stop payment on a $20 check that a fellow had secured from me by false representation. Because I would not pay the check this mob formed and marched within 3 miles of my school. I shall never forget how I stood with a Winchester rifle in my hand, how my wife stood with a pistol in her hand, waiting all night long for this mob to show up and to snuff out our lives. I did not have to commit crime to be the subject of one of these lawless mobs.

They talk about the constitutionality of the bill. It is perfectly constitutional to protect the migratory birds. It is all right and perfectly constitutional for us to go into these States and run down blind tigers. I shall never forget the other day when we had our hearing and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee was speaking on friendly terms to one of the men who had testified and said: "I hope we can do something for you."

The man replied, "Yes; I hope you will do at least as much for me as you do for the bootleggers and those who engage in the illicit manufacture of liquor."

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is constitutional. We have the right to protection. We have stood by the Government. We are going to continue to stand by the Government. I am going to vote for this bill, and I will vote for any bill that will safeguard the rights of individuals to enjoy their privileges as American citizens and protect their lives. I hope this bill will be passed overwhelmingly; and I say to you that you can do nothing that will encourage this 15,000,000 people, who are subject to mob attack, which would mean half as much as the passage of this bill. The best thing you can do to encourage them in their honest struggles to be citizens, and to be useful citizens, is to pass this piece of legislation as it has been presented to us. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHANLEY). The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill and want to expend every effort on behalf of the legislation, because I regard it as a great measure in defense of human rights. And the question of human rights raised here is that of the selfsame human rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to every man and woman of whatever race, color, or creed.

The Gavagan bill, which has public sentiment behind it, will safeguard and make more secure our constitutional rights. It serves notice on the country that no group or mob can defiantly break into jail and take a person in custody out of the hands of the law and inflict upon him injury or death, without grave responsibility resting upon the jailer and the community.

I feel this bill is necessary. I am going to vote for it believing it is necessary. It is necessary to bring about a different code of honor. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] hit the chord, in my opinion, when he said that the greatest deterrent to lynching would be education, enlightenment, and understanding. This bill, being a drastic bill, will make for all of that. Without it we shall not have the enlightenment and understanding to wipe out the crime of lynching. Every sheriff down South after the passage of this bill will undertake to educate his people to know what it means to break into jail and take a man out of the custody of the sheriff, the marshal, or other custodian. Other officials will impress upon the people of their counties that prisoners cannot with impunity be taken away by the mob and put to death by mob rule.

Oh, I know that when an atrocious crime is committed the usual reaction is to take the law into one's own hands, but education will take care of it. When people come to understand their honor is avenged by delivery to the law-enforcement officers, the desire to lynch will disappear. We had duelling in this country. Our code of honor changed in that regard. It passed away. We had feuds in this country. They have disappeared, the last ending only the other day after 100 years when a new understanding appeared on the horizon of the parties involved. Lynching will go with the coming of new viewpoints. The bill under debate will impress upon the country the desirability of compliance with law and order. Let the States pass drastic laws to punish atrocious crimes. But let all obey the fundamental law of the country—our Constitution.

Now, it is my sincere hope that this bill, when enacted into law, will never be applied. May all of our people come to a better understanding of the value of human rights. No innocent man should be put to death at the hands of the mob, and no man should be deprived of his constitutional right to be tried by due process of law. The passage of this bill will make people think and arrive at a different understanding which will forever blot out lynching.

Finally, the bill is, in my judgment, constitutional. It does not interfere with any of the rights of the States. On the contrary, I regard it as necessary in order to uphold the law and rights of the States. Only when the authority of the State breaks down does the Federal Government come in under the bill. The Supreme Court of the United States to preserve the constitutional rights of persons charged with crime, has more than once extended its arm to uphold the guaranties set forth in fifth and fourteenth amendments of the United States Constitution, where these have been threatened by the States. Only the other day Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, in the outstanding case of the National Labor Relations Board against the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, stated that the Court could impose a sanction for the enforcement of a judicial decree. And in the opinion in that case it was further said Congress could also impose a sanction adding that the fact that in one case it was a judicial sanction and in the other a legislative one, was not an essential difference in determining its propriety. In the crime of lynching very often more than one State is involved. There may be a conspiracy in one State, the person lynched may be seized in another, and the actual lynching may take place in a third State. The bill is necessary to reach those guilty of lynching. This bill has for its purpose the preservation of the fundamental rights guaranteed by our Constitution, that no man shall be deprived of his life without due process of law and shall be afforded the equal protection of the laws. These rights have been lost to some and as long as there is any probability of lynching in the future this bill is necessary and ought to be passed by the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HIGGINS] such time as he may require.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased at the opportunity afforded me to say a few words in behalf of the passage of the Gavagan antilynching bill now before the House for consideration. May I take this opportunity to say that the colored people of America should be everlastingly indebted to that able and courageous Representative from New York, the Honorable JOSEPH A. GAVAGAN, and to his aide in sponsoring this legislation, the capable and tireless Representative from Illinois, the Honorable RAYMOND S. MCKEOUGH. Both men have worked untiringly to bring this matter before the House for consideration, and I am confidently sure that the great colored population of this country will always hold in high regard these two men who, above all others, are more responsible for the passage of this legislation than any other men in Congress.

The primary objective of this legislation is to put a stop to the seemingly endless series of mob murders which have disgraced America before the world. The problem is a national one and calls for action by Congress, for the reason that in certain sections of our country State and local authorities have little or no regard for the spiritual law, not to mention the State laws, as far as permitting lynchings to go unpunished. The Gavagan-McKeough bill has the necessary teeth in it to change completely the un-American practice of lynching that is, in fact, looked upon as law in many of the Southern States in this country. It is the duty of the Federal Government to assure its citizens of orderly and legal procedure before constituted authorities in such criminal cases. When States and their officials have been derelict in this duty, then the Federal Government must intervene to correct the situation and restore the orderly process of law which guarantees equal protection before the law to all men. The best evidence at hand to demonstrate the fallacy of the argument that the respective States do not permit lynchings is the fact that thousands of men and women, white and black, have been lynched during the past generation and no punishment was inflicted upon more than 99 percent guilty of lynching by State authorities.

The question of the constitutionality of any antilynching legislation may arise in days to come, but it seems to me that the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, providing, as it does, that no State—

> Shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law * * * and Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article—establishes the fact that it is the duty of the Congress, under the Constitution, to enact such laws as may be needful to assure that no State shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The Supreme Court in several opinions has given its interpretation of the equal-protection clause of the Constitution. The matter has become one of great national concern. The President of the United States has taken occasion to denounce this vile form of collective murder and set forth that we cannot and do not excuse those in high or low places who condone the lynch law.

Let us, through the passage of the Gavagan-McKeough bill, eradicate from American life the vicious and un-American system of lynching, incidents of which have been a blot upon the pages of our history. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the opportunity to speak, and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the time remaining to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKEOUGH].

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I know of no occasion on which I could better defend my appearance before the membership of this body than an occasion such as this, when the personnel of the Congress is asked to consider one of the most humane requirements with relation to legislation that has come before the Congresses of this, our common country, in many, many years. I presume that if an explanation be necessary for my taking the time of those who comprise this great body to discuss a matter such as this, it is most naturally explained by reason of the fact that I come from a people who, next to their love of God, love liberty and justice to the extent that they are so well known in that respect that no further statement from me is required. I am Irish, and because I am, not only do I love my God but likewise I love liberty and I love justice. There is no threat incident to my position with relation to this antilynching legislation. I support it because I believe in law and order.

I do not know how anyone under the guise of constitutional objection or otherwise might appear on the floor of Congress to oppose the enactment of an antilynching law. It is beyond my power of comprehension that any man or any woman from any State in this glorious Union of ours would ever rise to speak in opposition to the enactment of a law that requires in its application the very fundamental of government that we give virile life to that declaration of Thomas Jefferson that all men are created equal. The founders of this Government breathed the soul of that understanding into the Constitution of our Nation when they met in Philadelphia and adopted what has proved to be the greatest instrument of liberty in all the history of the world. Yea! I say to you, if this law be not constitutional, then we make a mockery of the Declaration of Independence; we nullify all that we love in the Constitution. Ah! but more than that; we destroy all that is symbolized in the glorious flag of our country, which appeared on the battlefields of Europe in the recent World War to guarantee that people might have justice and live under whatever kind of government they desired. The late Woodrow Wilson, our glorious war President, prompted the declaration of war that we might protect life on the high seas of the world.

Despite this, we find in the Congress of our country men who have secured for themselves the great reputation as statesmen who are taking the position today that if this law is enacted we destroy the sacred principle of States' rights. I yield to none in my affection for the principle of States' rights; no, I yield to none on that principle but believe the principle of States' rights is not involved in this law. We protect that principle when we declare, as proposed in this bill, that where the local officers of the States fail in their duty, the strong arm of the Federal Government then moves in. Who among you can attack the philosophy of this kind of a democratic government? I know none who successfully can.

I understand, I believe, as fully as anyone who has been denied a training in the law what the Constitution of our country represents; and happily, I might add, in no way attempting to become facetious, I am not handicapped by preconceived conclusions as I consider this measure which, it appears, the rigidity of thought due to training in the law imposes.

All who opposed the enactment of this legislation today talked of the unconstitutionality of the Gavagan antilynching bill. They cite opinions of the Supreme Court to sustain this contention; but, strangely, I note carved in the marble over the entrance to the Supreme Court the following words: "Equal justice under law." This is all that the Gavagan bill seeks to secure, and it is therefore difficult to understand why there should be such vigorous opposition to its enactment. May I say at this time that it was a pleasure for me to have cooperated with my warm personal friend, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], the sponsor of this measure, as well as with the distinguished Member from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], in helping to secure the necessary 218 signatures on the discharge petition and thus insure consideration of this fundamentally important legislation by the present Congress.

Those of the opposition should have no quarrel with any of us who support this measure, because, as I have previously said, we have taken the position that we have given the local officers of the States 30 days within which to function in the interest of law and order before the Federal Government intervenes.

I was somewhat amused by the remarks of the learned gentleman, well schooled in the law, always looked upon as a constitutional authority, the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who referred, in passing, to the fact that this is an exposition of the great concentration of government in a central, Federal body, and the gentleman referred to the racketeers and the gangsters of the large cosmopolitan cities of our country. I come from Chicago, and I make no apology for the splendid record of law and order that is maintained by this great city of my birth.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOUGH. I am sorry; I have not the time.

I say to those who seek to include racketeers and gangsters in this proposed legislation that under the Federal law which provided for an income tax, there were sent to Federal prisons from Chicago, as well as from other large, cosmopolitan cities, by the Federal Government, many racketeers and gangsters who had received large profits during the days of prohibition, and there was no complaint made by local officers of the various States. And, incidentally, what group in the Congress was it, among those representing the various sections of the country, that was most responsible for the enactment of prohibition which made a farce of the fundamental rights of the people in our democracy by denying to our people for all too long a period of time the right to drink the beverages of their choice.

Who were in the solid block that voted in this House for prohibition? It was not those who represented Chicago, or those who represented New York City. No; it was those from the section of our country who now protest the enactment of antilynching legislation on the basis it is unconstitutional. Was there any place in our great country where there was a clearer demarcation of the line of support for prohibition than in the Southland? Now, they talk about the Constitution, when all that those who seek to pass this bill desire is that the Federal Government may move in when the local officer moves out, or fails to move at all, and say to those we are required to protect, "We give you the strong arm of the Federal Government that you may be secure in your God-given rights."

Unhappily leaders of mobs cannot be prosecuted by the Federal Government under the Federal income-tax laws in that the only profit such un-American procedure develops is the added shame that rightfully belongs to those who lead and participate in such unlawful actions. Shame, I regret to add, is not considered profitable.

I say, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, when the roll is called I accept the challenge of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I am willing to meet the issue as man to man, and when the names are called, while I know it is dangerous to be a prophet, I prophesy to the great glory of this Government and to the great honor of those who will vote in the affirmative, that, roughly, 275 votes will go out to the country as an indication that the Seventy-fifth Congress, as made up in the House of Representatives, is the answer to that challenge, and will show that we love democracy and that we will protect every man, woman, and child, regardless of his creed or his color, by passing this antilynching legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act the phrase "mob or riotous assemblage", when used in this act, shall mean an assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert without authority of law to kill or injure any person in the custody of any peace officer with the purpose or consequence of depriving such person of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: On page 1, strike out all of lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That for the purpose of this act the phrase 'mob or riotous assemblage' when used in this act shall mean an assemblage composed of two or more persons acting in concert without authority of law to kill, injure, or kidnap any person with the purpose or consequence of depriving such person of due process of law and the equal protection of the law."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill, and I wish to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am sorry, but I must refuse to reserve the point.

Mr. Chairman, in spite of the sophistries uttered in the attack on this bill as represented by the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], this bill provides for the taking of a prisoner from the possession or authority of a duly constituted peace officer by a mob of three or more persons for the purpose of inflicting bodily injury or death upon the prisoner, and not until these three conditions exist does this bill become operative. The gentleman's amendment refers to the crime of kidnaping, entirely different from the crime we are attempting to legislate in this bill. The crime of kidnaping is already provided for by Federal statute, its detection, prevention, and punishment. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, within the rules of the House the amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COLMER. I do not desire to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment to the first section of the bill to include kidnaping in addition to the crime of lynching, but in addition thereto the gentleman, by his amendment, strikes out the words in line 7 "in the custody of any peace officer." The gentleman's amendment would extend the class to which this bill applies to kidnaping. The addition of kidnaping might not be objectionable, but this bill applies to the death or injury of persons "in the custody of a peace officer", while the proposed amendment takes those words, quoted, out of the bill. The Chair does not think the amendment is germane, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COLMER: Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two", and in line 7, strike out the words "in the custody of any peace officer."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The ruling of the Chair just made on the previous amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi will apply to this amendment, as to the second provision in the amendment striking out the language of the bill "in the custody of any peace officer." The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had hoped, in view of the discussion that was had here the other day between the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and myself on the question of gang murders, that the point of order would not be made against this amendment. Of course, I shall not challenge the ruling of the Chair; that is water over the mill, but I did want an opportunity for this House to vote upon the question as to whether or not it is just as unlawful to commit murder, whether it be in the South, the North, the East, or the West, by a gang or any other lawless mob. There was a lynching in my State since this bill began to be considered. I am just as sorry for that, and I deplore it just as deeply, as any of you so-called defenders of the colored people's rights. I am sure that I deplore that just as deeply as does the distinguished gentleman from New York, who is advocating this monstrosity, must have resented and deplored the gang murders that have gone on in his great city of New York.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed in order.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, murder is murder wherever it occurs and under whatever conditions it is engineered. We do not want lynching any more than I take it the gentleman from New York wants gang murders, but they are all on a parity, and if it is constitutional for the American Congress to legislate in the one field, then it ought to be just as constitutional for it to legislate in the other. I say, as one who served as prosecuting attorney for 13 years in my State and who has had this problem to deal with first-hand, that in this idle gesture that you are making you are going to do the cause of the prevention of lynching more harm than has ever been done it before. I say to you, as one who personally went out and prevented mob violence on one occasion as a district attorney, that you, by this idle—and I hate to say—political gesture—and I will not say it—are going to put these people whom you say you are defending in a most unsatisfactory and uncertain position. As has already been pointed out on the floor of the House today, you are going to place these officers of the law in a position where they will be afraid to take these men charged with these atrocious crimes into their custody so that they will not have to be met with the proposition enacted in this law. I am no constitutional lawyer. I am not even as fair a lawyer as the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] said I was when he was here the other day. Certainly I do not put myself in the class of the Father of his Country, George Washington, nor with that great statesman, Thomas Jefferson, and my respect for the Deity would refrain from making any further comparison, such as was made here the other day. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the following table furnished me by the Library of Congress shows the crime conditions with reference to homicide in the city of New York, the home of Mr. GAVAGAN. This table shows that murder in this city is appalling compared with the negligible lynching in the country. My amendment would give the gentleman a dose of his own medicine by placing gang murders in the same category with lynching.

New York City, period 1930–35

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to object, but we want to finish this bill tonight. The House is going to adjourn over until Monday and we want to finish tonight, so, sorry as I am, I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not with any hope that I can stay the hand that is raised to strike this blow that I arise to speak in opposition to this measure having for its purpose and the practical effects of which will be to open old wounds and attempt to heap scorn and derision on one part of the country to the pleasure and elation of another section.

I cannot stop you who are determined to force this bill through. You have the strength to do it, but you do not have the right—neither the moral nor legal right—and I would be lacking in courage and shirking the discharge of my duty were I to remain silent and fail to lift my voice in protest and sound a warning—a warning which you may refuse to hear now, but the echo of which sooner or later will resound with such forces as will not only open your ears and cause you to hear but will jar your vision to a realization of the error you are committing today.

Let us strip this thing of its sham and pretense. No one is deceived. You parade under the guise of wanting to blot out crime. That is the excuse you offer for sponsoring this bill, but the veil you wear is so transparent that your real purpose is revealed rather than concealed. You primarily desire to rebuke, embarrass, and humiliate the Southland, and at the same stroke, for political purposes, make a gesture calculated to win political support from the Negro race. Thus motivated you proceed in the name of human rights and liberty, as you claim, and some of you, particularly the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], have gone so far as to say that on this issue human rights rise above the Constitution. May I remind you that those of you who take that position and share that view are resorting to the same argument in support of this bill that the mobster would offer in support of the excuse or alibi he makes for the lynching he has committed. You say you want to or are willing to go beyond the limitations of the Federal Constitution and exercise a power you do not have under its provisions in your zeal to punish and seek retribution from those who may commit a certain type of reprehensible crime. The mobster, using the same logic and reasoning you are employing, says he has ignored the law and the Constitution because the process and results of the law are too slow and uncertain, and because he wants to uphold the honor and defend the virtue of womanhood.

No one has seriously contended this measure is constitutional. It is not expected that any impartial court will hold it to be. It must ultimately be conceded that you have no legal right to pass this law and hurl this slur and insult into the face of the Southern States.

There is no need for it. If there was ever an occasion and condition that would have justified Federal intrusion on the rights of States by legislation of this character that time has passed because the undisputed record contained in the minority report of the committee on this bill shows the crime of lynching was committed only eight or nine times last year—1936—throughout the whole United States, with a population of nearly 130,000,000, whereas in the decade from 1904 to 1914, with a population of 90,000,000, there was an average of 69 lynchings per year. The record, therefore, reveals in 22 years a decrease in total number of lynchings of over 800 percent, with an increase of 44 percent in our population. This showing and progress warrant and justify the statement that if permitted to continue without the unlawful interference you propose by the enactment of this law, within another 10 years the crime would seldom, if ever, occur. By the general enlightenment of the people and an increasing vigilance on the part of law-enforcement officers, we are swiftly and surely banishing this evil from our midst. This law you want to pass will only serve to arouse resentment and produce an agitation that may rise in intensity to the extent that it will defeat the very objectives you seek. The result will be that you are prolonging this evil, retarding its removal, and with this slur seriously handicapping the fine womanhood and manhood of the South, who know their problems better than you and who are far more capable of applying an effective remedy. [Applause.]

This law is not going to stop lynching; neither is it going to promote law enforcement. In the first place, in your eagerness and haste to sting, you have so loosely drafted this bill that there are thousands of justices of the peace in the South who never saw but one law book—the statutes of their State—who are possessed of sufficient judicial intelligence to know how the penalties of this law may be evaded. Again, when you undertake to enforce the provisions of this law by trying the cases in the Federal courts, do you not realize that you must appeal to jurors composed of citizens whom you now seek to condemn? You say they are unwilling to enforce the law against murderous lynching; do you expect by the passage of this bill to stimulate their desire for law enforcement? If, serving as jurors, they would acquit the lynchers under the State law, I can see no justification for the hope that as jurors they would convict for the same offense under a Federal statute.

Again I assert you have no moral right to pass this law. Murder is a crime, whether produced below the Mason and Dixon's line by a rope or torch in the hands of a mob, or by machine guns or sawed-off shotguns in the hands of gangsters on the avenues of Chicago and New York.

It has been wisely said that charity should begin at home. With equal truth and emphasis we may declare that reform should first be accomplished by those who advocate it. I remind the sponsors of this bill that you have not met this challenge and have already failed to conform to one of the long-established principles and maxims of equity by not coming with clean hands. You are straining at a gnat while you swallow a camel. [Applause.] When you left New York on this so-called humanitarian mission to stamp out crime in the South, you left the land where the harvest is great and the laborers are few, and journeyed to fields where the grain has already been gathered. You propose to come into the South with your insulting intrusion to remove the stain of a few drops of blood here and there while you wade through pools of blood from the bodies of murder victims in your own streets and within the confines of your own premises. [Applause.] When you have mopped from the sidewalks of New York the blood of innocent children who, while at play, were shot down like rats by gangsters, when you show us that you can keep crime from thriving and operating practically at will in your own bailiwick, when you have squelched the stench of the corruption in which you wallow in the largest and, as you would proclaim, the most civilized city in the world, then, but not until then, are we in the South ready or willing to concede that your standard of morals, of virtue, of citizenship, of society, and respect and obedience to law are superior to ours. He who in moments of weakness may yield to impulses and temptation, cannot safely follow an habitual drunkard who preaches without practicing reform. [Applause.]

The efforts of some of you from New York City to lead this great reform movement and in your denouncements against this crime remind me very much of the Negro boy who was so black that all of his white friends called him "Midnight." He was not resentful of the white man's thus referring to his color and black features, but a yellow Negro, thinking to emphasize the distinction between their colors, hollered across the street to him, "Hello, thar, Midnight", and the black boy replied, "Shut up; you is about a quarter to 12 yourself", so if the lynching pot is black in the South, the gangsters kettle in New York is blacker.

I should like to direct your attention and invite you to read the parable spoken by our Lord, to His disciples and the multitudes assembled, more than 1,900 years ago when He walked with them here on earth and when He said:

Can the blind lead the blind? Shall they not both fall into the ditch?

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye but perceiveth not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Why dost thou say to thy brother, "Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye", when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shall thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

Paraphrasing the language and admonition of the Savior in the parable just quoted, I say to you who are sponsoring this bill and making this hypocritical gesture to the gullible who sit in the grandstand ready to applaud, solve your own crime problems before you undertake to perform an illegal, major operation on ours, without our consent and over our protest. You will do well to apply your energies and devote your talents to silencing the ring of machine-gun fire from organized gangs thriving on corrupt political protection in the city of New York, and if you will learn how to protect your innocent citizenship on your own avenues, you can honorably wear the crown of glory you strive to place on your brow. [Applause.]

The same form of hypocrisy denounced by our Lord in this parable parades on the floor of this House today, robed in a false claim of being the protector and promoter of great humanitarian rights, and in your desire and anxiety to cast a slur and heap scorn and ridicule on your southern neighbor by the enactment of this law in flagrant violation of the Constitution you have sworn to uphold, you bring down on your own heads the righteous condemnation of all who are willing to look beyond the screen of pretense you have attempted to set up as a shield to hide the diabolical purposes you propose to accomplish.

If left alone, the South will blot out forever this evil about which you complain. The strides that have been made in this direction are more than reassuring and point with certainty to this end, but we of the South deny that the city of New York has the superior enlightenment, wisdom, and moral integrity to show us the way. [Applause.]

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 3 minutes.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, we were very much interested this afternoon in the chart that was presented by the chairman of our committee showing a very decided reduction in the number of lynchings, particularly in the part of the country whence he comes. That is very creditable indeed. It is very praiseworthy, and the public in those communities is entitled to our congratulations; but, on the other hand, let me ask these gentlemen from those States, What have you done to punish those who participated in those eight lynchings? What will be done with reference to the punishment that should be meted out, undoubtedly, to those who perpetrated that dastardly crime in one of the States in the South yesterday? That is a very pertinent question.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Not just now.

There were eight too many lynchings last and three too many this year. The lynching yesterday was terrible and gruesome and unspeakable—too horrible to relate. I shall not detail at this time the awful scene.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. CELLER. No. The gentlemen from your State and elsewhere, I know, mean to do right. Your communities, however, are to blame. But we cannot close our eyes to certain facts which are as clear as day.

Mr. COLMER. I understood that the gentleman asked a question. I just wanted to answer him. I will be very brief.

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Much has been said about this unfortunate lynching in Mississippi 2 days ago, but nothing has been said about the fact that in my State, Mississippi, a white man now is awaiting death by the noose because, peculiar though it may seem, of the torch murder of 2 Negroes.

Mr. CELLER. I am very happy to hear that. There would be no need for the legislation if lynchers were punished. But I ask, Why is it that in the gentleman's State and other States—why is it that, despite what the gentleman says, there can be the horrible spectacle that was witnessed in the State of Mississippi day before yesterday?

Mr. COLMER. What about the horrible crimes committed in New York?

Mr. CELLER. We have crimes in New York. We arrest the culprits. They must stand trial. Our city's populace loathe these criminals. They get no comfort from our people. Our people do not applaud or participate in these murders. We at least try to bring the perpetrators to justice. What prosecutions are going to eventuate in the gentleman's State of Mississippi? A Federal judge, George C. Holt, in 1911 stated that there were over 300,000 lynchers in the country that have gone afoul of the law and nothing has been done by way of meting out punishment to them. Since 1911 how many more are there? There is all manner and kind of subterfuge, there is all manner and kind of evasion, when it comes to judgment that should be placed upon those culprits, upon those who run afoul of your murder statutes. Certainly it does not lie in the mouth of anyone to proclaim this decrease in lynching and, on the other hand, say nothing about the perpetrators of the eight lynchings last year or the three lynchings up to date this year. When it comes to the question of decrease, what about the narrowly averted lynchings? The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People tell that in 1935 there were 102 cases of narrowly averted lynchings. Apparently mobs and mob hysteria are not decreasing. That does not square very well with the so-called decrease that we heard about today. In 1936, again, there probably were over a hundred almost-perpetrated lynchings.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLAR. Something was stated with reference to the streets of New York and the streets of Chicago. We do have crimes on our streets; we do have malefactors of the law, but we punish them. [Laughter.] That is our pride; we punish them. You can laugh all you like, but you can look at the statistics, and after you look at the statistics of New York and the other large centers of population, you will find beyond peradventure of doubt at least that the populace of those cities deplore and denounce lynch law in those cities. They at least demand arrests and trials. There are no lynchings. There is no connivance by any manner of means on the part of the citizenry of those communities when it comes to murder, when it comes to racketeering, and when it comes to gansterism. New Yorkers do not lend any aid and comfort to these malefactors. They do not give them asylum, as some citizens in some States protect lynchers.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. But what can you say with reference to certain of those communities where there is utter connivance in the crime lynching; where the sheriffs, the constables, the marshals, and the county overseers raise no finger to arrest or develop punishment of these culprits?

In a word, I believe that the only remedy for lynching is to restore the confidence of society in the just, prompt, and efficient trial and punishment of lynchers. Virginia is free of lynchings. It has and enforces its lynch law.

Finally it may be asserted with reasonable confidence that the effectiveness or ineffectiveness of the judicial system and the enforcement of law during any given period has indirectly affected the number of lynchings. (P. L. Black, Lynching in Iowa.)

In other words, lynchings rise or fall with the degree of enforcement of murder and lynching statutes. Lack of enforcement surely has caused the crime of lynching. Punish mobs and mob violence and lynchings will disappear.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, realizing that there is probably nothing I could say that would affect the final vote on this vicious measure, which is being jammed through Congress by high pressure and false propaganda, I would remain silent on this occasion were it not that my silence might be misunderstood.

There has been a great deal of debate in the cloakroom and in the corridors about changing the name of this so-called antilynching bill. For my part, I think it should be called "a bill to encourage rape", since that will probably be its ultimate effect—if it ever becomes law.

There are some Members, however, who think it should be called "a bill to make Harlem safe for Tammany." [Laughter.]

This is not a new proposition. It is simply the old force bill of carpetbag days in a little different form. In those days it was sponsored by corrupt Republican carpetbaggers—the most vicious set of thieves that ever robbed and plundered and murdered the helpless white people of the Southern States.

A few demagogues on the Republican side brought this measure in and shoved it through the House in 1922. The more decent members of that party became ashamed of it and let it die in the Senate.

Today the measure is brought in here fostered by an irresponsible element of so-called Democrats for the purpose of taking care of their own political hides at home. Their dishonest duplicity not only runs through this entire debate but it is written into the face of the bill, as I shall show in the course of these remarks. They are simply hurling their insulting charges and insinuations at the white people of the South in order to "bunk" a few Negro voters in their own districts. It is useless to argue with such men under these circumstances.

We have just heard two of the ablest speeches ever delivered on this floor against this vicious measure—one by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the other by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. They might as well have been speaking in Statuary Hall. This House is lashed into a fury of insanity by the inspired propaganda for this measure, and no appeal to reason will have any effect.

The sponsors of this bill are pretending to do so in the interest of the Negroes, when in fact they are the worst enemies to the peace, the happiness, and prosperity of the Negroes of this country to be found in public life today. You Members who vote for this bill will be doing the innocent Negroes of this country an irreparable injury, to say nothing of the damage you are doing to the white people of the land.

I am a far better friend to the Negroes than any man who sponsors or supports this measure. I know what this agitation does to him. The Negro is a tenant at sufferance wherever he comes in contact with the white man. His very existence in the community depends upon the peaceful relationship existing between him and the white people around him. Disturb that relationship, as the passage of this measure would do, and the Negro will be the sufferer. He is no longer an economic asset to the South, if he ever was. If you stir dissension between the whites and blacks, the Negro must move on. I have seen whole communities cleared of Negro tenants in 1 year because of disturbances of this character.

This bill will encourage the more vicious element of the Negro race to attack white women and to perpetrate other crimes for which the innocent Negroes will be made to suffer. But you Members who are supporting this bill do not care anything about the innocent Negroes. You do not even pretend to protect the innocent Negro by this bill, as I shall show in a moment.

When this measure was before the Congress on a former occasion, a brutal Negro raped a white girl here on the Capitol Grounds. She was a telephone operator down at the Driscoll Hotel, right here at the foot of Capitol Hill, and lived just beyond the Library of Congress. She worked in the evenings and had to go home around 12 o'clock at night. This vicious brute watched her to see which way she went, and finally waylaid her on the shaded curved walk in front of the south wing of the Library, just across the street from the House Office Building, dragged her into the underbrush, choked and beat her to insensibility, outraged her, and left her lying there, a living example of the consequences of the legislative perfidy you are about to perpetrate. That is what you are encouraging with this measure which you pretend is designed to protect the innocent. [Applause.]

Similar attacks increased all over the country and finally burst out in horrible race riots, in which, as usual, the Negroes became the chief sufferers. Pass this measure and stir this trouble anew, and you will probably clear whole counties in the South of their Negro populations. Where will they go? Shall we send them to New York to become the wards of Tammany Hall? Shall we send them to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois? Shall we send them to Washington? Shall we send them into other Northern States to pad your relief rolls, add to your burdens, and intensify a growing trouble that you people do not understand or know how to cope with?

One man in this House from one of the largest cities in a Northern State told me on yesterday that three-fourths of the people on relief in his city were Negroes. It would be interesting to know the number of Negroes on relief in Harlem—New York—Pittsburgh, Pa., and other places where pompous politicians are boasting of their power and pandering to that element for support.

Take it here in the District of Columbia, the Nation's Capital. In 1930, according to the Government census, there were 132,000 Negroes in the District of Columbia. Yet, according to the testimony given before the Committee on Appropriations of this House on March 4, 1937, by Mr. Rufus S. Lust, president of the Washington Taxpayers' Association, 137,000 different Negroes have been given relief, at one time or another, in the District of Columbia since 1932. They have crowded in here by the thousands, and I am sure they have done the same thing in other cities in the Northern States. Do you want the rest of them?

You would think, to hear some flannel-mouthed demagogues talk, that the people of the South delighted in lynching Negroes. They exploit, with malignant pleasure, every instance in which a Negro is put to death. But they never talk of the horrible instances that drove the people to such madness, nor do they ever give credit for the tremendous battles that have been waged by the white people of the South to prevent lynchings, even in the face of the most shocking outrages.

They give no credit for the thousands of worthy peace officers of the South who are constantly taking their lives in their own hands and are often killed or injured trying to protect Negroes who have perpetrated such heinous crimes as to stir within the breasts of home-loving, law-abiding white men the most powerful resentments that ever beat against the battlements of self-restraint.

They give no credit to the white people of the South who have spent millions of dollars rushing their State militia to the scenes of such crimes in order to prevent the people of an outraged community from taking the law into their own hands.

Under such circumstances our peace officers, and all their deputies, and invariably National Guards, have been used to protect not only the accused but also the innocent Negroes from mob violence until public excitement died down.

But this bill does not pretend to protect the innocent man at all. Oh, what a fraud, what a mockery! What a deception, for men to stand on this floor and pretend that this bill will stop lynching, when it throws the innocent man to the mob and takes away from the guilty culprit even the protection he now has!

The only defense you men who vote for this bill will have when the people call you to account next year will be to plead your ignorance of its contents and its consequences. You are going to find that there is a great difference between running on the ignorance or shortcomings of an opponent and pleading your own ignorance, cowardice, or stupidity as justification for your votes in this House.

This bill does not pretend to protect an innocent Negro, or one who is not under arrest, and all of you know it. It only applies when a mob of "three or more persons acting in concert * * * to kill or injure any person in the custody of a peace officer." That simply takes away the protection these Negroes now have. It subjects the officer who has the culprit in charge to a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for 5 years in the Federal penitentiary, and compels the taxpayers of the county in which a Negro rapist is lynched, or through which he is even taken by the mob, to a penalty of $10,000, to be paid to the family of the deceased.

That simply means that an officer is deterred from attempting to do his duty. If the mob beats him to the victim, then he and his country are in the clear. I wonder how many peace officers you think are going to rush in, take all the risks involved, subject themselves and their bondsmen to a penalty of $5,000, themselves to a term of 5 years in the Federal penitentiary, and the hard-working taxpayers of the county, including the family of the woman who has been outraged, to the payment of $10,000 to the family of a Negro brute who outrages and murders a defenseless, helpless, innocent woman or child. It might not be out of place to inquire if there is anybody who thinks that the family of such a fiend would ever live to collect that penalty.

As an example of legislative stupidity I submit that this bill is just about the last word.

And now I am going to show that as an example of legislative dishonesty it is without a parallel. It does not protect the innocent at all, and does not pretend to. A mob can form and go out and lynch all the Negroes or all the white people in a community, and this bill will not apply—unless the people lynched are "in the custody of a peace officer." They pretend that the white people of the South are lynching innocent Negroes, and then they fail to protect an innocent man who is not in the custody of a peace officer. Why did they do that? I will tell you why. They were afraid they would protect innocent people from the gang murderers in their own States and protect the innocent Negroes who are killed by the thousands in race riots in those States. They knew that if they applied the same penalties to their own officials, or their own counties, they are trying to impose upon the South, they could never come back to Congress.

You see, a bunch of racketeers in New York or Chicago or Pittsburgh or Jersey City, or anywhere else in the country, could go in and kill as many people as they want to and this bill would not apply, even if the peace officer stood by and watched the killings or even participated in the mob, so long as the victims were not under arrest.

No wonder Lindbergh moved to England to get protection for his wife and child from the ruthless racketeers so studiously and carefully protected by this bill.

There were more Negroes killed in one race riot in Chicago or in one race riot in Springfield, Ill., the former home of Abraham Lincoln, or in the race riot in East St. Louis than have been lynched in the South since the Civil War. They are going to have a race riot in New York one of these days that will be the most disastrous confusion of tongues, perhaps, that has ever happened on this continent, but the innocent women and children who are killed in such a riot will not be protected by this bill, because they will not have committed any crime, and therefore will not be in the "custody of a peace officer."

I am utterly surprised to see our Jewish friends advocating this monstrosity. I never knew until I came to Congress that there was really any anti-Semitic sentiment in the Eastern States. We do not have many Jews in my section of the country, and those we do have are, as a rule, merchants, tradesmen, lawyers, etc., who get along well and are always treated with the utmost respect. But I find that conditions are different in the East, and growing worse. Now, suppose this feeling is intensified until there is an outbreak against the Jewish people along the Atlantic seaboard. This bill would not protect them so long as they are not "in the custody of a peace officer." They can lynch every Jew in New York, in New Jersey, or Massachusetts, or any other State, but so long as they are not under arrest or "in the custody of a peace officer" they would not be protected by this law.

You are in a great deal more danger of outbreaks of this kind in the Eastern States than we are of race troubles in the South if you will just let us alone.

Let me say to our friends from the Pacific coast who are supporting this measure, that less than 30 years ago you people were in a frenzy of excitement and fear over the danger of the "yellow peril." You called aloud for help, and the white people of the South responded to a man. It was the call of the race, the call of a white civilization. One Congressman from the Pacific coast told me that he never knew a southern Democrat to falter.

Some of you are now manifesting your gratitude by supporting this vicious measure which you know, and which you admit privately, is an outrage, the only object of which is to harass and abuse the white people of the South, the best friends you had in the hour of your own danger. I wonder if the people of the West will support you in this manifestation of ingratitude.

In the Literary Digest of April 10, 1937, appears an article under the heading—

Sex crime wave alarms United States. Police grope for method to stem rising tide of perversion.

Then the article proceeds to tell what has recently occurred in Detroit, Mich., and which should be a warning to the people of that section of the country that instead of punishing the South you are merely piling up trouble for yourselves. The article reads as follows:

In Detroit, Bernice Onisko, 17, was beaten, ravished, and strangled on March 6 within 150 feet of her home. She was returning from confession at a nearby church when attacked. Police rounded up and questioned more than 200 suspects; found no killer.

As if the Onisko case had opened a Pandora's box of evil passions, more than 75 women and girls were attacked or molested in their homes or on Detroit streets within the next few weeks.

They caught one Negro who had raped a white girl on the library grounds in Detroit. He grabbed her one night as she walked along a shaded path, put his hand over her mouth, dragged her into the shrubbery, choked her and beat her almost to death, ravished her and left her to drag her way back to the path to give the alarm. They caught him, went through the form of a trial, and sentenced him to a term in the penitentiary. They have no capital punishment in the State of Michigan, so the worst these criminals can get is a term in the penitentiary, which is something on the order of a sit-down vacation, since they have about succeeded in outlawing every kind of work that a convict can do in that State.

The first thing they know, Detroit will break forth into the flames of a race riot. Decent white people are not going to sit supinely by and let these brutes outrage defenseless women in this manner, law or no law. You cannot expect people to continue to maintain their composure and self-control under conditions of this kind.

I remember on one occasion a little woman in one of the counties which I represent was dressing to go to a church meeting, when she saw in the mirror the reflection of a Negro brute entering the window. She reached and got her husband's pistol, but she was so badly frightened that she was too weak to pull the trigger. He took the gun from her trembling hand, put it in his pocket, outraged her, and took a razor and cut her throat from ear to ear and left her weltering in her own blood in the parlor of her own home. He went home and told his wife what he had done and she exposed him. He confessed and gave up the pistol he had taken from the woman's hand, and told them where to find the razor he had used to kill her.

On another occasion, there was a Negro in a county jail in a district adjoining mine. The jailer had made a trusty of him and sent him out to his home one day to get some article or to take a message to his family. The jailer had a beautiful daughter about 16 years of age. This Negro conceived the idea of outraging her, but there were obstacles in his way. In order to accomplish his purpose, he first had to kill her mother. As soon as he entered the home, this poor mother sensed his purpose and rushed between him and his intended victim. He cut her throat with a razor, but she held her throat with her hand, screamed as best she could, making a gurgling sound, and fought that beast off till her daughter could escape, then fell exhausted, and expired.

Suppose that had been your wife or mother, Mr. GAVAGAN, or of any of the rest of you advocates of this measure. How long do you think you would have remained cool and collected, as you pretend to be now?

Yet, in the face of those conditions, the South has fought the evil of lynching and reduced it to a minimum.

Now, the truth is that this bill will not protect anybody, and I do not believe its sponsors intend to protect anybody by it. I do not believe that any intelligent man thinks for a moment that this measure will prevent a single lynching or save the life of a single human being; but, on the other hand, every intelligent man, it seems to me, is bound to know that it will encourage outbreaks, leave the innocent exposed to the mob, and take away the protection the guilty now have.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are told that this is just the beginning of a series of drives to destroy the color line and try to force race amalgamation on the American people. If they should succeed, America would sink into the mire of mongrelism; and instead of the proud Nation, the proud civilization we now enjoy, this country would go down to future generations inhabited by a mongrel race. God forbid that such a tragedy should ever befall my native land!

One Member from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], I understand, has already introduced a bill to wipe out segregation in the District of Columbia—force Negroes and whites to attend the same schools, the same theaters, patronize the same hotels and restaurants. Mr. O'CONNOR of New York stated on the floor that he favored such a measure and hoped the gentleman from Connecticut would pursue it.

That would ruin the District of Columbia. If that measure should pass and be signed by the President, it would bring chaos to the District. As long as it is even pending, with the possibility or threat of passage, a man would be crazy to buy property in the District of Columbia. If it ever does pass during my service in this House, then I am ready to vote to move the Capital to some other place.

I can tell the gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from New York that they are not going to force social equality on the South. You may coax the rest of the Negroes into New York and Connecticut, Michigan, Massachusetts, Illinois, and other Northern States, but the white people of the South are never going to submit to racial equality. The Negroes are there, and we treat them better than they are treated anywhere else on the face of the earth. We are not responsible for their presence in the South, but we are responsible for maintaining our white civilization. The Negroes were thrust upon us through the unfortunate instrumentality of slavery. We did not reduce them to slavery; we bought them from the people of the North; and let me say in that connection that they did not reduce the Negroes to slavery, because they were slaves in Africa before the American slave traders ever purchased them. Slavery was the worst curse the South has ever experienced and the greatest blessing the Negro had ever known up to that time. It elevated him from the position of savage to that of servant, and for the first time showed him the light of a Christian civilization.

The South has been punished as no other people ever have since the children of Israel escaped from Egyptian bondage. That punishment was formerly visited by those who were admittedly our enemies. Now it is attempted by our pretended friends.

At no time in all history has one race ever done so much for another as the white people of the South have done for the Negro race. For tens of thousands of years he roamed at will through the continent of Africa, one of the richest countries in all the world, feasting upon his fellow man, and never even developed the art of agriculture to the extent of making his living out of the ground.

For countless ages he trod the sands of his native soil with gold and diamonds beneath his feet and never even dreamed of the theory of values.

He bowed beneath his master's whip at the building of the Pyramids and watched succeeding civilizations rise and fall, and all he ever learned was to construct a rude shelter of bark and grass with which to shield his head from the beating rays of a tropical sun.

He saw the dawn of civilization and watched the pageant of the centuries pass without so much as manifesting a desire to participate in the progress until he was brought to this country and shown the light of a Christian civilization through the unfortunate instrumentality of slavery.

If that enslavement was a crime, you people must bear your part of the responsibility as we have borne our part of the burden.

You can just forget all this crazy talk about social equality between the whites and Negroes of the South. It is not going to happen.

There are only four possible solutions of the race question: Amalgamation, extermination, deportation, and segregation. Amalgamation is too horrible to even consider; deportation seems to be out of the question; extermination is too cruel for contemplation. The only possible feasible solution is to follow the course mapped out and pursued by the people of the South for more than 300 years—a complete segregation of the two races. [Applause.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "riotous assemblage" in the fourth line.

Mr. Chairman, after watching this debate, as I and the rest of you have, I have come to the conclusion: This House is divided into four groups. There is, first, a group which does not want any lynching bill at all. Then there is a group which does not want any lynching bill introduced by a Democratic Negro Congressman. Then there is a group which wants the most radical bill we can possibly get through. Fourth, there is a group which would like to have a moderate, workable, antilynching bill.

The other day when the Mitchell bill came before the House it was snowed under because those who did not wish any bill introduced by a Negro Democratic Congressman to pass, of course, voted against it. Those who did not wish any bill voted against it because they wanted the most radical bill they could get so that it would be defeated in the Congress or there would be a better chance of its being invalidated in the courts. Those who wanted a radical bill did not, of course, vote for the Mitchell bill. Those of us, in such a painful minority, who wanted a mild, workable bill, were snowed under. Otherwise, we would offer the Mitchell bill this afternoon as a substitute for the Gavagan bill.

It seems to me we ought to see a little humor in this situation. Here is a political party which had control of the House for about 12 years. During this time they carried most of the States in the North by the Negro vote. In all of that time they did not do anything toward passing any lynching bill, except the Dyer bill futility in 1922. The main prop of their support has now drifted over to the other side, and we are here trying to secure equal protection and give a little encouragement to that large Negro group which has finally repudiated the party of privilege. However, it is not good Republican politics to let a Democratic Negro legislator father a bill, so it is to be defeated.

It seems to me that those from the South who have become so agitated here have been very largely responsible for this bill, because if a mild bill had been permitted to come through we would not now have so much objection to it. However, now we have this extreme bill, and it is going to go through this House.

I was interested in hearing the remarks of some of the southern gentlemen against the rape of the Constitution which they believe this bill performs. A few years ago the same gentlemen were down here talking in favor of the Volstead Act, which, of course, from our viewpoint was a hundred times worse than this so far as infringing States rights is concerned. I just wondered how the gentlemen would talk if the scene could be changed and we should have another Volstead Act down here.

The whole thing impresses me as a reflection upon, oh, shall I say, though I do not like to, the sincerity of our whole program here. We all talk so much, and we all get so "het up", when in the back of our minds there are a lot of thoughts, a lot of motives, and a lot of purposes which have nothing to do with what we are talking about.

May I close by saying I sincerely hope that after this bill goes through the House and gets into the other Chamber somebody with a little less emotion and a little more sanity will take the mild Mitchell bill and substitute it for this bill. Then the gentleman from Harlem [Mr. GAVAGAN] will have the name and the credit, and the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. MITCHELL] will have the consolation of giving us a workable antilynching law. [Applause.]

Mr. GAVAGAN and Mr. COX rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that preference in recognition is to be given to the gentleman from New York, who is handling the bill, and, after that, to the members of the Judiciary Committee. The Chair is endeavoring to grant recognition to several Members who have already spoken to the Chair. Does the gentleman from New York now demand recognition?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand recognition in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I shall be very happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHENS. Do I understand the gentleman questions whether the words "riotous assemblage" should be stricken?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am rising in opposition to that amendment.

Mr. KITCHENS. I would like for the gentleman to explain to the House why you use both expressions, "mob or riotous assemblage."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. As I understand the situation, Mr. Chairman, and if I am in error I hope the Chair will correct me, the gentleman from Ohio moved to strike out the words "riotous assemblage" as contained in line 4, page 1, of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GAVAGAN. And I believe this was in the nature of a pro-forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to determine that question. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York in opposition to the amendment striking out those two words.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] evidently has some motive, which I cannot understand, in offering his amendment. The gentleman seemed to be serious about it and took the floor for 5 minutes and all we heard was a dissertation on somebody else's bill or the motives of other people and then, finally, he finished referring to the motives of the "gentleman from Harlem."

One would think that the Members of this intelligent, or supposed-to-be-intelligent body when they propose an amendment would at least, instead of blatantly shouting hot air, talk upon the amendment.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Some of us have a serious question in mind. We are wondering whether under the language "any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob, or a riotous assemblage" would mean that if a boy in college was seriously injured by a group of students in some sort of hazing operation, this section would apply.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Although the question does not pertain to this particular amendment, I am very happy to say to the gentleman, and I cannot repeat it too often, this bill only applies to a situation where a person is in the custody of law-enforcement officers and is taken from the custody of such officers by a mob consisting of three or more persons who thereupon inflict bodily injury or death upon such prisoner. To my mind that language describes a riotous assemblage, and this is the only situation that could arise that would make this bill operative, and every one of you who is a lawyer knows this to be so.

This bill is to stop lynching, as its title proclaims, and we all know it is intended to apply to an unfortunate person charged with crime in the custody of a police officer, and such prisoner is taken from the custody of the officer by three or more persons or a mob that in turn carries out its ideas of law and justice by inflicting personal injuries or death upon the prisoner.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, we have heard the bugaboo about constitutionality. We heard the distinguished gentleman from Texas today consume almost 50 minutes, and never discuss the question of constitutionality. Why? Because he is too good a lawyer not to know that he cannot, as a lawyer, under the terms of this bill and under our constitutional mandate, proclaim that this Congress is constitutionally powerless to do anything in this situation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I offered may be withdrawn, as it was a pro-forma one.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, for more than 100 years the people of the South have kept life in the Democratic Party. At times they have been its only friends, and now when the party has grown strong and powerful, it turns upon them and proposes to deal to them this wicked and cowardly blow. The way has long since been prepared for the passage of this measure. There is nothing the opposition can do to stop it. Those behind it are in the majority, and they propose to have their way.

There is just as much malice in the pending bill against the South as there was in any of the reconstruction measures following the War between the States. The bill is but one of a series that is intended to be put upon the country in an effort to break the spirit of the white South and, in time, bring about social equality, but in this regard it will fail as all the rest will fail.

The color line in the South is a permanent institution. [Applause.] It will not break, and cannot be wiped out by a Federal law dictated in hate. Her people mean to maintain their racial purity and will not be mongrelized. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in the time given me under general debate on April 13 I discussed at considerable length and urged the passage of H. R. 1507, the Gavagan antilynching bill, and in my speech on that occasion I called attention to what I regard as a weakness, not only in the Gavagan bill but also in the Mitchell bill. I now desire again to call to the attention of the Members of the House, and especially to the attention of the author and gentleman in charge of the bill, Mr. GAVAGAN, this weakness in his bill.

The whole theory of this proposed legislation is based upon the idea that the States and local communities have failed to give equal protection of the laws as provided in the Federal Constitution to persons lynched, and because of local influences and conditions there is no effective action taken against the lynchers. This measure proposes to give jurisdiction to United States courts to investigate, indict, and try members of the mobs and to assess damages against the county in the event that the States fail to give equal protection of the laws to the citizens.

I pointed out in my speech the other day that of the approximately 5,200 persons murdered by lynching since 1882, only 49 percent of these lynched persons were in custody at the time they were lynched. Fifty-one percent were not and had not been in custody at the time they were lynched.

The protection provided in this bill does not attach until and unless the person lynched by the mob is "in custody of a peace officer." On today an amendment was offered to this bill to strike out the language "in the custody of any peace officer." I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] made objection and raised a point of order to this amendment, and his objection to this amendment was sustained. With the defeat of that amendment the bill will still retain the language "in the custody of any peace officer."

This, of course, means that the Federal courts cannot take jurisdiction and investigate these lynchings and punish the mob nor can the Federal courts assess any damages against any county as punishment where a person has been murdered or injured by a mob, who was not at the time in the custody of a peace officer such as sheriff, jailer, or the court.

I am not a recent friend or convert to this character of legislation. I spoke and voted for the Dyer antilynching bill when we passed it here in the House in 1922. I have always believed in the necessity and propriety of this character of legislation, although I do not have very many colored people residing in my congressional district.

I am strongly inclined to believe that if the provision "in the custody of any peace officer" remains in the bill it will more than likely encourage the lynching of persons not in custody and might encourage rather than prevent lynching in this country.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I regret that I cannot yield as I have but a few minutes' time to present the matter I have in mind.

The reason I make this statement is, what inducement would there be for an officer to take into custody a person who might be accused of a crime and might be lynched when if he did so he might subject himself to the jurisdiction of the United States courts and might be indicted and tried in a United States court for negligence in the event that the mob should take his prisoner from him and lynch him and it would subject his county to damages in the sum of from $2,000 to $10,000. The peace officer who had heard some threats about lynching some person might say to himself, "Why should I rush out and take this person into custody? If I do and the mob should take my prisoner away from me and lynch him, it would at once give jurisdiction of the matter to a United States court and I could be indicted by the Federal Grand Jury and tried in the Federal court and my county could be subjected to damages of from $2,000 to $10,000. Why should I hurry to take this man, woman, or child into custody?"

We must bear in mind under this bill a United States court cannot assume jurisdiction in any case unless the person lynched is in custody. There can be no action taken against the officer or the county until and unless the person lynched is taken into custody. It seems to me we are failing to give proper protection to persons who will not be taken into custody. The records disclose that the greatest number of innocent women, children, and men who have been lynched in this country are those who have not been taken into custody.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not more likely that the bill will be declared constitutional as it is now written than with this amendment?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I do not think so. If Congress has the power to pass this bill and reach out and take hold of an officer of a State or subdivision and assess damages against the county on account of the mob lynching a prisoner in the custody of an officer and punish them and assess damages, it seems to me we can reach out and protect the innocent people of the country lynched, even though they may not be in custody; and if we cannot reach out and protect innocent women, children, and men who might be lynched, even though not in the custody of an officer, it would lessen my interest in this character of legislation.

Of course, it is our desire to uphold the Constitution and laws of this country and give to the accused a fair and impartial trial before an impartial court and jury; but we are especially concerned in protecting from the vengeance of the mob innocent persons even though they are not in the custody of an officer. As I have said, the whole theory of this legislation in giving Federal courts jurisdiction is based upon the proposition that local communities fail to give equal protection of the laws to citizens who are lynched, and because of local influences or conditions there is nothing done about it.

If the words "in the custody of any peace officer" are stricken from the bill, then all perpetrators in the murder-lynching of any citizen where the State fails to give to such person or persons the equal protection of the laws could be investigated, indicted, and tried in a United States court, and the county where such mob murder occurs could be sued and recovery had, whether the lynched person was in custody or not in custody at the time he or she was taken by the mob and lynched.

I shall be greatly disappointed if Mr. GAVAGAN, the author of this measure and in charge of it, does not himself offer amendments and aid in amending the bill so that it may apply in all cases of lynchings where persons have been denied the equal protection of the laws as provided in the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GAVAGAN) there were—ayes 75, noes 125.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the amendment goes to the title of the bill, which is not in order until after the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, then I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOOK: Section 1, line 3, strike out the word "or" after the word "mob" and insert a comma. Also after the word "mean", in line 4, insert the following: "Any person or persons directly or indirectly participating in or responsible for any mob confiscating any factory, shop, store, home, or property and unlawfully holding same in violation of law."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment which extends the scope of the bill to a seizure of property, and so forth, clearly not within the province of the bill, which is directed solely toward the crime of lynching. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I come from a section of the country that I believe is one of the most law-abiding sections that we have in these United States. We have not had one single solitary lynching in all its history. I believe in law and order, and I should like to have the bill extended so as to give us real protection and real law and order so that we will not be menaced by these sit-down strikes that may come into my district. Oh, I have heard you talk here about the men who have been prosecuted in the cities. Let me tell you a story about one of the gangsters from the city of Chicago who is now roaming this country free from any attempt of the officers to apprehend him.

I happened to be in the city of Chicago shortly after Tommy O'Connor, one of the notorious gangsters, was condemned for murder, and was in the bull pen about to be executed. He was supposed to have escaped. I was taken by the jailer of Cook County jail in Illinois through the jail and he showed me how Tommy O'Connor escaped. He showed me how he went through a 5-foot wall with a handpick; went through a little hole about that size—less than 1 foot in diameter—went down the hall, took the keys away from an officer, and then out through a window on to a lean-to, from there to a car that was waiting, and was then driven away. I started to laugh. He said, "What are you laughing about?" I said, "I understand Tommy O'Connor has been picked up in Ohio." He said, "You don't believe that. You are laughing because of what I have shown you. I don't blame you, because Tommy O'Connor never escaped from this jail. He was chased out of jail. He is right in the city of Chicago today because it is the safest place for him. He will never be taken in as long as he stays here in Chicago providing the right bunch remain in office. Tommy O'Connor is still at large today. Can you deny it?"

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Will the gentleman name the warden he was with that day?

Mr. HOOK. I do not recall the name of the jailer right now.

Mr. CHURCH. I wish in your extension of remarks you would name the warden.

Mr. HOOK. I will name him. His name, if I remember correctly, was "Meisner."

Now, if we are going to have law and order, let us have it. Let us have law and order right down the line. Just as the gentleman who preceded me said, let us not pass a law which will make it a crime to take a person away from the hands of the officers and at the same time it will not be a crime to mob a person before that person is in the hands of the officer. Let us make it a crime to lynch a person at any time. Let us have a constitutional bill if we are going to have a bill at all. Let us have an answer to the question I asked the other day, that the gentleman from the Republican side just propounded. Let us not make innocent counties responsible for actions which their citizens may not participate in at all. If we are going to have a bill, let us have a real bill. I believe honestly that when a section of the country has done such an admirable job in reducing crime as the good people in the South have done, they should not be slapped in the face by a coalition, if you please; by those in the Republican and Democratic Parties who are just looking for votes and using this slurring piece of legislation and an appeal to mob passion to do it. I have never been a demagogue and never will be. Let us have an honest bill or none at all. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] has expired.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORD of Mississippi moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the enacting clause stricken out.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, much has already been said on the constitutionality of the pending bill, and many cases have been cited to show that this measure is wholly unconstitutional. Therefore, I shall refrain from giving dignity to the measure by attempting to further discuss its unconstitutionality. It is obvious to those of us who have listened to the debate that the Northern Democrats, apparently for political reasons, are going to join the Republicans and pass this bill. If the bill passes both Houses of Congress and is signed by the President, there can be only one hope for the South, and that is that the Supreme Court will decline to yield to the enormous pressure recently put upon it and do its duty by declaring a law of this kind unconstitutional as a usurpation and invasion of States' rights. If the Supreme Court of the United States should fail to do its clear-cut duty and hold this law to be constitutional, then the governors and members of the legislatures of the respective States might as well resign and turn everything over to the supervision of the United States.

Entering a judgment against a county will in no way prevent lynchings but will make the innocent taxpayers pay for the acts of a few who constitute the mob.

Education has done more to reduce the crime of lynching than anything else. The local communities have been made to realize that the law will punish those who commit atrocious crimes, if given an opportunity, and the citizens as a rule cooperate with the peace officers in preventing mob violence.

The proponents of this bill may think they are doing good for the cause, but in my judgment the passage of this law will encourage the Negroes to commit the crime of rape as well as other heinous crimes, and if this happens, there can be no question but that lynchings will increase instead of decrease, as has been the case in the last several years.

Mr. Chairman, it is legislation of this kind as well as words like those used by our Democratic colleague from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], chairman of the Rules Committee, that makes the South wonder why they should be penalized. I quote from Mr. O'CONNOR's remarks on the floor of this House on April 12:

I should like to see the question of the Negroes in America, 15,000,000 of them, seriously considered by the people of this country and by Congress, and I should like to tell you where to start. Start in your Capital, the District of Columbia. In the Capital of the Nation the Negro does not get a square deal. Right in the shadow of the Capitol you have segregation and Jim Crowism. If that were properly brought to the attention of this Nation, the people of the 48 States would never tolerate it. * * * I would like nothing better than to devote the rest of my life to seeing that these 15,000,000, the largest racial group in the United States, get a square deal in this country.

Mr. Chairman, ever since the reconstruction days the State that I have the honor to represent in part has always been in the Democratic column when the roll was called, but now that the Democratic Party is in power, the northern Democrats, with few exceptions, are showing their gratitude to the South by turning on their southern colleagues in Congress and subjecting them to this twentieth century force bill.

This bill may pass, but I warn the Members of this House that the Southern people will not submit to its provisions and they will never submit to social equality as advocated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR]. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the objective of this legislation. However, I find it very hard to reconcile the position that a number of southern Members have taken today with the position they have taken on the proposal to rape the Supreme Court of the United States.

I do not expect to vote for the pending legislation, as I have no desire to join in this mad race between the executive and the legislative branches of our Government to see who shall be the first to deliver the death blow to the Constitution and States' rights. I have no idea that this legislation would put a stop to lynch law. I do not believe that its proponents entertain any such hope as that. Had I the remotest idea it would put a stop to lynching I would vote for it gladly. I fear, Mr. Chairman, that if this legislation is enacted it is going to return to bother us in the North. The South is not the only section of the country where there are race problems.

The race question has become a real problem in the North, more especially in big centers like Chicago, Philadelphia, and New York; and I urge that we should act with the utmost caution on what appears to me to be the entering wedge in the complete destruction of States' rights.

All must realize that the people of the South have a most delicate problem to deal with. All in all, I would say they have done a fairly good job of it. Let us do nothing here today to either retard the forward movement or to make it more difficult. To my mind this legislation is on all fours with several witch-burning measures that have been before us in years gone by. Let us not forget our ill-starred ventures into the field of regulating morals by legislation. If this measure is enacted, it will be repealed within 10 years, and those who sponsor it will be among the first to ask for its repeal. Let us cut out all this sectionalism, which is unworthy of a great lawmaking body. We are all Americans, whether from North, South, East, or West. Let us not have a repetition of the reconstruction days that followed the Civil War. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. MCCLELLAN) there were—ayes 68, noes 125.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BIERMANN, Mr. KITCHENS, and Mr. ELLENBOGEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are seven sections to this bill. It would expedite matters if Members having only pro forma amendments would apportion them over the different sections.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I would inquire if after the next section is read some of us who have not been able to get any time at all will be given 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intends to recognize every Member seeking recognition.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. If any State or governmental subdivision thereof fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, whether by way of preventing or punishing the acts thereof, such State shall by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal be deemed to have denied to such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws of the State, and to the end that the protection guaranteed to persons within the jurisdictions of the several States, or to citizens of the United States, by the Constitution of the United States, may be secured, the provisions of this act are enacted.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote against this measure not because I favor lynching—I think there is no one here who favors lynching—but because I believe, I may say I know, that this bill is unconstitutional. When I go back home to private life probably I shall have to look over some votes here that I think I could have improved upon, but I shall never have to turn over the pages of my memory and find any place where I voted for any measure, no matter who advocated it, that I thought was unconstitutional. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this bill is not calculated to stop lynching. I have listened to most of the debate and I have not heard a single person say on this floor how this bill is going to diminish lynching. If it is not calculated to diminish lynching, what excuse is there for passing it?

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] asked what had been done to punish the perpetrators of the eight lynchings last year. I do not know what has been done. He said that in New York they have crime, but they punish crime. Let us see. In the years from 1930 to 1934, inclusive—I got these figures from the World Almanac—there were in the city of New York 2,582 homicides. The police records of the city of New York show that for these 2,582 homicides there were 2,080 arrests; in other words, the arrests for homicides in New York City were 502 less than the homicides themselves. There were 502 killings for which no one was so much as arrested. The gentleman says that they punish these criminals in New York City. In these 5 years, when there were 2,582 homicides in the city of New York, there were, according to the police records of that city, 428 convictions. [Laughter.] In other words, according to the records, less than one person was punished for every six murders in New York City from 1930 to 1934, inclusive.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman does not mean to presume that there were 2,582 felonious homicides. There are all manners and kinds of homicides, homicides by destruction by automobile, for instance.

Mr. BIERMANN. I mean criminal homicides.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman classify them?

Mr. BIERMANN. If the gentleman wants me to, I will put that in the RECORD.

Mr. CELLER. I have it right here. Put it in—classify them.

Mr. BIERMANN. Felonious homicides. This leaves out accidental killings, and leaves out suicides. It includes only felonious homicides and the figure is 2,582 for the years 1930 to 1934, inclusive.

Mr. CELLER. I have it right here before me, felonious homicides in New York, 376.

Mr. BIERMANN. In 5 years?

Mr. CELLER. In 1 year. I am speaking about a year.

Mr. BIERMANN. I said from 1930 to 1934, inclusive.

Mr. CELLER. Then the gentleman should indicate the felonious homicides in contradistinction to manslaughter by negligence.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman cannot take up my time in that way. I do not refer to accidental killings and I do not include suicides; but I mean criminal killings, of which there were 2,582 in the city of New York during these 5 years, with only 428 convictions of murder. If we are going to pass unconstitutional legislation to prevent killings, let us do something to deal with the wholesale killings in New York City. Lynching in the United States has declined from 226 in 1892 to 8 in 1936, but New York City still has a situation in which less than one-sixth of its murders are followed with convictions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. OWEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, no one in this House is more opposed to mob violence than I am. For 20 years in my State I indicted and prosecuted people. There was never a time during those 20 years when I put on the soft pedal in prosecuting a white man who was indicted for violence toward a Negro. Numbers and numbers of times white men have been convicted of assault upon colored men. No man is more opposed to mob violence than I am. I yield to no man a greater fidelity to observance of law and order than I have.

I regret this bill is aimed directly at my section of the country, the section which in the formation of the Government and in its preservation has contributed as much as any other section of our Union. No section of the United States has contributed more or has been more loyal to the Government than the section from which I come, the last of the 13 original colonies, yielding to the Government the two great States of Mississippi and Alabama. We have been loyal throughout all the days.

What is the purpose of this bill? The purpose of the bill is to prevent mob violence. I join hands with you in that enterprise. I disagree with the belief of the author and the advocates of the bill that it will suppress lynching. I believe this bill will encourage lynching, for the very reason that, knowing the colored man as I do, I think this bill will encourage him to commit the unspeakable crime.

As stated by a gentleman on the floor this afternoon, the distinction between the two races is so well defined and so well established that no law, I care not whence it comes, will deter the white man down there from wreaking his vengeance on the brute who commits the unspeakable crime.

My father was a country physician. Countless hundreds of times at all times of night I have been with him on an errand to visit a sick colored man or his family, without the slightest hope of reward. I have been in their homes. This very day I am supporting on a farm of mine 50 or more colored men and their families without hope of reward. Are you doing that? I have the highest regard for the colored man. You do not think one-tenth as much of him as I do. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, exhibited a great deal of concern over what he was pleased to describe as an acute attack of "federalitis", which, he said, is afflicting the House today.

"Federalitis", I gathered from his remarks, was the imposition by the National Government of its authority over the States, and injection into State affairs of the Federal arm of the Government.

This fear and concern on his part was rather amusing to me. While he was talking I could not help but wonder how he and his comrades had been able to survive for more than 4 long years a chronic and severe siege of this same sickness.

During that 4 years he and his comrades have been suffering from "federalitis", which has completely paralyzed not only their actions but their thinking, and it is encouraging, indeed, if at last they have discovered the cause of their trouble.

Heretofore "federalitis" has seemed to be the one panacea for all the ills, not only of these southern gentlemen but of their Democratic colleagues from the North.

The gentleman stated, in substance, that we could never hope for any good results, any great reform, by attempting to apply remedies "from the top downward."

But that is just exactly what the gentleman has been doing for, lo, these many months. If men were out of work, if individuals needed funds, if a community needed an improvement of any kind, if votes were wanting, then large and repeated doses of Government money were administered, and then "federalitis" continued to grow more violent in its symptoms, that is, it always needed more of the same—more money.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] also is greatly worried today about this attempt to force the Federal authority into the affairs of his State. Just why he should be worried is again something at which we all marvel when we remember that, day after day, week after week, month after month, day and night, if his actions in the House indicate anything, this little baby of his, the T. V. A., which he has changed and wet-nursed and most assiduously and almost constantly been feeding Federal pap, has grown so large and strong that it not only has come in contact with private business but has invaded the businesses not only of corporations, the mention of which usually give him a spasm, but has taken an active part in the affairs of towns, counties, and States.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] should be the last, as he sits back and views with commendable pride his brain child, which has been fatally affected with "federalitis" from the moment of its birth, to worry about Federal interference in local affairs.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], whose ability, integrity, and independence I so greatly admire, said that the South for long years had been the backbone of the Democratic Party, that it had kept the fires of democracy alive through all the lean years. That statement was true; it was accurate. He then complained because Democrats in New York, by the introduction and passage of this bill, were bringing trouble to the party in the South.

It is my regret that I cannot sympathize with him, for I remember how blue-blooded, aristocratic democracy of the Democratic South went north to New York City, sought, wooed, won, and married a fair daughter of the Tammany Tiger. It is not my fault if that alliance gave birth to this baby over whom he is now worrying.

Papa or Mama Tammany, whichever it may be, puts forward this bill on the theory that it will prevent, and, failing in that, punish lynchings in the South.

Papa or Mama Southern Democracy is quite sure that the infant will bring only trouble and will increase lynchings in the South. With the latter view I agree.

Nor can I sympathize with some of these other gentlemen who are complaining about Federal interference in State affairs, for I remember that no longer ago than the latter part of last October, P. W. A. and W. P. A. workers came into my home State of Michigan, so they could vote in the November election, and some of them, I am advised, were held over until after our April election this spring.

That was an imposition of Federal authority to which I strongly objected. Nevertheless, until today we suffered in silence, and I only speak of it now to explain my lack of sympathy with those who are now so bitterly complaining and who voted at one time something over $4,000,000,000 to the President so that he might inoculate not only the States but all the little communities with this "federalitis" bug.

My heart today does not go out to you gentlemen of the South the way it should. You took the Negro vote away from the Republican Party by promising them all sorts of things, and now when I, for instance, have a chance to get back some of that vote in my district by supporting an antilynching bill, we are given the opportunity of voting, not for a real antilynching bill, but for a bill which, on its face, inevitably would increase the wrong which you say you wish to eradicate.

You gentlemen of the Old South ask us to go along with you and vote against this bill. I for one am going with you, but not because of your complaint about "federalitis." I am going to vote against this bill—and I had intended to vote for an antilynching bill when I came into the House and before I read it—because it will not accomplish the ostensible purpose for which it was introduced. It will only aggravate the trouble it is supposed to eradicate.

In 1922 the Republicans of this House passed an antilynching bill, but the Democrats of the South over in the Senate killed it.

This bill may accomplish one thing, and that is to give the Democratic Party in New York City the votes of a few more colored people. If any Negro supports a Democrat because of the passage of this bill, it will be through a mistaken idea as to its terms.

This bill on its face states that it is for the purpose of extending the equal protection of the laws to all citizens and to punish the crime of lynching. If its terms did that, I would vote for it. But listen to its language. It provides, briefly, that when a mob or riotous assemblage without authority of law kills or injures "any person in the custody of any peace officer", with the purpose of depriving such person of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws, they shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Now, note the words "in the custody of any peace officer." The bill does not protect anyone else, nor does it punish any person or persons who commit the crime of lynching, unless they take the person lynched from the custody of a peace officer.

Lynchings occur in the communities where public sentiment is temporarily in favor of it and, as the gentleman from Tennessee and three or four others have today very clearly pointed out, the effect of these words, "any person in the custody of any peace officer", are words of limitation and will encourage lynching.

Just assume for a moment that a revolting crime has been committed; that John Jones is suspected of that crime; that the sheriff of the county knows of this suspicion; that a mob is about to gather, or has gathered together, with the intent to lynch John Jones.

Now, I ask you—and answer this question for yourself—assuming that the sheriff knows that a mob is about to form, or that the mob, having formed, intends to lynch John Jones; assume that the sheriff knows, as he will if this bill passes, that, if once he takes John Jones into his custody and thereafter John is lynched or injured, then he, the sheriff, becomes liable to a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment for 5 years; will he hasten to take John Jones into custody, or will he wait before taking John into custody until he knows whether or not he can successfully protect him against the mob?

No sheriff confronted by this state of facts will think of taking John Jones into custody, of risking the danger of a lynching, knowing that, if he fails to protect John Jones, he himself may be sent to the penitentiary, until he has ascertained whether or not the mob really means business. When he learns that fact, it may be too late—John Jones may be dead—dead because the sheriff feared to take the chance of going to the penitentiary if he was unable to protect his prisoner.

The enactment of this bill withdraws from every man suspected of a crime in a community where lynching may take place the protection which the peace officer would otherwise be inclined to give him.

I shall vote against this bill. If it passes, as I assume it will, I shall offer an amendment to strike from its provisions the words "in the custody of any peace officer", and so endeavor to amend the bill to make it effective to protect everyone who stands in danger of being denied the equal protection of the laws. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard it said on the floor today by Members that if this bill were enacted into law it would not stop lynching, and I have heard other Members say that if it were enacted into law it would stop lynching. I am sincere when I make the statement that I want to see the time come, and I hope it is not far distant, when lynching and mob violence will be discontinued.

A few years ago in the district I represent many poor, unfortunate Negroes were brought from the South and placed in the mills and factories to take the place of union men. I am not blaming the gentlemen from the South for this because I do not believe they were responsible. These colored people were brought to Pittsburgh, shoved into the mills, and, after working there a short time, were discharged and helplessly put on the streets. Many of them were sent to jail as vagrants. The southerners should not be criticized any more severely for the treatment of the Negroes than the people of the North and other parts of the country. No matter where the poor Negro goes he is not given a square deal by any class of people in the United States. Every broad-minded man will have to admit that Representatives from the Southern States have sponsored constructive, progressive, and humanitarian legislation which did not apply to one class but all classes of people.

We not only have race hatred in this country but we also have religious and national hatred. If the clergymen of every religious denomination in the world would preach the brotherhood of man instead of preaching to their congregations that their particular religion is the true and only religion, and that their religion was established by the great God of the Universe, and that all other religions are but the creation of man, it would undoubtedly banish from the hearts and minds of the majority of the people in the world the ignorance, superstition, and hatred which has caused and is causing a great deal of the human misery that now exists. People of every nationality, race, color, and creed have subjected themselves to unbearable torture and have sacrificed their lives for the betterment of mankind.

Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill, because I believe if it becomes a law it will prevent to a great degree lynching and mob violence. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person of any individual injured or put to death by any mob or riotous assemblage or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof having any such individual in his custody, who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to protect such individual from being so injured or being put to death, or any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof charged with the duty of apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person participating in such mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform his duty in apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting to final judgment under the laws of such State all persons so participating, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof, acting as such officer or employee under authority of State law, having in his custody or control a prisoner, who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person who is a member of a mob or riotous assemblage to injure or put such prisoner to death without authority of law, or who shall conspire, combine, or confederate with any person to suffer such prisoner to be taken or obtained from his custody or control to be injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire, combine, or confederate with such officer or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony. On conviction the parties participating therein shall be punished by imprisonment of not less than 5 years or not more than 25 years.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I cannot let the statement of the gentleman from Iowa go by unchallenged with reference to crime statistics in the city of New York. I anticipated attacks would be made upon the fair name of my city and I prepared myself with reference thereto. New York does pride itself, despite what you may say or think to the contrary, on the enforcement of its criminal statutes. In the first place, the record of the punishment of homicides throughout the country is 44 percent, and the record in New York City as to homicides is equally as good. With reference to what the gentleman said concerning homicides, I wish to put into the RECORD the exact number of homicides for a particular year, and I take the year 1932 as an example. I shall divide between homicides which are felonious and homicides through criminal negligence, like abortion, and justifiable homicides and accidental maiming resulting in homicide. We find this very significant situation, that the amount of felonious homicides in New York City in 1932, for example, a typical year, was 376. Of these the actual number of offenses was determined to be 328. Those who were cleared by arrest, 193, after trial; those who were not cleared after arrest, after trial, 135. In other words, almost all of them were given a trial, almost all of them were given an opportunity to have due process of law. That is the distinction with reference to New York and these other communities of which mention has been made this morning. We find this very significant situation, that the percentage of punishment of lynching in various States is as follows, and I get my facts from the University of North Carolina: All that Alabama has done with reference to punishment of lynchers is to punish to the extent of 4 percent; Georgia, 8 percent; Oklahoma, 3 percent; Virginia, 4 percent; Mississippi, 3 percent; Texas, 7 percent; Missouri, 3 percent. That is what my figures show, and you can get them from the University of North Carolina, particularly from the book by James H. Chadburn, professor of law of that uiversity. Time will not permit my putting into the RECORD at this time more detailed figures. Suffice to say there is a shameful disregard of duty upon the part of the prosecuting officers in many of the States of the Union concerning punishment of lynchers.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I want to point out to the gentleman that in spite of his overwhelming pride in his own city, the city that I represent, Milwaukee, has the lowest rate of homicides of any city in the United States.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. McFARLANE. How many homicides have there been in the city of New York for the last 5 years, and for each of those years how many of those murderers were sent to prison?

Mr. CELLER. I can tell the gentleman how many were sent to prison in the year 1932. Of the 328 cases, 135 went to prison, and 193 were cleared after trial. The figure for proximate years was similar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Coming as a new Member of Congress, I have to say a few words to sort of clear up our votes, especially of those from the South. Is there any doubt in the minds of the people of this body of one thing, and that is that we all want to dispose absolutely and forever of the crime of lynching. Has anybody any doubt of that? No true citizen wants to see the faggot or noose of the lyncher. You see how the figures have gone. Do you not know that in the South, where lynchings have happened, that we want to get rid of lynching and dispose of it, and do you not suppose further that we know more about how to handle it in our section than anybody else on the face of God's earth? Do you not trust our sincerity and judgment? Will you not help us? The figures on the chart shown by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] showed you how we have gone down the line in amazing decrease. Lord knows that we have tried to do it. I have been prosecuting attorney, and I have seen the time when some great crisis would arise in our county, and the sheriff would get up at midnight and hurry to the place where the crime had been committed to get his hands on the poor unfortunate that might have committed the crime so that there would be no mob violence. With this law on the statute books what will the sheriff do? Will he hurry to get himself sent to the penitentiary for 5 years and get his county sued and that put on record against him? Are you discouraging lynching, or are you putting down a bar to start us back the other way? We do not want any lynching. We are the last people of the world who want the further stench of that thing in our nostrils. Let us in each section handle this thing the best way possible; we handle it the best we can, and in yours, the same for you.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that anyone who has looked into the lynching of both white and colored people and who has regard for the sanctity of human life and the equal protection of laws can oppose this bill. A lynching mob violates the rights guaranteed to a citizen of the United States by the Constitution. The mob seizes and imprisons its victim, deprives him of a trial in a court of law, tortures him, and finally puts him to death. Lynching is open defiance of law and of the courts.

Senator Costigan, a great humanitarian and eminent Member of the United States Senate, termed it "open and boastful anarchy."

Following the lynching at San Jose, Calif., President Roosevelt denounced it as "collective murder" and declared, "We do not excuse those in high or low places who condone lynch law."

Only 2 days ago, a horrible lynching occurred at Duck Hill, Miss. The report of the United Press, dated April 13, as it is contained in the Philadelphia Record, says that the victims were lynched by a Mississippi mob which tortured them with blow torches.

"Operating from a school bus, the mob of more than 300 men chained their victims to a tree and tortured them with fire."

No one can excuse or justify lynching, and I do not believe there is a Member in this House who would want to undertake to do so.

After all the agitation against lynching and for a Federal antilynching bill we had 39 lynchings in the last 2 years. Evidently the States alone cannot cope with this open and defiant resistance to law, and cannot assure to their inhabitants the protection of the laws and the sanctity of human life.

Lynchings have not been confined to Negroes. In many cases white people have been lynched by the most cruel and brutal methods. I will vote for this bill and hope it will pass.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last 10 lines.

Mr. Chairman, I have been in the city of Washington about 3 months. I see here, yonder and there, from all this Nation, questions of race and religion, and sections that are growing antagonistic. Anyone can perceive that.

We have just read the second paragraph of this bill, which says that when any State or county does thus or so the county will be liable for the damages that occur. That means that a State, under this law, if constitutional, will be liable for damages.

I told my people when I was running for this office that if I were elected, as I had enlisted three times in wars of the United States, serving twice in foreign countries, I would never vote to send an American boy beyond the confines of the American continent to fight the wars of anybody. Now, since I have been seeing this thing going on in Michigan, since I have been seeing what is going on up in Pennsylvania and in other States of this Union, I have thought seriously about whether I would ever be called upon to send soldiers of the United States Government into those States to shoot down citizens. It is worrying me. I do not want them sent to my State to enforce this law. I will never vote to send an American soldier to shoot down an American citizen, except in case of a revolution. Yet we are having serious situations arise in this country. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] showed you, we are taking care of the situation in our part of the country. Lynching is being gradually eliminated. Several from the South who have spoken on this bill have been prosecuting officers at sometime in their lives. I have never been a prosecuting officer, but I have stood in defense of both black and white. I have stood in defense of a white man with a mob crying to lynch him, and he was later acquitted by a jury. I have stood in defense of two Negroes who were beaten, whipped, and the blood flowed from their bodies, and they were later released. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] says, "What have you done?" I will tell you. I helped to bury two of the finest sheriffs that Columbia County, State of Arkansas, or any other State, ever produced. They were trying faithfully to perform their duties down there and protect their people.

These matters will adjust themselves. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] says there was sent down from Sinai the command, "Thou shalt not kill." That is true as to murder, but I question the gentleman's credentials. I would like to see his commission from God Almighty to come down into my section of the country and protect it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. KITCHENS] has expired.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I learned a great many things from this debate which in the 4 years I have been here I did not know about until today. First of all, I learned how many prosecuting attorneys had been elected to Congress. I learned likewise that practically everybody who had anything to say on this floor was against lynching, but that a great many of them did not want to do anything about it this way. They have not suggested any other way to do it, nor do we find any other bills that would suggest a better way. One bill was before the Committee on the Judiciary for 4 years and we were unable to get that bill onto this floor. With everybody against lynching, still some of us confess we are not able to arrive at a way to express our opinion in a law. Of course, the city I come from does not have any lynchings. We do not have any crime to speak about. I believe in 1935 we had only one willful murder. There is no other city in the Nation that has a record like that. That happens because the people of my city do not want crime. They do not approve of it and have had the moral courage to suppress it without fear or favor, politics, or expediency. Any section of the country that does not want lynching can stop it, I believe; but only in the past few days we see this most deplorable crime repeated right in the face of these expressions here in Congress. I do not think this is the most perfect bill in the world. I do not think this is the best bill that could be brought out, but I think it is a definite, worth-while expression of the Congress of the United States against this mob rule, and that is the reason I intend to vote for it. My vote is my expression of my opinion and the opinion of our people against disregard of law and order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. I cannot yield right now.

I want to contrast the conduct of the sponsor of this bill in his liberality in allowing everybody to speak upon the bill who wanted to with the conduct which we experienced last Thursday when a bill came in here to investigate the sit-down strikes and another bill to investigate some propaganda someone alleged was being carried on in the United States.

That conduct of those controlling Thursday's time impressed me by its strictures and lack of debate. The sponsor of this bill has given all the opportunity to the opposition that it has desired to offer amendments that might point some better way out of this problem; and very few, if any, amendments have been forthcoming. Because this is the best bill that we could get on the floor of this House, because it is the only bill that we could hope to act on at this session, and, while I do not think it is perfect, I intend to vote for it as an expression of my sentiment against lynching and mob rule.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to discuss the provisions of the pending measure. When the roll is called upon this bill, and there will be a roll call, I shall vote for what I believe to be right and best. My mind is already made up as to how I shall vote.

I resent, however, what the gentleman from Michigan said when he asserted that the Democratic Party did not receive the support of the Negro voters of this country until 1936. A large percentage of the Negro citizens of West Virginia voted for the election of President Roosevelt in 1932, before they were on the so-called relief of which the gentleman from Michigan speaks. They believed in 1932 that the Democratic Party held out promises to them. Those promises have become splendid performances; and I believe that the support the Negro has given to our party in 1932 and 1936 is simply significant of greater support in coming years. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHANNON: Page 3, line 21, after the word "by", strike out "imprisonment of not less than 5 years or not more than 25 years" and insert "a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is to harmonize the penalties provided in the bill.

Paragraph (a) of section 3 provides for one penalty, and paragraph (b) of the same section provides for another penalty, much more severe.

The purpose in offering this amendment is to have some light shed on the reason why the penalty should be so different in different paragraphs of the same section.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Subparagraph (a) refers to an officer or an employee of a State. Subparagraph (b) presupposes a case where the person is in the custody of the officer at the time, and presupposes connivance on the part of the officer.

Mr. SHANNON. What objection can there be to making the penalties agree? Why not accept this amendment?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Because subparagraph (a) involves mere negligence. Subparagraph (b) involves connivance.

Mr. SHANNON. Conspiracy, and under the general Federal conspiracy law the punishment grades down from a penitentiary sentence to a fine and sentence in jail.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The framers of the bill thought that negligence or failure to do something, nonfeasance as it is called in law, should not be punished so severely as direct misfeasance.

Mr. SHANNON. The gentleman undertakes to define a conspiracy and to fix the penalty therefor.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. The district court of the United States judicial district wherein the person is injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall have jurisdiction to try and to punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the injury is inflicted or the homicide is committed, any and all persons who participate therein: Provided, That it is first made to appear to such court (1) that the officers of the State charged with the duty of apprehending, prosecuting, and punishing such offenders under the laws of the State shall have failed, neglected, or refused to apprehend, prosecute, or punish such offenders; or (2) that the jurors obtainable for service in the State court having jurisdiction of the offense are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty of the offense will not be punished in such State court. A failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict the persons guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall be sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal described in the above proviso.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been quite interested in listening to the debate on this question. It is the first time I have seen a real exhibition of bitterness, or I might say, sectional bitterness, which is most regrettable. I regret to state that in my opinion this bill was conceived in prejudice and born of demagogy. It is very difficult for me to understand why some so-called Democrats should permit themsleves to indulge in the type of comment which they have indulged in, directing their thrusts at the South, the birth place of the Democratic Party and the great host of Democratic leaders coming from that section.

We of the South believe in States' rights. The Democratic Party has always taken that position and now we are confronted with a type of synthetic or veneered Democrat which not only refuses to recognize this principle but jeers at it. I wish to state that there is not a Member in this House or a person anywhere else that dislikes or detests the crime of lynching any more than I do. There is not one kind word that can be said of mob violence or the spirit which prompts or carries through lynching. The sentiment in my section is absolutely against it; the people of the South are just as cultured and refined as any people on the face of this earth; they are just as brave as any people on this earth. Our courts are headed by wise, brave, courageous, and intelligent judges. Our sheriff offices are filled with capable, law-abiding, and law-enforcing men who are elected by the people.

We in the South are friendly to the Negro. I am friendly to the Negro. I have occupied many positions where I have been able to do the Negro a lot of good, and I have never refused him yet. May I say to the gentleman from New York, I have spent more hours in their behalf than he has minutes.

I am sincere in my opposition to the bill, because I think it is a thrust at the distinguished, able judiciary of the South and at those noble and courageous gentlemen who occupy the sheriffs' offices and other law-enforcement offices in the South. I heard the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] address the House on Tuesday, and he established only two things: One, that he had ancestors; and the other, that he despised the South. It has not been many months since the gentleman was wooing the South with a great deal of ardor, and I am wondering why it is that he cannot love us in April as in November. We of the South have a great problem, and have had a great problem for a number of years. We believe we are working this problem out and we believe we are in better position to work it out than any other group, whether they be from Illinois, New York, or Connecticut.

Mr. Chairman, we have traveled a long way from the days of the reconstruction, when we had visited upon us the carpetbaggers, and everything else, from the wooden-nutmeg salesman from Connecticut on up. We think we have done a pretty good job under the circumstances. May I say that in my own section not one single incident of the kind which has been referred to as lynching or mob violence has happened in the last several years where anyone was injured but that every single offender was convicted, and I helped do it in some of the cases. [Applause.]

Do not tell me I am not sincere when I say I am opposed to lynching. Yes, I am opposed to it. My heart is just as sincere as yours could ever be when I say this.

Do not tell me this is going to stop lynching or retard it. If the good God above will save us in the South from the so-called volunteer reformers from Chicago, New York, and other sections, who have not time to give attention to the horrible gangster wars and machine-gun murders in their own sections and who know nothing of our troubles, I think the South will survive in good shape. [Applause.]

The Governor of North Carolina and every law enforcement officer within that State stands ready to protect any man from mob violence. This bill, in my opinion, puts a premium on the sheriff's failure to do his duty and a penalty on the innocent taxpayers of a community in which an offense might occur, even though they despise it as much as anyone on earth.

No; I am not in favor of lynching. I will risk my life to prevent it, and the good sheriffs and judges down there will do the same thing. I am a friend of the Negroes in my section, and they know it. So is the Governor and other State officials. They call on me and talk to me about these problems. One of the finest Negro leaders in the South is located in my town, and he has talked to me about these problems. He is not in favor of putting a premium on lynching. He is in favor of retarding it. This bill will not retard it but will present a new problem and hamper our Governor and other State officials in the fine work which they are doing. Imagine penalizing innocent taxpayers of a county and placing State officials in jeopardy. If I thought this bill would stop lynching or prevent lynching, I would be willing to waive my views in this instance upon the question of State's rights and vote for it, but I do not believe such would be the case, and I believe the good colored people of this Nation have been misled and misinformed, and I am wondering if those who have taken the leading part in the misleading campaign have not been prompted by motives other than those disclosed.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have sought this time because I want to express regret that this debate has resolved itself into an argument along sectional lines.

I believe it is true, as has been stated by a number of southern Members here today, that other sections of the country are just as guilty of having things like this happen as the South has ever been. I believe it is true that the southern Members who have spoken here today mean exactly what they say when they state that they are as much concerned about getting rid of lynching as anyone else; but I likewise believe there are a great many of us in this Hall who sincerely want to find a way to do something practical about this matter, not only because we feel it is an evil when a Negro is lynched but also because we have seen violence in our own sections of the country and because we know it is not just the South but other places as well that are in need of something being done along the line of this legislation.

I voted for the Mitchell bill because, though I knew it was not perfect, I felt that bill was almost sure to do some good in ridding our Nation of the terrible evil of lynching. This measure, I am frank to say, seems to me to be too extreme, not because I would not see us do everything possible to rid the Nation of lynching but because I am worried about reactions to the bill if it passes. I am sincerely hopeful, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] a while ago, that we are not going to do something that is going to make matters worse. I am deadly in earnest when I say I seek a way to do something to rid the Nation of this great danger and to protect every person in our country against lawless violence.

I would point out that it is not enough to say that mob action on the part of a group of citizens is "justified", because, after all, we must remember that even though such action may seem to be justified, orderly enforcement of law and orderly government necessarily depend upon the use of orderly and legal processes.

I wish we could remove any spirit of condemnation of one or another section from this debate. I wish we could look at the problem as men and as American citizens, viewing it from the standpoint of the faults in our own section or the prejudices within our own hearts that have led to such things, and get down to business so we may pass a measure that will do some good.

Probably in the end I shall vote for this measure, but I shall not vote for it because I want to cast any aspersions upon the southern section of this Nation. If I vote for it, it will be because I desire to do the best thing I have any power to do to help eliminate something that seems to me to be a great evil in every section of the Nation where it raises its head and which by the wisest and best means that we can devise must be wiped out in our Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. Chairman, practically speaking, it has been suggested that this bill is designed to make the city of New York safe for the Democratic Party. If it does this, it is all right with me, and if any effort I may extend in helping to pass this bill will convince the Negroes in New Jersey that they will get as good a break from the Democratic Party as they will from the Republican, that is all right with me too, and it ought to be all right with the colleagues of my own party from the South, because they may remember that until some Democrats came here from the North they were not in the majority.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Well, we were here, all the time, were we not, when you were not here? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. The gentleman was here, and the reason there were not so many Democrats here from the North was because of the fact there had been debates in the Congress of the United States on lynching legislation before, and we could never get the colored vote.

Mr. Chairman, I do not regard this as a sectional piece of legislation, and I do not regard lynching as a sectional problem.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Do I understand the gentleman to say the reason he is here now is because we had some debates on an antilynching bill?

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. I do not know whether the gentleman understood me to say that or not, but I did not say it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Did the gentleman come here from a colored district or did the Negro vote send him here?

Mr. O'NEILL of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to discuss this matter later with the gentleman, but I have been trying all afternoon to get 5 minutes, and I have one point I want to make here.

I do not regard lynching as a racial problem, neither do I regard it as a sectional problem. I think it is entirely an American problem, and the indication that this bill will pass this afternoon with a proper display of American tolerance is gratifying to me. We may well recall the case suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, the California lynching of 3½ years ago. We might remember, too, that to this day there still exists grave doubt as to the guilt of at least one of the men lynched. That lynching involved no man of color. It was a white mob taking the law into their own hands and destroying, not a colored life but two white lives. How, then, does this become a sectional problem as insisted by the opponents of the bill? How does it become a racial problem?

Mr. Chairman, lynching is a heinous crime against American concepts and as such alone should it be treated. The gentleman from North Carolina wishes to know whether I represent a Negro district. I represent a number of Negroes, and I am grateful for the suffrage of those who voted to send me here, and I intend to represent them as vigorously as I would any other person in the district. I made such a statement during my campaign, not to an audience of Negroes but to an audience of whites. For years in New Jersey the Negro has been told that to send a Democrat to Congress would be to prevent the enactment of antilynching legislation. Today will give the lie to that. It is gratifying to perceive that the bill will pass and, I hope, with a fitting display of proper American tolerance. I am happy to be here to cast my vote for this measure to guarantee rights conferred by the Constitution. The bill does not attempt to protect anyone who commits a crime. It is designed to insure the proper functioning of the processes of law. [Applause.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, one of the Members a moment ago referred to citizens of our State of Connecticut as in the past selling wooden nutmegs. I take this opportunity to apologize for our ancestors in Connecticut inasmuch as they so imposed upon the ancestors of the gentleman who said people of our State had sold his ancestors wooden nutmegs instead of the genuine article.

I am not empowered to speak for the State of Connecticut, but only for a small section of it, the section right near the New York line, next to my friend's on the Republican side, Mr. MILLARD. We know the problems of New York, and we have respect in Connecticut for the way New York meets its problem, and equally we have respect and sympathy for our friends meeting their problems in the South. As far as I am concerned in this House at this time or any other, I care not where the chips may fall as regards how I vote, as long as I vote as I think is right, and, Mr. Chairman, you and I, all of us, vote according to the dictates of our conscience as we have been brought up to see the right from our mother's knee, and how else can we vote. I have never seen any bill in this House since I have been here that I have hated to vote for more than I have for this bill, because of the bitter passions it has aroused, and yet I vote for it, and am in favor of the bill, representing in my humble way the small section whence I come.

From the time that we in our section have been brought up from our mother's knee, just as you people everywhere else have been brought up to believe, I believe that there is a higher law than the law of the United States, that there is a higher constitution than the Constitution of the United States and that is the law under God Almighty Himself who judges us all. So we have to follow the consciences we have under that supreme judgment. We in our part of Connecticut do not criticize anyone, we indict no one. To the best of our humble ability we follow our consciences, and for this reason I favor this bill. Some of us believe this is the higher law, this is the unforgivable sin, namely, that any man who given the opportunity does not help this suffering human being or help any living thing, who withholds his help from any living thing or human being in suffering has committed, according to our consciences, the unforgivable sin. So I am voting for this bill and I hope there will be no more sectional talk or recrimination. I am voting for the bill according to the dictates of my conscience, conscious of this higher law, this supreme judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I regret the sectional difficulties we have heard discussed here today. But evidently this is not a sectional question, for I have not heard anything about my section brought into the debate. We have in Arizona a considerable colored population, and as a school man, a college man, I have had many of these young people in my classes and they were of high quality. I have always treated colored students fairly, which they appreciate. I believe I can say with the same authority as my friend from that city of splendid record that there has not been a lynching of a colored person within the entire history of Arizona and I am proud of that fact.

I have risen at this moment to say one thing which is on my mind. The other day I voted not to consider the Mitchell bill, not because I was opposed to the subject matter of that bill, but because I was told the Gavagan bill was superior to it. A hasty consultation with office files revealed that I had received communications from an organization representing the colored people asking my support of the Gavagan bill. Now I find myself in this dilemma. After more considerate thought, I question the constitutionality of this Gavagan bill, should it become a law.

I know there are some who say if there is any doubt about the constitutionality of a bill it is the business of the lawmaker to go ahead and enact the law, if he thinks it necessary or desirable, and let the courts handle the question of constitutionality. I cannot agree with that attitude. I am perhaps presumptuous in this, being a layman, but I am one who has lately criticized the Supreme Court of the United States for declaring unconstitutional so many of the recent acts of needed legislation of this body. However, even so, I have never brought myself to believe that we ought to take away from that high tribunal the power of judicial review. Feeling that way, I believe we ought to be more conscientious about what kind of statutes we enact.

If this law is unconstitutional, and I am beginning to think it would be so held by the Court, it is certainly not my duty to enact it, and throw it into their laps for decision. It is because of that belief, and in spite of the fact that I should like to have some sort of legislation of this kind enacted to protect all classes of people, particularly the colored people, that I feel constrained to vote against this measure, because I seriously doubt its constitutionality.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask some of the lawyers on the committee a question or two about this section.

In line 1, on page 4, it reads, "the Federal court can punish, in accordance with the laws of the State", and so forth. Do you mean in accordance with the State procedure, or does the Federal judge get the last speech like he does with us? What is meant by that?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Does the gentleman want to ask me a question?

Mr. DISNEY. Yes. I am asking you a question.

Mr. GAVAGAN. That refers to procedure.

Mr. DISNEY. Then you have Federal procedure, trying people for murder in the Federal court; is that it?

Mr. GAVAGAN. No. You would have State procedure and rules of evidence.

Mr. DISNEY. Well, which does the gentleman mean then?

Mr. GAVAGAN. It means procedure existing in the locality.

Mr. DISNEY. Then we would have State procedure in a Federal court trying people for murder?

Now, under section 1 of the proviso, who is going to determine whether or not that section of the State has become outlaw? Is the Federal judge going to determine that?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Of course he determines if a basis exists for the operation of the statute.

Mr. DISNEY. Who is going to decide that the jurors are so prejudiced that they cannot return a fair verdict?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Provided a change of venue was sought upon that ground, the Federal judge would decide it on the evidence.

Mr. DISNEY. But you will have State procedure in the Federal court?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes. That is existing law in the Federal courts today. The Court follows State law and procedure excepting those cases where the Federal courts adopt a different rule.

Mr. DISNEY. Now, in the last sentence of that section you say, "a failure for more than 30 days after the commission of such an offense to apprehend or to indict the persons guilty thereof, or a failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall be sufficient to constitute prima facie evidence of the failure, neglect, or refusal described in the above proviso."

Mr. GAVAGAN. Presumption of evidence; yes.

Mr. DISNEY. Then you are going to make that a felony for their failure to do that; is that correct?

Mr. GAVAGAN. No, no. You raise a presumption. I think I can clear the gentleman's mind. The last paragraph refers to the presumption of evidence; not the burden of proof, but the burden of going forward with the evidence. This presumption will aid in going forward with the evidence.

Mr. DISNEY. What are you going to do about your Federal people unless they catch him within 30 days and indict him? Suppose the State does not do it for 30 days and the Federal Government does not do it? Then where do you go from there?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Oh, if you are going to presume they will not enforce this act——

Mr. DISNEY. Let me refer to section 3. You say:

Any officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision thereof who is charged with the duty or who possesses the power or authority as such officer or employee to protect the life or person of any individual—

And so forth. In your State and in my State the Governor is charged with that duty, and you make him guilty of a felony under section 3.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I am glad the gentleman brought that up, because that has been misstated.

Mr. DISNEY. That is not a misstatement. In our State he is charged with that duty.

Mr. GAVAGAN. He is charged with that duty, I assume, in every State, but the prisoner must be in the custody of an officer before the officer can be liable under this bill. That is my interpretation of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Any county in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage shall be liable to the injured person or the legal representatives of such person for a sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 as liquidated damages, which sum may be recovered in a civil action against such county in the United States district court of the judicial district wherein such person is put to the injury or death. Such action shall be brought and prosecuted by the United States district attorney of the district in the United States district court for such district. If such amount awarded be not paid upon recovery of a judgment therefor, such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof by levy of execution upon any property of the county, or may otherwise compel payment thereof by mandamus or other appropriate process; and any officer of such county or other person who disobeys or fails to comply with any lawful order of the court in the premises shall be liable to punishment as for contempt and to any other penalty provided by law therefor. The amount recovered shall be exempt from all claims by creditors of the deceased. The amount recovered upon such judgment shall be paid to the injured person, or where death resulted, distributed in accordance with the laws governing the distribution of an intestate decedent's assets than in effect in the State wherein such death occurred.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: On page 4, beginning in line 18, strike out all of section 5.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the hour is getting late. I further realize, after listening to the debate today, that it is utterly futile to discuss the merits, if any, of this piece of nonsensical legislation.

My amendment strikes out the entire section which undertakes to impose a fine upon subdivisions of sovereign States in this Union.

I do not care to discuss it other than to explain that that is what it does, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GAVAGAN) there were ayes 102 and noes 93.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SMITH of Virginia and Mr. GAVAGAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 128 and noes 118.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. In the event that any person so put to death shall have been transported by such mob or riotous assemblage from one county to another county during the time intervening between his seizure and putting to death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the forfeiture herein provided. Any district judge of the United States District Court of the judicial district wherein any suit or prosecution is instituted under the provisions of this act, may by order direct that such suit or prosecution be tried in any place in such district as he may designate in such order.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Strike out all of section 6.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, again I will consume only 1 minute of the time of the House in explaining this amendment.

The purpose of this amendment is to strike out section 6 and merely complete the purpose of the amendment which struck out section 5.

I do not want to consume the time of the House, but I do want the amendment understood. It merely carries out the purpose of the amendment which struck out section 5.

Section 6 is that section which divides responsibility for the fine or penalty between the county in which the taking from the officer occurs and the county in which the lynching occurs.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Is it not true that if this section stays in the bill that a man might be taken away from an officer in one county or one State and carried over into another, there be put to death, and that the people of that county, knowing nothing about it and being innocent, yet would suffer the penalty under this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; but with section 5 stricken out I think this section would be inoperative.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this section and the previous section that was stricken by the teller vote constitute the heart of this bill. Do not fool yourselves about that. This bill will not be worth the paper it is written on if these amendments are adopted.

Now, I do not want to detain the House, but I serve notice right here and now that I am going to demand a separate roll-call vote on every one of these amendments. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. If any provision, sentence, or clause of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this act, and the application of such provision to other person or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the action which was taken by the committee in eliminating sections 5 and 6, as the gentleman from New York has said, actually destroys the act entirely. I think the committee was very unwise in adopting the two amendments which have just been adopted.

For my part, I represent a district in the western part of Pennsylvania, the city of Pittsburgh, which is known as the workshop of the world. In that particular district there is a large percentage of colored population. I know that the intelligent and the God-fearing and law-abiding colored population of my district want this bill enacted into law. I know that the intelligent and the God-fearing and the law-abiding white people of my district want this bill enacted into law. I say that if these people want it enacted into law for that reason, I should vote for the bill, and I will vote for the bill. I think it is a good bill. It should be passed as drawn without these amendments. I hope that when the matter comes to a record vote that these amendments will be reinserted and that the bill will be passed by the House as drawn.

The bill will take away from the good people of this district in which I live the fear which the colored people have always had. It will make for more harmony and more peace; and I say that this House should go on record by passing the bill and reasserting its faith in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last section.

I apologize for imposing upon the patience of the House at this late hour of the evening. I feel certain that most of my colleagues have already made up their minds upon the bill now under consideration, and I have no idea that anything that I might say will alter the course of any one of you. However, I would not be true to my own feelings if I did not at this time state that I am unalterably opposed to this legislation. I am particularly opposed to certain sections of the bill which I consider not only unconstitutional but vicious and un-American. I have reference to those sections which have just been voted out under the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. These two sections, nos. 5 and 6, seek to penalize innocent subdivisions of sovereign States and to make inaction on the part of law-abiding, God-fearing people a crime and to provide for the imposition of heavy penalties upon innocent counties and communities in which a person is seriously injured or put to death by a lawless mob or riotous assemblage which may have invaded their county, perhaps, in the dead hours of the night, while the citizens of that county, including the officers of the law, were sleeping in peace with God and their fellow men and wholly ignorant and innocent of the perpetration of any offense against the law. What could be more ridiculous, more unconstitutional, or more un-American than a law subjecting an innocent people to the pains and penalties of a criminal statute and to a judgment for liquidated damages in the amount of $10,000 for the commission of an offense of which they were wholly innocent and which might have been committed even while they were sleeping in the comfort and quietude of a law-abiding community? That is one provision of this iniquitous measure.

Section 5 further provides that in the event the amount awarded as liquidated damages is not paid upon recovery of a judgment, thereafter such court, meaning the United States district court, shall have jurisdiction to enforce payment thereof by levy of execution upon any property of the county, or may otherwise compel payment thereof by mandamus or "other appropriate process." What is meant by "appropriate process"? It means, of course, the use of the full force of the law enforcement agencies of the Federal Government, which includes the use of soldiers if the situation necessitates the use of them. What a drastic and unusual use of Federal power. Imagine the Federal Government using its law enforcement agencies and its soldiers in enforcing the collection of a penalty imposed upon a subdivision of a sovereign State.

When the suggestion was made on the floor of the House yesterday that this section provided for the imposition of a penalty upon an "innocent county" the gentleman from New York, the author of this vicious and iniquitous measure, took the position that in the event injury or death was inflicted upon the body of any person taken from the custody of officers of the law in a particular county, regardless of the circumstances in connection with the commission of the offense, the county in which the crime was consummated was not an innocent county and should, therefore, be subjected to the penalty provided. People do not commit crimes while they are asleep. One must be conscious of guilt before he is guilty in law or must demonstrate a reckless disregard of the rights and privileges of others and be guilty of culpable negligence before he can be subjected to the penalties of a criminal statute.

If an atrocious crime is committed in the bosom of one community and the malefactor is apprehended by the sheriff, who does his very best to protect his prisoner, even to the extent of jeopardizing his own life, and a mob of enraged citizens place violent hands upon the prisoner, take him from the sheriff, and carry him even hundreds of miles to a remote community and there injure or put him to death without the knowledge of the citizens of that community, and the law-enforcement agencies who are charged with the duty of protecting the citizens of that community, the county, however innocent it may be, will be subjected to the heavy penalty provided in this section. Such an absurdity has never been written into the law of any civilized state or nation, and yet we are asked to vote for this measure. I will welcome a roll-call vote, and I will welcome an opportunity to vote against this shocking and un-American measure and every word and every syllable of it. [Applause.]

Can it be possible that an intelligent Congress will be foolish enough to vote for such a measure?

Great crimes are often committed under the dark shadows of night and while law-abiding citizens are resting in the quietude of their homes. Imagine the people of a law-abiding community awaking in the morning to find that a lawless mob from some distant county or State has abused or lynched some brute in the form of a man in their county in the dead hours of the night and perhaps left his body hanging from a limb of a tree; no matter how enraged they may be over such a display of violence and no matter how innocent they may be, yet they will be subject to the penalties of this statute which we are asked by our votes to visit upon them. This is such an outrage upon our American sense of justice that it will never be tolerated or enforced in any self-respecting Commonwealth of this Union.

This bill should be called a bill to encourage lynching. If we pass this measure, in my opinion, lynching will increase rather than decrease. If the officers of the law fail to take the accused person into custody after diligent efforts to do so and the person is seized by a mob and lynched there is no liability upon the officers or the county. If the officer actually takes the person into custody and he is by force and violence taken from him and injured or put to death then the officer may be tried, convicted, and subjected to fine and imprisonment and condemned to wear the stripes of a felon and a fine imposed upon his county. Will this provision encourage diligent or dilatory tactics on the part of the officers of the law?

This bill includes not only sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, jailers, and constables, but also prosecuting officers, trial judges, and even the Governors of our 48 States. If any of them are accused of failing, neglecting or refusing "to make all diligent efforts" to protect such individual from being injured or put to death then they may be haled before the Federal court and placed on trial and upon conviction subjected to the penalties of the law.

I am unwilling to insult the integrity and the patriotism of the law-enforcement officers of my district, my State, and the Nation by voting for a measure which is predicated upon the idea that they might become particeps criminis in mob violence and lawlessness and murder.

I know from experience that the law-enforcement officers of my State, from the Governor down to and including every township constable, abhor lynching and make diligent efforts to protect all persons accused of crime. In many instances our officers jeopardize life and limb and property in protecting their prisoners. When a person is lynched we hear a lot about it. When officers of the law protect their prisoners even at the risk of their own lives they are too seldom commended for it.

Intelligent people know that we cannot by the enactment of law control the passions of the human race. Even while our soldiers were fighting, bleeding, and dying on the far-flung battlefields of France, defending the principles upon which this great Nation was founded and making the supreme sacrifice that we might live in a land of law and order, lynchings occurred in different sections of this Republic. Even during the progress of the debate on this measure, mob violence has lifted its head and men have been lynched. Until men learn to control their human instincts, mob violence, murder, and homicide will continue in exact ratio with the rise and fall of the barometer of human passions.

Lynch law was once the lex loci of the frontier, but there is no place for it in an enlightened society in which there exist tribunals for the punishment of those who have violated the law. Yet occsionally a horrible and revolting crime is committed and men rise up and take the law into their own hands. This can neither be justified nor excused, but we are not helping the situation by passing this law, which is nothing more nor less than vicious demagoguery which seeks by "mob violence" to lynch the Constitution and every principle of American justice. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOLEY) there were—ayes 83, noes 133.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the resolution, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1507) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, under the resolution, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on each amendment, or if we may, under the parliamentary procedure, vote on both amendments en bloc, this would be satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on either amendment?

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes; a separate vote is demanded on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York does not demand a separate vote, the amendments will be voted on en bloc.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Then I have no disposition to demand a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided; and there were—ayes 141, noes 163.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the gentleman from Virginia demands tellers.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAVAGAN. I do not believe the gentleman's request has come in time. The Chair had announced the vote.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet before the Chair announced the vote.

Mr. GAVAGAN. The Chair had also announced that the amendments had not been agreed to. Under the rules of the House, I respectfully submit, it is too late now for the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia was on his feet requesting tellers on this vote.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 252, answered "present" 1, not voting 39, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BANKHEAD, and he voted "aye."

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. GRISWOLD, Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri, and Mr. ALLEN of Delaware changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. GREEN changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the gentleman from New York, Mr. FISH, is recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is not recorded.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. FISH. Were he present, he would vote "nay" upon this question. I voted "yea"; but in view of my pair, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can qualify to vote on this roll call or not.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I was at the door, just getting here from a conference, when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify unless he was in the Chamber at the time his name was called.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I cannot say I was inside the Chamber.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] is mistaken when he states he was not in the Hall when his name was called. I happened to be looking at the time because I am in the "M's" also, and I saw the gentleman coming through the door.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from Texas within the portals of the Chamber when his name was called?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may state to the Speaker that I do not know positively whether I was or not. Just as I got inside the doorway my attention was called to the fact that my name had been called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the assurance of the gentleman from Washington, Mr. MAGNUSON, that the gentleman from Texas was present. How does the gentleman from Texas desire to vote?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I vote "yea", Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MCGEHEE——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to announce how his colleague would vote?

Mr. DOXEY. I do not want to violate any of the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I want to announce the fact that he is unavoidably absent from the Chamber.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against any such announcement in view of the ruling of the Speaker on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Under the ruling of the Chair the Chair cannot entertain a statement about how a Member would have voted.

So the amendments were rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ECONOMY, DEFICITS, OR INCREASED TAXES

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the agricultural appropriation bill will be reported to the House Monday, and it is my understanding that the committee will be authorized to call it up during the coming week.

The agricultural appropriation bill is perhaps of more general interest and touches intimately a larger number of districts than most of the supply bills. For that reason numbers of Members usually appear before the committee with requests for increases of current appropriations or funds for the establishment of new activities during the hearings on the bill. This year the requests have exceeded previous years both in number of projects proposed and in the amounts requested. A large part of the membership of the House has been before the committee, and I regret to say it has been necessary for the committee to deny practically all applications in excess of the Budget estimates. Unfortunately some have been disposed to interpret the attitude and action of the committee as personal, and I would like to take advantage of the opportunity to assure all who came before us that every effort was made to comply with the suggestions made by our colleagues, and no request was denied for any reason save lack of funds. As it is, we are submitting the largest total appropriation ever reported to the Congress for the purpose. Had we granted all requests it would have been necessary to sell the site of the Treasury itself to provide the funds to finance the bill.

So, I wish to ask the indulgence of Members toward the members of the committee, and to ask the support of the House in protecting the bill from amendments providing further increases when it comes up on the floor. It is an unpleasant duty to be compelled to deny a colleague an appropriation he considers necessary for his district and if the committees err, as they frequently do, it is always on the side of prodigality rather than parsimony. Various amendments will be offered, many of them of great merit and of wide appeal. Unquestionably the money would be well spent for the purpose proposed but there is a limit to the amount we can allocate to this bill and it is necessary to cut the coat to the cloth. I trust the membership of the House will have this in mind and will be inclined to take into consideration the unusual fiscal situation which confront the country today.

For 7 years the Government has been operating on borrowed money. We are now entering on the eighth year in which the national expenditures have exceeded the national income. Nineteen billion dollars have been added to the national debt and it is still increasing.

As far back as 1933 fiscal reports indicated an approach to a balanced Budget and we were told that if a way could be found to add $120,000,000 to $135,000,000 to the revenues, the Budget would be balanced in 1934. At the opening of the present session of Congress we were cheered by the announcement that a balanced Budget was already in sight and that a balance would be reached in 1939. When the recent December loan was floated we were assured that it was the last of the "new money" loans and that future borrowing would be limited to short-term bills as required by current balances, but newspapers this afternoon carry the statement that these weekly bills must be continued and another loan is scheduled for September.

In the meantime we have been setting an all-time record for peacetime spending. Observers estimate that for 9 months the Government disbursed approximately five and a half billions, as compared with five billion for the same period last year, and that for the current fiscal year expenditures will exceed those of last year. During the month of January disbursements reported by the Secretary of the Treasury approximated $635,000,000 as contrasted with about $372,500,000 the preceding January.

At the same time expected revenues have failed to materialize. Notwithstanding increases in revenue at the rate of nearly $56,000,000 for the month of January the deficit exceeds that of the previous January by something like $120,000,000.

Early in the year tax receipts were reported to be $150,000,000 under the published estimates. A little later they were said to be falling short by about $300,000,000. In March they were falling $400,000,000 below. And now we are told they are close to $600,000,000 short of the amounts promised by Treasury experts, with every prospect of increasing discrepancies. The enactment of legislation now pending in the House and its committees could easily precipitate a total deficit approximating $3,000,000,000.

Of course, there is the other side. Much of the current expenditures is in the nature of advances which will eventually return to the Treasury. Vast sums are in fact investments in public works and improvements which add to the national wealth and prosperity. Reduced receipts from income taxes are due to delayed partial payments which will be realized before the end of the year. Large sums are accounted for by charges incident to the Social Security Act. The stabilization fund is in effect an offset amounting to $2,000,000,000. Business is recovering rapidly, and the national income is mounting, and with it the Government income is increasing and has already reached the highest figures since 1929.

But the deficit grows. Inflation is advancing. Government bonds are depreciating and rates of interest are rising. Prices on Government purchases are increasing. The rising cost of living is stimulating labor agitation.

The Budget must be balanced. We can take our choice—larger deficits with increased taxes or economy. There is no alternative.

There is probably not a Member in the House who does not endorse economy in these supply bills and who does not believe that a balanced Budget is imperative. And yet the calendars of the House are crowded with bills authorizing new expenditures, and the committees of the House are importuned in season and out of season to increase appropriations and extend the activities of the Government into new and costly fields. Mr. Speaker, one of the most prescient passages in all the pages of Holy Writ is the record of one who said, "Behold I go"—and went not. When this Congress is judged it will be judged not by the lip service we give economy, not by the protestations of thrift and retrenchment reported in the RECORD, but by the roll calls on propositions to spend money that is not in the Treasury, and which never will be in the Treasury, unless it is borrowed at a cost so serious as to appall those who look into the future less than a generation away. [Applause.] I trust that during the remainder of the session we may have your cooperation in holding the supply bills within the bounds reported by the committee.
